Bramlage Coliseum may need revision; bids exceed budget

By LEANNE STOWE
Staff Writer

University officials are scheduled to meet today with representatives of the architecture firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum. Base construction bids for the project were more than $3 million over budget.

Bill Livingston, a partner in the Wichita architecture firm of Gossen Livingston Associates, must meet with University officials since bids for the 16,000-seat multi-purpose coliseum ranged from $3.4 million to $8.2 million above the projected cost.

The facility's projected base construction cost — which does not include such items as office furnishings and landscaping — is $14.5 million, but the lowest bid was nearly $18 million. The coliseum is to be built south of the KSU Stadium at an estimated total cost of $16.1 million.

Livingston said he was surprised the bids opened Tuesday were high. The lowest bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin E. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita.

This bid is more than $3.4 million over the estimate made by the Program Committee for the Coliseum in a revised budget published in May 1983. University President Duane Acker said Tuesday he was also surprised by the bids.

"We are surprised and disappointed that the low bid on the coliseum project significantly exceeded funds available and the architect's construction estimate," Acker said.

University architect Jim Shepard said he was on the program committee and inspected several multi-purpose arenas in the United States.

He then put together an estimate of what he thought the project would cost. His early 1983 estimate of $18,138,990 for 15,000 seats, which was the number of seats still under consideration in early 1983, was less than $200,000 off the bid turned in by Eby Construction.

"I'm a little conservative. I wasn't really excited about my estimate," Shepard said. "I thought it might be a little bit low. Well, it proved out — it might have been an accident — but, it proved out that my estimate was pretty much on the money."

Livingston said an estimate just $200,000 off of a project this size is a "very good estimate."

Shepard said the committee believed Livingston's firm was on the money with their estimate.

Kickoff '85 welcomes students to University

By BECKY WILEY

The posters said it was the party of a lifetime.

Volunteers wearing buttons advertising the event repeated what a good time was to be had.

And if the number of people talking, laughing and dancing was any indication, those promises were somewhere close to the truth.

This welcome back party included music by the KSU marching band as students entered the stadium, members of the football team attempting to create excitement about the K-State football season, dubbed "The Main Event," Playfair — activities which motivate strangers to become friends — and a dance with music provided by radio station KMKF.

The skydivers didn't jump as planned — it was too windy — but Kickoff '85 was an absolute success, said Rosanne Proite, assistant director of housing and co-coordinator of the event.

Proite said an estimated 3,000 students attended the party Saturday night under the lights at KSU Stadium.

"I'd like to thank all the students who allowed themselves to be silly and playful without the use of unnatural substances," Proite said.

Kickoff '85 was the combination of Athletic Director Larry Travis' idea to coordinate a welcome activity for the students and Proite's plans to bring back Playfair, a series of activities dudring which large group of people mingled on the Derby Courts last fall.

"A number of different groups wanted to get into the act," Proite said, "so we decided to open it (Playfair, and consequently, Kickoff '85) to everybody."

Proite described Playfair as activities designed to get people acquainted, to reduce stress and to provide people an opportunity to be silly and playful. For example, the students were asked to get into groups of three and decide if they wanted to be called a hamburger, cheeseburger or soybean burger. They then had to do certain activites when called by that name.

Colin Hickey, junior in political science, noticed there were some shy members of the group who chose to be bystanders rather than participants, but most everyone got involved.

"It (Playfair) was great. Every part of campus — different lifestyles — was in the same group all having fun together," Hickey said.

In addition to a welcome activity, Proite said Kickoff '85 provided freshmen an opportunity to socialize, because probably 90 percent of the incoming freshmen are unable to legally consume 3.2 percent beer in Aggieville.

Fire destroys 2 South African schools

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Arsonists torched two schools on Sunday, and in Cape Town five blacks killed a gasoline-bomber, police said.

Overall, however, South Africa was reported quieter after a two-day police roundup of 27 leading supporters of the nation's main anti-apartheid group.

Oscar Mpetha, an ailing, 75-year-old leader of that group, the United Democratic Front, began serving a five-year jail term Sunday on an earlier terrorism conviction after Justice Minister Kobie Coetsee refused to waive his sentence.

In neighboring South-West Africa, commonly known as Namibia, police arrested 52 people at a meeting which marked the 19th anniversary of a guerrilla war for independence from South Africa, according to police in the territorial capital, Windhoek.

South Africa administered the former German terrority under a League of Nations mandate after World War I, but has refused to surrender its mandate and place South-West Africa under the United Nations trusteeship system.

Police said the schools burned Sunday were in Middelburg, a coal-mining center 56 miles east of Johannesburg, and Umlazi, a black township outside the Natal province port of Durban.

In Cape Town's Khayelitsha township, five blacks pursued and killed a fellow black who hurled a fire bomb into a home Saturday, police said. Five men were arrested, police said in a statement.

Scattered unrest was reported Sunday from four other centers, compared with more than a dozen hit by rioting Saturday.

The Prisons Department in Pretoria confirmed meanwhile that Mpetha, one of three co-patrons of the multiracial United Democratic Front, "entered a prison" Sunday.

Mpetha was sentenced with 17 young blacks in 1981 for inciting riots at a Cape Town squatter settlement, Crossroads, in which two white men were killed.

The Appeal Court last month rejected Mpetha's appeal and Coetsee said Sunday he would not waive it on grounds of compassion.

He said Mpetha's crime was grave and that Mpetha also had been "involved" in stirring up black unrest during the past year.

More than 600 blacks have been killed, many by police and many by fellow blacks, in a year of rioting over the government's system of apartheid, or legal racial segregation, by which 5 million whites control 24 million blacks.

The South African Press Association said Mpetha was in Cape Town's Pollsmoor prison.

Nelson Mandela, president of the outlawed African National Congress guerrilla organization, is at Pollsmoor serving a life term imposed in 1964 for plotting sabotage.

The Front plans a illegal mass march on Pollsmoor Wednesday to demand Mandela's release.

City rezones land for development of MCC

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

The property rezoning battle for the development of Manhattan Christian College reached a finale at the Aug. 21 meeting of the Manhattan City Commission.

On a 4-1 vote, the commission rezoned a tract of land — between Laramie Street and Anderson Avenue, along the east side of 16th Street — from Multiple-Family Residential and University Overlay to a Mixed-Use Planned Unit Development allowing residential and commercial construction.

The rezoning, requested by MCC and Empire Development of Denver, will allow construction of a 17,000-square-foot Student Service Center. Current plans call for a food-service center, a minimum of 1,000 square feet of office space and a maximum of six retail stores on the project's ground level.

The second level will contain 24 apartments for MCC students, with 12 single and 12 two-bedroom apartments.

The initial request came when Floyd Sack, owner of Empire, suggested the college sell him the land for $680,000 to help alleviate MCC's financial difficulties. MCC officials said the sale was necessary if the college was to remain in Manhattan.

The commission rejected the first reading of the rezoning ordinance and sent it back to the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board for reconsideration. Following a tie vote by the planning board, the proposal was returned to the commission without a recommendation.

Those objecting to construction of a Student Service Center cited concerns with the size of the commercial floor space, traffic congestion on surrounding streets, nonconformity with the neighborhood's land-use plan and the extension of commercial activity west of the 14th Street Aggieville District boundary.

To reach a compromise with the commission, Sack said an initial list of 35 possible businesses was reduced to 11. Another change was from an initial plan of three separate buildings reduced to one larger building.

During deliberations, Commissioner Dave Fiser, who cast the single dissenting vote, said he wanted to "take a look at this based on the facts...and not on emotions."

Fiser said the proposal only addressed one of the original concerns, with the plan still in violation of the land-use plan. Fiser added he still had concerns about the size of the commercial development.

"My vote will be cast based on the best facts and best judgments," Fiser said.

Commissioner Rick Mann said the project is "probably the most emotionally charged and most misunderstood" issue he has confronted during his two years on the commission. After citing the land-use plan violation as a concern, he added there was no clear answer or conclusion, but "it has to be done...Manhattan Christian College cannot survive without this."

In continuing statements, Mayor Suzanne Lindamood, who supported the project from its inception, said exceptions had been made to the land-use plan in the past, and city aid to educational facilities went back to the days of Bluemont College, which later became K-State.

With the late arrival of Commissioner Gene Klingler, a tie could have resulted in a defeat of the rezoning. However, Commissioner Nancy Denning's statement of support, given despite continuing concerns about the traffic and project size, brought a round of applause from the audience.

Before final approval, City Attorney Bill Frost told commissioners that due to the non-recommendation of the planning board, the commission would have to specify the reasons for approving the rezoning.

Frost said the rezoning, to meet both local and state requirements "must not conflict with the land-use plan...and not have a substantially adverse effect on the surrounding neighborhood."

In making the formal motion, Mann said "this is in general conformity with the general land-use plan and does not have a substantial detrimental effect on the neighborhood."

German espionage arrests continue

BONN, West Germany — Federal prosecutors announced Sunday night the arrest of a secretary suspected of being an undercover agent. It was the first arrest in West Germany's burgeoning espionage scandal to touch the executive branch.

The woman, who was not identified, was the fifth government employee sought on spying charges in the past month. A spokesman for the prosecutor's office, Alexander Prachtel, told The Associated Press that she was arrested Saturday night.

Prechtel declined to give details, but Die Welt newspaper and West German television said the secretary worked in the office of the president, Richard von Weizsacker. Television reports said she was not his personal secretary.

Die Welt said authorities grew suspicious of her while checking government employees who came directly to Bonn upon emigrating from Communist East Germany.

The spy scandal began on Aug. 6, when Sonja Lueneburg, a longtime aide to Economics Minister Martin Bangemann, was reported missing.

Fox disputes claim he is too short

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Michael J. Fox, who rocketed to stardom with the summer hit movie "Back to the Future," says he is undaunted at being a half-foot short of leading-man height.

"Instead of thinking, 'Michael J. Fox is too short to play this role,' directors will say, 'We'll have to change this part. It's written too tall for Michael J. Fox'," the 5-foot-4-inch actor jokes.

Fox, who looks younger than his 24 years and plays an ultra-conservative teen-ager on TV's "Family Ties," said he modeled the character after his older brother.

"My brother is the funniest," said Fox, visiting his family in suburban Burnaby. "Now I tend to get into that dry humor a little bit, too. But just when I think I'm on a roll I go home to visit my family, and my brother puts me under the table."

Well-wishers surprise Wallace

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Gov. George Wallace, who turned 66 on Sunday, said he was surprised that 2,000 well-wishers turned out for his first public appearance since returning home after spinal surgery.

"I didn't know so many people would come to see a man who has had too many birthdays," Wallace told the crowd at Garrett Coliseum on Saturday.

NASA halts space shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A spacecraft computer failure scrubbed Sunday's second attempt to launch space shuttle Discovery and NASA decided to let two days pass before trying again.

The delay reduces NASA's opportunities to catch and repair an $85 million satellite that is drifting lifelessly in a low orbit.

NASA previously wanted to begin the satellite delivery and repair mission today. But Sieck and the Johnson Space Center's Arnold Aldrich said the extra day is needed to inspect ducts between low and high pressure pumps on the shuttle's three main engines to ensure that the plumbing has not been deformed in on-again, off-again cooling and warming.

"Each time the duct is filled with cryogenic fluid it gets very cold," said Aldrich. He said any deformation in the plumbing could restrict the flow between the pumps and "the engines could go into a shutdown."

It was only the second time in the shuttle program that launches were scrubbed back to back.

Peak named after photographer

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — Mount Ansel Adams was officially dedicated in honor of the late photographer whose work captured the splendor of the park for more than 50 years.

The 11,900-foot peak was named after Adams in April, the first anniversary of his death, but did not officially become Mount Ansel Adams until the dedication on Saturday by Interior Secretary Donald Hodel.

Hodel, who rappelled down cliffs and climbed rocks at the park during the day, paid homage to the national parks, saying that Americans should "take pride in these resources and protect them as individuals."

Kansas woman dies in auto crash

ALVA, Okla. — A Hardtner, Kan., woman was killed Sunday when her car went out of control on a Woods County road near Alva.

The Oklahoma Highway Patrol said the body of Gloria Schofield Holloway, 41, was found about 40 feet from where her car crashed off the side of the road.

The accident occurred about 1 a.m. Troopers said the woman was apparently thrown from the car, which rolled over her.

Kidnappers elude KBI, may have left Kansas

By The Associated Press

RUSSELL — Three people who abducted a state trooper, tied up three members of a rural central Kansas family and stole their car Saturday may have switched vehicles and fled the area, authorities said Sunday.

"I think there's a better than even chance that they are gone from the area," said Highway Patrol Capt. Melvin Wedermyer. "I wouldn't be surprised if they switched vehicles. This region is kind of remote, and there are a lot of places to hide a vehicle, if you want to."

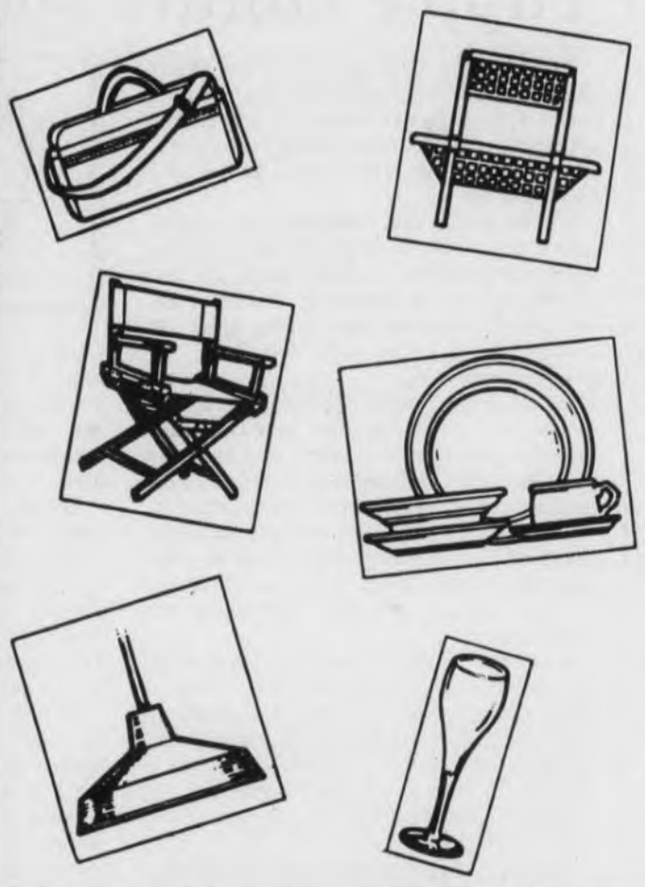
Agents from the Kansas Bureau Investigation hoped to discover clues to the heavily armed suspects' identities by searching a motor home which the kidnappers left at a rural Wilson farmhouse, Wedermyer said.

Patrol Sgt. Daniel Gifford, 37, was kidnapped about 2:40 p.m. Saturday after stopping the motor home along Interstate 70, about five miles east of Russell, to inform the occupants that baggage atop the vehicle was loose.

As Gifford spoke to the woman driver, a man holding a semiautomatic rifle appeared from behind the motor home and ordered him into the vehicle, authorities said.

The kidnappers bound Gifford with his handcuffs, took his .357-caliber service revolver and drove east on I-70. They then exited and drove on back roads before pulling into a farmhouse about 10 miles southwest of Wilson, an Ellsworth County community about 20 miles east of Russell.

Ira Mog, 82, his wife Amanda, 75, and their son Robert, 46, were tied up in their house along with the trooper and the phone line was cut. The suspects concealed the motor home in a shed and stole the couple's blue 1982 Ford Fairmont.



The suspects also stole two rifles from Ira Mog, authorities said. Robert Mog eventually freed himself and the others about 3:30 p.m. and rode a motorcyle to a neighbor's home to alert authorities.

Reader input welcomed

Each semester, after settling into class and work schedules, many students tune into campus affairs and — if we are fortunate — strike up an exchange of opinion in the Kansas State Collegian.

The Collegian is the official campus newspaper. Therefore, the paper has a responsiblity to the campus community to present news objectively and accurately and provide a forum so that students, faculty, University employees and others have an opportunity to express themselves.

Letters to the editor and guest columns are welcomed. Letters and columns may be submitted to the editorial page editor from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday in Kedzie 116.

Letters must be typed and may not exceed 300 words. Columns should be no longer than four typewritten pages. All material submitted to the Collegian must contain the author's name, classification, major and telephone number. Faculty and staff members must give their title and department. Guest columnists must make arrangements with the editorial page editor to have a photograph taken.

If more than one author's name appears on a letter to the editor only the first name listed will be used, but a notation indicating the number of co-authors will be included.

The Collegian reserves the right to edit and reject all material published in the newspaper for style and spatial considerations.

Editorials in this space will be written by the editor, editorial page editor or by a member of the editorial board. The board is composed of Collegian staff members. Editorials for the board are written by individual board members and represent the majority opinion. Editorials may not represent the views of all board members or other members of the staff.

Policy allows apartheid

Legislation imposing economic sanctions on South Africa — banning certain high-tech exports and prohibiting the sale of South African gold coins — has passed through the U.S. House of Representatives and will be up for final approval when the Senate reconvenes in September.

President Reagan is determined to veto any bill limiting U.S. investment in South Africa on the grounds that it would harm blacks and unfairly penalize the white minority government he believes is making progress in ending its policy of racial segregation.

Since 1948, apartheid has been the government's official policy of "separate but equal development." It involves legislation controlling places of residence, schools and recreational facilities. Non-whites are denied voting rights.

In the past month, South African President Botha declared a "state of emergency" to crack down on blacks protesting the system. Sixteen people were killed during the first week, and security forces arrested more than 1,000 others.

Botha speaks of reforming apartheid rather than ending it. He refuses to grant a private meeting with Bishop Desmond Tutu, Nobel Peace Prize winner, and has paid little attention to pleas from other black leaders.

Upon his return from South Africa, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority, encouraged Americans to buy Kruggerands and invest in businesses in that country. Falwell's bad advice was accompanied by the "Christian" remark that Tutu is a "phony." In light of Falwell's remarks on the needs and desires of black South Africans, it is not difficult to determine who is and is not a "phony."

American businessmen and investors in South Africa say they are against the policy of racial segregation, but continue to pay for its maintenance. Once again a decision has to be made. The choice is big money and big business or human rights.

Apartheid foe Winnie Mandela said U.S. and British interests in South Africa "far outweigh their so-called abhorrence of apartheid," and according to the state-run radio, the Pretoria government "has no more dependable ally" than Reagan.

Because the United States is South Africa's third leading trade partner, the Senate's and Reagan's vote will greatly influence the governmental policies of that country. "Gentle persuasion" is not working, and the situation is becoming desperate as time passes and U.S. dollars pile up.

Yuppie culture spawns 'designer children'

JIM SCHMIDT
Copy Editor

When I began first grade 18 years ago, I timidly got on the school bus for the four-mile ride to Potwin Grade School. At first scared of teachers and new classmates, I soon learned that first grade was not half as bad as I had expected.

In the years that followed, my public school experience, though difficult at times, imparted phonetics, cut-and-paste art and crystals grown in fishbowls. Written rules controlled classroom and recess alike but allowed imagination and creativity the freedom to develop.

My classmates and I basked in the opportunites our childhood had to offer. June brought little league baseball and camping trips, but as the summers sweltered on I soon realized school was a place to be anticipated.

Similarly, as public schools in Manhattan reopened this morning, most children were probably ready to get back to school activities, though probably dreading the classwork.

In the past, long but busy days spent in the elementary-school classroom have been a time of innocence for school-age children. Playground time, though often fraught with competitiveness and personal jabs, was a time of discovery, childish hope and imagination, and most of all, rejection of the world of adults.

Though a large measure of the attitudes and activities defining childhood remain, today's child is increasingly encroached upon by the pressures of the adult world. Childhood is definitely on the decline, the time of innocence growing shorter and less meaningful.

Like everything else in the life of young urban professionals and their offspring, today's children must meet specifications of the developing culture of the yuppie. We in America are witnessing the birth and rearing of designer children.

Foremost on the list of worries for children is fashion. No longer is vanity of the closet reserved for older siblings who have progressed to the more complicated worlds of high school and college. Beyond spelling, cursive writing and mulitipication tables, elementary-school pupils now must contend with parachute pants, riveted sweatshirts and Ralph Lauren. Levis, plaid shirts and tennis shoes just don't pass for today's style-conscious child.

Fostering, or allowing, such grown-up attitudes in children places undo strain on a time of life intended to be occupied with mastering the intricacies of baseball rules, learning the art of bike riding or flute playing, or comprehending the mysteries of new math.

Another requisite for today's tot is the computer. A television commercial for computers asks what age is early enough to buy the aspiring child his first computer. High school? Elementary school? Pre-school (so they'll get a head start on everyone else)? The closing scene depicts a mother holding an infant up to a video display terminal.

Though home computer sales have leveled recently, parents and school districts have chosen to introduce children to computers at increasingly younger ages. While it is without doubt that familiarity with high technology will be essential to functional survival and social literacy in the years to come, living with a terminal from infancy robs children of something essential. Computer teaching can be a valuable aid, but when it replaces unguided imagination it deprives children of innate creativity and self-discovery.

Toys, cartoons and various other amusements in the mass market and mass media also invade the world of children at a point earlier than in previous years. While playing "Cops and Robbers" or dressing up a Barbie doll have introduced children to adult values for years, contemporary toys make much more explicit the values and expected actions conveyed to their young manipulators.

Any boy without a He-Man action figure (or girl without the the copy, Princess of Power) is surely behind the rest of pre-teen society. For those more interested in mercenaries, GI Joe awaits a small island to invade. Of course, no collection is complete without Castle Grayskull or a GI Joe bridge-layer. As a He-Man series commercial forcefully reminds, "Some guys got it, some guys don't!"

These toys and countless others like them remove creativity and imagination from play. Reinforced by the action shows based on the figures, toys like those in the Castle Grayskull collection or those based on prime time series such as "The A Team" foster violent attitudes in children. Play becomes a mere re-enactment of television episodes, rather than imagination supported by props.

Finally, children are asked, both directly and through marketing, to assume the attitudes of their parents. Big Chew bubble gum, bubble gum shredded and in a tobacco-like pouch, allows children to imitate sports heroes whose bulged cheek is part of their attire.

As I found while working at a cattle feedlot a couple of years ago, some parents and grandparents — at least those of the blue-collar variety — teach habits once considered vice in more open ways. Incredibly, an employee encouraged his 5-year-old grandson to dip snuff and had even purchased a personal can holder for the aspiring rodeo rider.

Childhood, at least in some form, will likely continue. However, the world of grown-ups encroaches more and more on the time a person has before entering the cyncical world of the '80s and beyond.

Perhaps such an early education will prevent disillusionment as today's children mature. More likely, it will only serve to deepen the lack of hope seemingly prevalent in America.

When thinking back on my own childhood and on what an ideal childhood might be, I am reminded of lyrics penned by John Denver. "Growing up a Kansas farmboy, life was mostly having fun..." Denver wrote, "Gold was just a windy Kansas wheatfield; blue was just a Kansas summer sky."

Perhaps that kind of innocence is gone forever. However, today's adults at least owe today's children the chance to recreate it.

Only reality can make dreams come true

RICH HARRIS
Collegian Columnist

We all have dreams, don't we? We all want something that we'll probably never get. Personally, I want a Lotus Turbo Esprit, an exotic British sports car. I have pictures of "my" Lotus all over my room, and I enter Newsweek contests over and over again because they offer a Lotus as grand prize.

Since the Lotus costs more than $50,000, winning one may be the only way I'll ever get one. But the point is, that's my dream, my hopeless fantasy. Other people have different dreams — as many dreams as there are people.

I learned something this summer from an unexpected source. I wanted to spend my summer in a coat and tie, in an air-conditioned office working as a copywriter for an advertising agency. I wound up, like all the summers before, sweating it out in a kitchen, working 10 hours a day as a cook.

But I really don't count the summer as a write-off, because if I had been in that agency, I might never have met Jane. Jane (not her real name) taught me a lesson I'll never forget.

The human animal operates from multiple levels of motivation — animal needs, social needs, intellectual needs and so on. Each of us works out rationalizations in our own minds, but the drives are similar in their ends. And we all have different levels of success, depending on how we approach our goals. What we want, we don't always get. Indeed, what we want in the worst possible way is often way beyond our grasp. As a consequence, we are unhappy, and sometimes we slip into depression and the "sour grapes" syndrome.

Well, here's a bolt of lightning for you: Forget about what you want, forget about what you think you need or must have to be a success. You'll never get it that way.

The Rule: Give up the desire, and give up the fear. These are the two greatest stumbling blocks going. The fear is obviously a problem. If you want something, but are too afraid to go after it clearly you'll never get it. But desire? If you give up desire then what is there?

What you want and what you'll get are seldom the same. We operate from desire so often that we forget that reality is there. And, friends and neighbors, reality is the big one. It's the one we wind up nose-to-nose with every time. Reality doesn't go away. What we need to do is operate from reality and stop operating from desire. Give up the fear and the desire, and operate from reality.

By no means does this mean we should never dream. Imagination is our gift. It sets us apart from the lower orders. But dreams that never come true are seldom pleasant. I want a Lotus. The reality is that to get one I must either win one or wait until I become a big wheel in advertising, and can afford one. Ergo, I had better make tracks in the advertising industry and become a yuppie in a big way.

The other thing I want to get across is that so many people are satisfied to live from crisis to crisis, without thought to the effects of their actions on themselves and on others. We blunder through our lives like enraged elephants, paying the piper grudgingly, hoping next time we won't get caught. The reality is that we always get caught.

And we always pay the piper.

A final note of caution. Living and operating in reality means accountability. Count the cost. To get my Lotus I'll have to work long, hard hours and drive myself to succeed in my profession. It may preclude a home life, or it may damage my health. Is a Lotus worth it? I don't know. But I'm operating from reality. And I'm still counting the cost.

Have a terrific semester. Dream, and work. Operating from reality is not a bleak prospect. Indeed, it opens up new alleys to success. Work, and dream. Count the cost, and forget the fear. Go get 'em.

University to stress student retention

By JULIE FINTEL
Collegian Reporter

Not long ago colleges had the luxury of operating in a seller's market — there were more than enough students to fill classrooms.

But in the late 1970s, that began to change.

The baby boomers have grown up, graduated from college and entered the job market, leaving behind a decreasing number in the college-age population. In Kansas, statistics show the number of high school seniors dropped 25 percent in the last 15 years.

To combat declining enrollment at K-State, officials are placing more emphasis on retaining students after enrollment.

Michael Lynch, director of the Academic Assistance Center, Holton Hall, has the job of trying to help students stay at the University.

"No matter what an institution does there will always be attrition," Lynch said. "But if we are going to allow a student to enroll and pay tuition, we assume an obligation to enable the student to do as well as possible."

Lynch said the University's attrition rate, the rate at which students leave school, is about the same as other U.S. schools of similar size and composition. He said between 40 and 45 percent — nearly one of two K-State students — will drop out of school within eight semesters.

Most students drop out between the beginning of their freshman year and the beginning of their junior year, Lynch said. About 25 percent of the freshmen class will drop out, but approximately 15 percent will wait until their sophomore year. Only 5 percent will drop out in the junior or senior year, he said.

Lynch said he believes selective schools such as Harvard University and Notre Dame have much lower attrition than schools with an open admission policy. Open admission policy schools must admit all graduates of an accredited high school in that particular state.

"The easiest way to improve retention is to admit only students with ACT (American College Testing Program) scores of 30 or above, but that's neither the intent nor the purpose of K-State," he said.

Although students with low ACT scores drop out at a higher rate, Lynch said the University also loses a substantial number of students with high ACT scores. There are a multitude of reasons why students quit school, he said.

Sometimes students enroll in college and have not taken the proper college preparatory courses needed to succeed in college. The University recommends these students take additional introductory classes at K-State before tackling more advanced courses.

Assistance is available to students lacking basic study skills. A course supplement program coordinated by Judith Bennett, assistant director of the academic assistance center, uses graduate students, upperclassmen or someone from the community to help the students review what they have learned in class. The class content varies according to the needs of the students enrolled each semester.

A learning skills seminar teaches study skills in conjunction with classes required for freshmen. New freshmen must take English composition, either sociology or psychology and a math course. These three courses are treated as a block and the seminar uses this block as a base for teaching study skills.

"We have found that those who participate in the learning skills seminar, when compared with those of similar ability who did not take the course, have a higher grade point average and complete more semester hours. A greater percentage of them will finish college," Lynch said.

Problems adjusting to a university lifestyle is another reason students leave college. Some students have trouble making friends, or fail to integrate into the college environment. Others don't feel as if they are part of the college community, Lynch said.

"We have students in their first semester who are in classes that are larger than their hometowns," he said.

The most common reason given by students dropping out is the lack of money. But Lynch said studies have shown students will only give this reason because it is more socially acceptable than the real reason — such as failing grades.

The most difficult problem for University officials to correct is a lack of motivation. Lynch said the key to saving the student is personal contact.

George Bush to give 70th Landon Lecture

By The Collegian Staff

The 43rd vice president of the United States, George Bush, will deliver the first of the 1985-86 Landon Lectures Monday, Sept. 9 in Ahearn Field House.

A topic won't be announced until several days before the lecture, said Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series.

This will be the second time a current vice president addresses a K-State audience as part of the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues. Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale spoke at the University on July 17, 1979.

Bush has a long record of public service. He was a U.S. representative from Texas to the 90th and 91st Congresses, ambassador to the United Nations, chairman of the Republican National Committee, chief U.S. liaison officer to the People's Republic of China and director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Reagan said the lecture will be in Ahearn instead of McCain Auditorium because of Ahearn's greater seating capacity. A total of approximately 9,200 seats will be available to students, faculty, University employees and Manhattan residents in Ahearn.

There will be general admission seating but Landon Lecture patrons will have reserved seats, Reagan said.

Acker to resign June 1986, hesitant to announce plans

By JERI HEIDRICK
Campus Editor

Nearly a month after announcing his plans to relinquish the top position at K-State, President Duane Acker said he is still leaving his options for the future open.

Charles Hein, director of communications, said Acker will not discuss his future job plans, whether they include an administrative position at another university or teaching.

"President Acker will not visit about his future plans after his term is up at K-State," Hein said. "He told the Board of Regents this summer that he intends to leave in a year so they would have plenty of time to prepare for a search (for the presidential post)."

Acker's resignation becomes effective June 30, 1986.

Last June, Acker said it was too early to say what his future plans will be.

"I've had a few contacts from people who recalled our earlier commitment and my animal science textbook needs revision," he said. "But I really haven't had the time to give these things serious consideration."

Acker is listed on Iowa State University's list of applicants for a new university president. The current list includes 40 people, but has not been completed, said Virgil Lagomarcino, ISU dean of the College of Education and chairman of the ISU presidential search committee.

The ISU presidential post will become vacant after this school year when W. Robert Parks, current ISU president, reaches the state's mandatory retirement age of 70.

Acker said he will not comment about a possible position at ISU or any other institution.

"I'm ready for a new challenge, at K-State or elsewhere in either the private or public sector," Acker said. "But the regents for any institution, as they face the task of selecting a president, shouldn't be bothered by speculation."

Fighting in Beirut continues

Rival factions ignore truce

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslems shelled Christian areas Sunday in a new violation of a Syrian-brokered truce designed to stop random bombardment of residential areas. Sniper fire kept all gates closed along the Green Line, which splits Beirut into Christian and Moslem sectors.

Police said 16 motorists remained missing after rival Christian and Moslem militias grabbed them Saturday while they trying to drive across the Green Line. Other kidnap victims were released in a swap hours later.

The total kidnapped was unknown. The tit-for-tat abductions caused the army on Saturday to close the sole gateway still open across the 3-mile line, from six crossing points.

Police said two artillery barrages hit coastal townships on the Christian heartland north of Beirut. They said 17 shells crashed in pinewoods above the port city of Jounieh, 12 miles north of the capital.

There was no immediate report of casualties.

A truce was reached Thursday to end 12 days of indiscriminate bombardment of residential areas in and around Beirut. Battles between Christians and Moslems had killed more than 320 people and wounded nearly 1,100, according to police count.

In Syrian-controlled east Lebanon's ancient town of Baalbek, rival Moslem gunmen clashed for one hour Sunday with heavy machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades following what began as a squabble over a teen-age marriage, reporters there said.

The reporters in Baalbek, 50 miles east of Beirut, said the wrangle grew into a fierce dispute between two Sunni and Shiite clans and that before it was over, one little boy had been killed and another badly wounded.

Christian and Moslem leaders came no closer to agreement on deploying Syrian military observers throughout Beirut to monitor the truce.

Druse and Shiite militia officials want the Syrians to be based throughout Beirut, including at army artillery emplacements and Christian militia posts.

Court trial in Virginia town compares to Von Bulow case

By The Associated Press

LEESBURG, Va. — One courtroom spectator calls it "our own Von Bulow trial," and excited townspeople here in the heart of Virginia's hunt country will be sorry when it's over.

The murder trial of William "Bull" Evans-Smith, a retired Army colonel and avid horseman whose wife of 43 years was found strangled in her bedroom, is expected to go to the jury next Monday after two weeks of testimony in Loudoun County Circuit Court.

Defense attorney Blair Howard says the case against his client is "a classic circumstantial" one, and prosecutor William Burch concedes that "we don't have a smoking gun, a witness."

But Burch told the eight-man, four-woman jury the evidence would show that Evans-Smith "brutally murdered his wife and proceeded with a cold, calculated cover-up" intended to give the impression she had been raped and their house burglarized.

A medical examiner has testified that she was not raped.

Evans-Smith, 65, who is on administrative leave as director of a foreign studies program at American University in Washington, D.C., has maintained his innocence since the body of his wife, Barbara, 64, was found April 15 in her upstairs bedroom at Crooked Run Farm, the couple's 70-acre estate near here.

A farmer summoned by Lesleigh Cook, one of the Evans-Smiths' three grown daughters, said he found the wife with pantyhose wrapped three times around her neck and underwear stuffed in her mouth.

Evans-Smith testified that his wife was alive when he left their home for work on the morning she was killed.

There also was testimony about scratches on Evans-Smith's hands and small drops of his blood on his wife's bathrobe, and about a dark green van parked on the road near their driveway the morning of the murder.

Then there was a dramatic courtroom appearance by Frederica Bunge, 59, of Berkeley, Calif., a former university associate of Evans-Smith who told of an intimate affair with him that lasted 11 years and ended in 1984.

She testified that Evans-Smith told her several weeks before his wife's death that "things were not terribly happy at home."

Cook said her mother had become "depressed and distraught" because Evans-Smith had become violent in the months before her death.

In some ways, the ingredients of the Evans-Smith trial were reminiscent of the celebrated case of Claus von Bulow, a wealthy socialite who last June was found innocent by a jury in Providence, R.I., of charges of trying to kill his heiress wife with insulin injections.

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions – the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

Sun, music attract students to concert

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

More than 1,000 music and sun lovers came out for an afternoon of Frisbee® and frolic to the dance beat music of Dogs? and Steve, Bob and Rich at Memorial Stadium Sunday.

Music Review

The Union Program Council's (UPC) Special Events Committee has sponsored the Welcome Back Concert for five years.

"This year's turnout is much better than last year's," Julie Stephens, senior in sociology and UPC Special Events chairperson, said. "Last year we had four bands and this year the two bands we have are more popular."

Students came complete with summer attire, blankets and twists to the hacky-sack sport. Some burned off calories and others relaxed in the sun, as if not bothered by the concert's slow start.

"What better way to enjoy the weather than to feel the Kansas sun hitting you," Alan Bindel, senior in milling science and management, said. "The bands are great and I'll take any chance I get to hear some good rock 'n' roll for free."

After a 45-minute delay, Dogs? played a mix of original and contemporary music chart favorites from musicians such as David Bowie, Power Station and Tears for Fears. Original tunes played were "Sister, Sister" and "Don't Eat It" — always a crowd-pleaser, said drummer Stan Hartman. Dogs? members include Conrad Stolze, guitar; Jerry Sumner, lead vocals; Joe McWhorter, keyboards and vocals; Barry Dirks bass and vocals and drummer Hartman.

Dogs? have played regularly at Brother's Tavern and are currently in the Battle of the Bands semi-finals in Wichita. Winners will be awarded a recording for MTV's basement tapes.

Mid-afternoon Steve, Bob and Rich started their show with "Big Fat Blonde" and students started to boogie. Dancers remained in front of the stage as the band proceeded to belt out number after number from stored-away energy. When the dancers dwindled down to two, the band threw both a complementary T-shirt.

Rapport between the band and the crowd remained consistent and easy-going throughout the show as they played old and new tunes.

"They're more fun than Dick Clark's Beach Party," Matt Kyle, senior in art and English, said.

Audience members must have agreed as heads bopped, fingers snapped and anyone who knew the words sang along.

"We're very lyric conscious," said Rich Ruth, bass and vocals. "Some bands are out to say nothing, but we're out to say something."

Our little piggies went to market.

WHAT TO DO AFTER COLLEGE . . .
is a question a lot of young people in high school and college are asking. Then, even if you get the finest college degree, where can you use it meaningfully?
Perhaps the answer lies in becoming an Air Force officer through Air Force ROTC. We have many different career areas in which specialists of all kinds are needed. And as an Air Force commissioned officer you can have unequaled opportunity for leadership and management experience, plus an excellent starting salary and benefits package.
Consider Air Force ROTC as a gateway to a great way of life for you. Find out about the benefits of a four, three or two-year scholarship that pays $100 a month, tuition, book costs and lab and incidental fees. Couple that with what will be waiting after graduation, and you have the answer to what you've been looking for.

ting representatives were asked: 'Do you think the budget in that (revised) program is compatible with the project as described in the program?' they all said yes," Shepard said. "Everybody wants to see the project go."

However, Shepard said even though contractors are optimistic about the project, budgeting must remain a prime consideration.

"There is a certain limit to how much some people can raise," he said. "I go up there and all the architects are nodding their heads, 'Yeah sure, that's enough money' so I think, wow, I was really way off."

Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, said he fully expected the bids to be within the budget. He said the architect is responsible for getting the project within the budget.

"We knew the budget was tight, but there were final design buffers in there (the budget) with alternates," Cross said. "The architect and the contractors confirmed that they could do the project within the budget. The architect had to be extremely practical with his bid."

Shepard said he was convinced the project could be done within the budget when contractors, Gill Johnson, Colorado Springs, Colo., and Herchel Phelps, Greeley, Colo., confirmed the building, excluding the extras, could be erected within the revised budget of $14.5 million. Both contractors volunteered their services to the University.

"When the architect designed the project as it is now, he (Livingston) had an outside estimating firm do the estimating to safeguard the idea that they were not trying to lead someone down Primrose path," Shepard said.

Cross said Gossen Livingston architects provided the University with preliminary cost reports during the early planning phase of the coliseum. The architects must now review the bids for budget discrepancies.

"We hired the architect for his expertise," Cross said. "He has to do whatever is necessary to get it (the cost) in (the budget).

"We will meet with them (Livingston and associates) on campus to see where errors were made or (if) something has changed," Cross said. "It is up to them (the architect) to tell us where, why and how this may have changed."

Cross said he was unhappy the high bids will disrupt the scheduled Sept. 7 ground breaking ceremonies for the coliseum, but he hopes the effect of the delay will be minimal.

"If this delay takes two months, that moves the completion date slated for August 1987 back to October," Cross said. "That gets us into the basketball season. These delays have a ripple effect."

Currently, the University has pledges of $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts and contributions and an additional $7 million worth of bonds approved by the Board of Regents, to be repaid by student fees.

The other coliseum base bids by company and amount were:

— E.W. Johnson Inc., of Wichita; $22.7 million.

— Harmon Construction Co. Inc., of Oklahoma City, Okla.; $19.7 million.

— Law Construction Co. Inc., of Wichita; $19.3 million.

— Robert E. McKee Inc., Englewood, Colo.; $18.8 million.

Livingston said Friday that he was looking at many options to try to get the project on schedule again.

"We are looking at hundreds of options," Livingston said. "We have all kinds of people working on it. We are evaluating each option. We are going to do whatever it takes and we're going to do it (the coliseum)."

Johnson said he believes it will be necessary to redesign the coliseum.

"This is nearly a single-purpose building," Johnson said. "I think a major project like this needs to have a serious look at redesign of the whole building."

Livingston said redesign is an option and he is contracted to redesign without cost to the University if so requested. This redesign could be expensive to his firm, he said.

"(Redesign) is certainly a option," Livingston said. "It depends on many things. A total redesign is extremely expensive. We have large redesign fees."

Livingston said he hoped to complete his review of options and start construction within 60 days.

Kickoff

"I've met a lot of people," Kadel said. "This is the first time I've attended a party of this size, and it's kind of fun."

Kickoff '85 was co-sponsored by the Center for Student Development; the Association of Residence Halls; Greek Affairs; the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics; Lafene Student Health Center; the Union Program Council; Alcohol & other Drug Education Service; the Office of the Vice President for Education & Student Services and several Manhattan merchants.

However, Proite said, a big part of the Kickoff's success was due to the help of more than 100 student volunteers who created interest in the event and put it all together.

"It's our intention to repeat this event next year," she said.

We need your help.

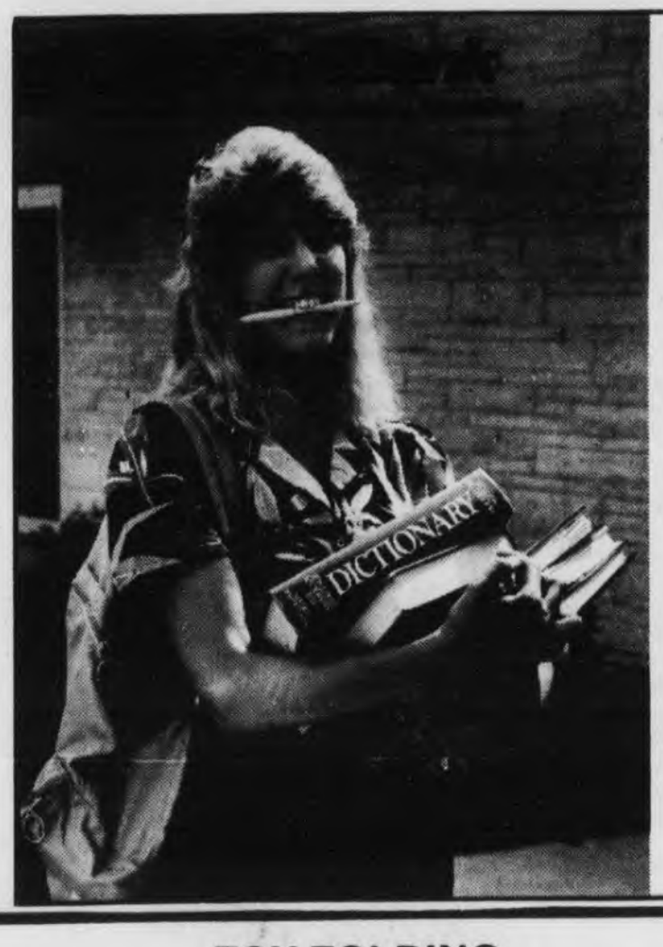
Sen. Dole urges China to open trade markets

By The Associated Press



BEIJING, China — Sen. Bob Dole on Sunday urged China to increase its purchases of U.S. grain and expressed disappointment that the Chinese had not lived up to terms of a 1980 grain agreement.

Dole spoke at a welcoming banquet in the Chinese capital for the majority leader and his seven-member Senate delegation, which has pressed several Asian countries to open their markets to American goods and restrain exports to reduce U.S. trade deficits.

"One matter of special concern to me is China's decision not to fulfill the terms of our grain agreement," Dole said. "We hope that you will find that future grain purchases from our country are attractive. As you know, we have plenty of product to sell and such purchases would benefit us both."

The 1980 grain agreement called for the Chinese to buy a minimum of 6 million tons of wheat per year. However, China fell about 4.2 million tons short of fulfulling the contract when it expired in 1984.

At a reception prior to the banquet, Dole conferred with one of the top officials from Henan province, Kansas' sister state. Dole spokesman Walt Riker said the senator checked on the progress of two Kansas projects there — the construction of a feed-manufacturing facility and a large silo.

Superpower relations straining, Soviet says

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Soviet official said Sunday that superpower relations have been endangered by the recent flurry of accusations and announcements by the Reagan administration.

"I think Soviet-American relations are in jeopardy," Dr. Georgi Arbatov, a member of the Soviet Communist Party central committee and director of Institute on the U.S.A. and Canada, said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Arbatov, whose gloomy view was disputed on the same program by Michael Armacost, U.S. undersecretary of state for political affairs, was especially critical of U.S. plans to test a new anti-satellite weapon.

Arbatov said the Soviet Union "feels it is a new, very dangerous step in the arms race and that it endangers the arms control process because it is a part of the 'Star Wars' concept."

He was referring to President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative to find a high-technology shield against Soviet missiles, which the president strongly defended in a speech last week.

Africa

Louis le Grange, the law and order minister, warned Saturday of "stern action" if the march took place.

The Rev. Allan Boesak, a leading anti-apartheid activist and president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, called the march. Boesak, a man of mixed race, said the government crackdown "is yet another sign that the government is incapable of handling peaceful protest."

Among the 27 Front adherents arrested over the weekend was physician Farouk Meer, the organization's acting president.

In disturbances Sunday, police said they fired rubber bullets and bird shot at blacks throwing stones in Zwelentemba, in the Cape Provice's wine-growing Worcester region. No arrests or injuries were reported.

Police said an explosion hit a filling station in Welkom, south of Johannesburg, but characterized it as a "normal criminal deed" not connected with racial unrest.

Chinese defector crashes plane; kills 2

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — A defecting Chinese air force pilot crash-landed a twin-jet light bomber in South Korea, killing the navigator and a farmer toiling in a rice paddy, officials said Sunday.

They said the pilot sought political asylum in Taiwan.

China said the plane strayed off course during a training mission and made an emergency landing. It asked for return of the plane and three-man crew, including the man who died.

The first Chinese account came Sunday evening over official Peking television, a full day after the incident took place.

China and South Korea have no diplomatic relations, but state-run South Korean television said the government was in contact with Chinese authorities in a third country. Hong Kong was generally assumed to be the meeting place.

The Defense Ministry said the pilot, Xiao Tienyen, 33, suffered a fractured spine, but the plane's third crewman, radio operator Liu Shuyi, 37, was unhurt and wanted to return to China.

Lee Hung-shik, a ministry spokesman, said South Korean air force jets spotted the plane about 6 p.m. Saturday and tried to escort it to Kunsan Air Base, an American facility near Iri, about 110 miles south of Seoul.

But the Chinese bomber ran out of fuel and hurtled to earth, Lee said.

Lee refused to describe the plane, but military sources said it was an Ilyushin IL-28. China makes the Soviet-designed IL-28 under the name Harbin-5, according to Jane's All the World's Aircraft.

Xiao was listed in stable condition at Wonkang University Hospital in Iri, where he told South Korean investigators he wanted to defect to the island nation of Taiwan, Lee said.

The Seoul government was expected to comply with the wishes of the pilot and radio operator in line with its past decisions.

The Nationalist government in Taiwan, which has formal ties with South Korea, said meanwhile it would welcome the pilot. The Nationalists contend they are China's sole legitimate government.

Bandits get no respect in small Seattle store

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Two would-be robbers of a small grocery store got no respect when they threatened to use an unseen weapon against the clerk and customers, and the bandits left empty-handed, police said.

A man entered the store Saturday, told the clerk his partner outside was armed, and demanded money, said King County police spokesman Steve Vick.

"The clerk declined to believe him on the grounds that he observed no firearm," Vick said.

The unsuccessful bandit went outside to confer with his partner, then returned and ordered everyone to lie down.

"He was generally ignored," Vick said. "The suspect then motioned to his companion, who got out of the car and stood beside it but displayed no weapon."

K-State's Dickey optimistic entering last year of contract

By TODD NIGHSWONGER
Sports Editor

There has been talk that this could be K-State head football coach Jim Dickey's last year if the Wildcats don't put together at least a winning season.

As far as Dickey is concerned, if the Wildcats don't win six or seven times and play well in every game, the school administration won't have to worry about relieving him of his duties. Dickey will buy his own ticket out of town.

"If we really don't do well, I'm not sure I want to be here," Dickey said Thursday when the Big Eight Skywriters Tour made its stop in Manhattan.

Every coach has high hopes in preseason of a putting more wins on the board than losses, and Dickey is no exception. But Dickey, who is in the last year of his contract, said he truly believes the 'Cats can put together a winning season.

In his eighth year at K-State, the Wildcat mentor knows everything is going to have to fall in place for his team to experience a winning campaign. But for the first time since 1982 — the 'Cats last winning season and first bowl appearance — Dickey has an abundance of experienced players on the roster.

"There are almost the exact number of fifth-year players as we had when we went to the Independence Bowl," he said. "For the last three years we've redshirted everybody we possibly could get by with.

"I feel good about our experience. There's no question that we have to get off to a good start and gain some confidence."

Confidence is something K-State has not had much of in the past, and Dickey knows it. But with six three-year and 15 two-year lettermen returning — plus all four non-conference games at home — confidence may not be a problem this year.

"I really feel like this may be our best football team ever here, and we're trying to sell that to our players," Dickey said.

Many of the Wildcats, including all-Big Eight free safety Barton Hundley, say the key to gaining confidence will depend on how fast the team gets out of the blocks.

"The thing around here that we've been lacking is an attitude that we can win," Hundley said. "We're going to have to go out and get a good start.

"Last year we went out and played Vanderbilt and South Carolina and they were on a roll. We got down on the losing side and it was hard to start winning again. Hopefully, this year we can change it around."

With the first five games at home, K-State should be able to improve on last year's 1-4 early-season mark. The first two opponents, Wichita State University and the University of Northern Iowa, and the fourth opponent, North Texas State, are must-wins if the Wildcats plan on getting off to a good start in 1985.

While WSU and North Texas State both went 2-9 last year, Northern Iowa and Texas Christian University, the 'Cats' third opponent, were 9-2 and 8-4, respectively.

"Our early schedule is a good one," Dickey said. "There is no feeling that any of our non-conference games are easy ones.

"We must approach our non-conference schedule like we are playing our conference opponents. We need to build momentum early. If we do, I think good things will happen to these players."

K-State returns 40 lettermen and 16 starters from last year. The only returning player who will miss the season is tailback James Ricketts, who was declared academically ineligible.

Of little concern to Dickey is the defense, which returns 10 starters. The strength of the defense, Dickey said, is the secondary.

Dickey has devised a new offense with more emphasis on the passing game. K-State was last in total offense and passing in 1984.

Helping Dickey with the new offensive scheme is Al Sandahl, the new offensive coordinator and quarterback coach. Sandahl was the quarterback coach at Syracuse University before coming to K-State. He has coached at Iowa State, Oklahoma State, Mississippi State, Washington State, Colorado State and the Buffalo Bills of the National Football League.

"I think our players have a great deal of confidence in him," Dickey said of Sandahl. "He's been around a lot of good programs."

But whether the rejuvinated offense will be enough to bring K-State six or seven wins remains to be seen. Hundley said the players are aware of the possibility that Dickey's job may be on the line.

"We're all aware of it. How can you not be aware of it?" he said. "It's just a shame people are putting that (blame for losing) on him. He already has taken the team to its first bowl and I think he is doing a great job."

If Dickey is worried about his future at K-State, he tries not to show it. For the first time since 1982, Dickey is going into the season with a jovial attitude — an attitude he attributes to the players.

"They've had a personality that's helped me a lot," he said. "I really think our football team is having fun and that's when I'm the happiest."

Travis believes students key to success

By DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

When Larry Travis became K-State's athletic director last winter, he did so with a few reservations and a few ideas how to turn around a struggling athletic department.

Since then Travis has seen his reservations all but disappear and many of his ideas to better promote athletics at K-State bear fruit. Saturday night's "Kickoff '85" party for the students was but one example of how Travis is attempting to spark a renewed interest in Wildcat athletics. But, as Travis admitted in a recent interview, his job has just begun.

"The first thing we wanted to try to do was get our staff in place, and the next goal was to try to get our alumni organized — to get out with them, visit with them," Travis said. "We've succeeded somewhat in these areas. We haven't succeeded to the extent I want right now, but we have gotten people interested in our program again."

Travis came to K-State from Georgia Tech, where the athletic budget was over $10 million when he left. He maintains that K-State's current operating budget (the lowest in the Big Eight) is not enough to produce consistent winners in a tough conference.

"We can't continue to have the lowest budget in the conference. If we want to be competitive, we have to be up there in the middle," he said. "The way to do that is to get our people back involved, let them know that they have got to help us.

"As we get more competitive, we'll sell more tickets, and that will increase revenues. Then we've got a chance. But for now we've got to be better organized and more determined to get the job done."

Travis said two things — reorganizing K-State's Wildcat Alumni Clubs and getting the most from the people on his staff — have been, and will continue to be, keys to the success of Wildcat athletics.

"We have completely reorganized our Wildcat Clubs. There is more competition between them now in the area of fund raising. This is healthy competition in that it benefits our department," he said. "The grass roots foundation they (the Wildcat Clubs) provide is very important to our financial success."

In addition to efforts made to increase the athletic operating budget, efforts have also been made to identify the strengths of each member of Travis' staff in an attempt to ensure that each staff member is contributing in the best way possible.

Although alumni support and increased staff efficiency are going to be essential in turning around the athletic program, Travis still considers another group to be important: the students.

"We still have to get our students supporting us," Travis said. "They've got to decide that they want to come watch us play. We've tried to get across to the students that we're here to help them, but they've got to help us."

In an attempt to put students back in the stands at K-State's athletic events, Travis, with the help of Kenny Mossman (an administrative assistant in the department), has come up with ideas for give-aways and halftime entertainment that will help provide fans a complete enter-

Campus sports clubs, K-State varsity teams prepare for fall season

Todd Nighswonger
Sports Editor

For lack of a better name, I'll call this the First Edition column. Original, huh?

I've sat by for two semesters as requests from campus sports clubs for coverage in the Collegian went in one ear of the sports editor and out the other. Well, that is going to change this semester in what I hope sets a precedent.

In every Monday edition this fall — Tuesday next week because of Labor Day — the sports section will include a "Sport Shorts" section with briefs on campus clubs' events of the previous weekend. While each club will not get extensive coverage of their activities, some coverage is better than no coverage.

Because of lack of space and lack of writers, it will be impossible to give each club a full-length story each week. However, the plan calls for a feature on each club at some point in the semester as well as occasional photographs of club events.

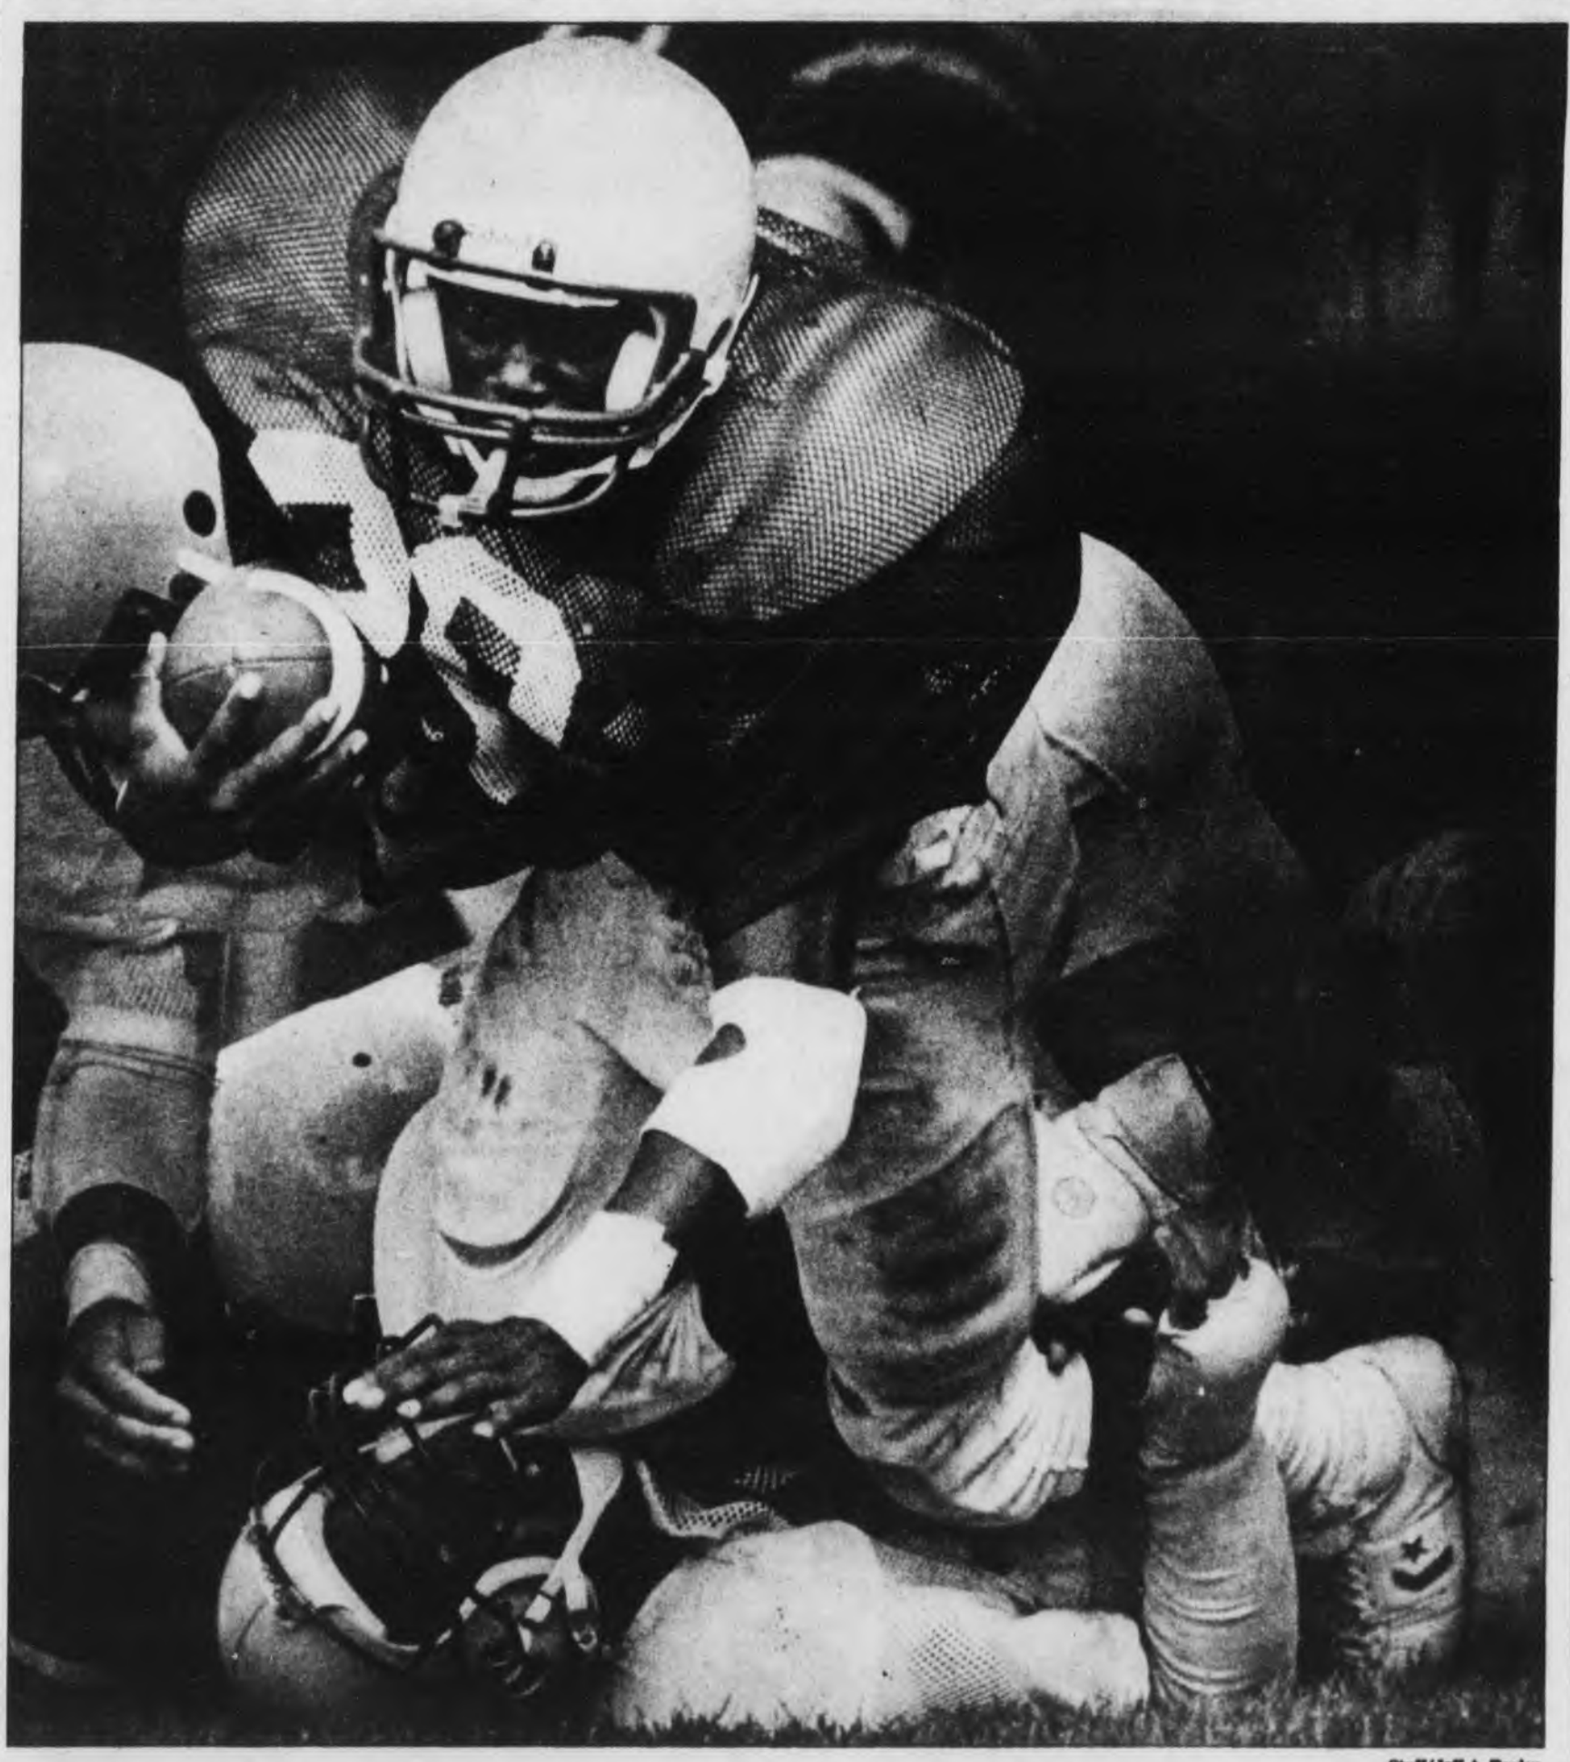
Also for the first time, the sports section will utilize standings and statistics on a regular basis as an added feature. Once a week during the fall intramural season, there will be a weekly update of team standings. And of course the Collegian's infamous football predictions will be a "vital" part of the Friday editions.

THE STARTING TIMES for three K-State football games this fall have been changed. Home games with Texas Christian University on Sept. 21 and the University of Oklahoma on Oct. 5 have been changed to 11:40 a.m. to accommodate television. The Nov. 9 game at Oklahoma State University originally had a 6:30 p.m. starting time, but will now begin at 1:30 p.m.

LOOKING AHEAD, FIVE K-State basketball games will be televised. The first three are home games against the University of Kansas on Jan. 25, the University of Missouri on Feb. 1 and the University of Colorado on Feb. 8. K-State travels to Iowa State University on Feb. 15 and to KU on Feb. 22 for other televised games.

K-STATE FOOTBALL FANS think they have it good with five consecutive home games to start the season. Iowa State's first six games are at home. The Cyclones hit the road just three times in 11 games — including a Nov. 16 Parents' Day game in KSU Stadium.

The Wildcats are not the only Big Eight team with seven home games this fall. Kansas, Missouri and the University of Nebraska also look forward to an extensive home schedule.



Oklahoma has the most unusual schedule of all the conference teams. The Sooners' first game is not until Sept. 28, the same day as K-State's fourth game. Oklahoma's second game is the Homecoming game here.

The 'Cats are 5-29-2 in Homecoming games. Doesn't it seem strange that K-State seldom chooses Homecoming opponents they can beat? Most other Big Eight teams are glad to make the 'Cats their opponent for Homecoming.

FOR THOSE OF you who haven't heard, Greg Kraft, assistant track coach has resigned and will return to California, his home state, to pursue other career opportunities. Kraft was in charge of field events in his four years at K-State. He has coached several all-Americans, including long jumpers Kenny Harrison and Veryl Switzer Jr., and javelin thrower Ray Hansen.

BOTH THE K-STATE baseball and softball teams will hold their first alumni games this fall. The Old Timers Baseball Game will be Friday, Sept. 20 under the new lights at Frank Meyers Field and will include graduates from 1980 or before. The alumnae softball game is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 5 at 9 a.m. on the 'Cats' new softball field next to Meyers Field.

In other news concerning Ralph Currie's softball Wildcats, Jill Kennedy, a 5-foot-4-inch freshman from Benson High School, Omaha, Neb., has signed to play for the 'Cats. Kennedy, who plays third base, was recruited heavily by Creighton University, Indiana University and Nebraska before choosing K-State.

Staff/Jeff A. Taylor

Looking ahead

K-State running back Demetrius Scott (20) struggles to gain extra yardage during an intra-squad scrimmage Saturday at the football practice fields south of KSU Stadium. The Wildcats are preparing for their Sept. 7 home opener against Wichita State University.

Tryouts today

Open tryouts for the K-State volleyball team will be at 3:30 p.m. today in Ahearn Field House. Coach Scott Nelson said eight players return to the squad, but he may fill up to three more spots. For more information, call 532-5935.

The K-State crew will begin holding tryouts today, Coach Don Rose said. Men and women interested in joining the crew should meet at the west side of Ahearn Gymnasium at 3:30 p.m. or call Rose at 776-4302.

There is an added incentive for freshmen who join the crew. The team will celebrate its 25th anniversary in 1989 with a trip to England to compete in the Henley Royal Regatta.

Rangers rout KC, 7-3

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — Pete O'Brien knocked in four runs, three with a bases-loaded triple, and Toby Harrah drove home three runs Sunday to power the Texas Rangers past the Kansas City Royals 7-3.

Charlie Hough, 13-12, held the Royals to five hits, including solo home runs by George Brett and Lonnie Smith. The knuckleballer struck out five and walked three in pitching his 11th complete game of the season.

Texas took a 3-2 lead in the sixth inning on a single by O'Brien that scored Oddibe McDowell, who had walked and stolen second. The Rangers broke the game open in the seventh with four runs, three on O'Brien's triple to the right-field corner.

tainment package. The product on the field or on the court, Travis said, will have to be the major drawing card.

When he arrived at K-State, Travis unveiled a five-year plan to put the athletic department back on firm footing financially. This program, according to Travis, contains objectives to be met involving alumni support and season ticket sales. Student support once again, however, is the "key that unlocks the door."

Sooners ranked No. 1 in national poll

By The Associated Press

The Oklahoma Sooners, who were ready to claim the 1984 national championship had they beaten Washington in the Orange Bowl, are the preseason choice to win it all in 1985 while defending champion Brigham Young just made the Top Ten.

In wide-open balloting, with 10 of the 105 Division I-A teams receiving at least one first-place vote, Oklahoma outdistanced Auburn, last year's preseason pick in the Associated Press poll, which began in 1936.

The Sooners received 23 of 60 first-place votes and 1,090 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. Auburn received 13 first-place votes and 1,027 points in balloting results announced Saturday night.

The preseason poll also raised the possibility that a team on probation could win the national championship since there are two such teams among the top five. Southern Methodist is third with three first-place ballots and 924 points, followed by Iowa, with seven firsts and 837 points, and Florida, with four firsts and 788 points.

Both SMU of the Southwest Conference and Florida of the Southeastern Conference are ineligible for their league championships, nor can they go to a bowl game this year.

Rounding out the Top Ten are sixth-place Southern California with two first-place votes and 754 points; Maryland, three and 738; Ohio State, 709; Nebraska, 676, and BYU with one first-place ballot and 608 points.

The remaining four first-place votes were split between Illinois, No. 11, and Washington, No. 12.

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer, whose Sooners finished sixth last year, isn't thrilled to be No. 1 this early, but noted "we've all got to start somewhere. There are just a lot of unknowns about our team. Quarterback and the defensive secondary are major concerns. Our front line people are good on defense and I think we'll be pretty good on the offensive line."

Switzer said being ranked No. 1 "just raises the expectations of your fans. It creates so much anticipation and they feel so disappointed when it doesn't happen. They ought to know that unbeaten seasons just don't happen much any more."

Since the AP began a preseason poll in 1950, only six teams ranked No. 1 at the start of the season have won the national championship. Tennessee did it in 1951, Michigan State in 1952, Oklahoma in 1956, 1974 and 1975, and Alabama in 1978. Oklahoma also was the preseason pick in 1977 and finished seventh. Auburn wound up 14th last year.

Trailing No. 11 Illinois and No. 12 Washington in the preseason Second Ten are LSU, Notre Dame, Arkansas, Oklahoma State, South Carolina, Penn State, Florida State and UCLA.

Football upstarts to fight for the top in 1985

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the first part of a four-part article previewing the 1985 college football season. Today's story focuses on West Coast teams. Part two will cover teams in the East.

Not since Alabama, a traditional power, performed the feat in 1978-79 has anyone captured consecutive national championships. The last five national champions have all been first-timers. And while Georgia (1980), Clemson (1981) and Penn State (1982) were familiar names in winning circles, Miami, Fla. (1983) and Brigham Young (1984) were relative newcomers to the sport's top echelon.

No one, not even Coach LaVell Edwards, expected BYU to wind up No. 1. The Cougars' title gave additional hope to teams that have never won the national championship.

Eleven teams from last year's final Associated Press Top Twenty have never won a national title. With their 1984 finish in parentheses, they are Washington (2), Florida (3), Boston College (5), Oklahoma State (7), Southern Methodist (8), UCLA (9), South Carolina (11), Iowa (16), Florida State (17), Kentucky (19) and Virginia (20).

BYU, which opens against Boston College in the Kickoff Classic on Thursday night, will continue to throw the ball with the return of quarterback Robbie Bosco and wide receiver Glen Kozlowski, but the offensive line was hit hard by graduation. Only four starters return on defense, three of them linebackers.

The Cougars were the only undefeated major-college team last year and they were the first team in 80 years to go 13-0. They come into 1985 with a 24-game winning streak, longest in the nation.

BYU is favored to win its 10th straight Western Athletic Conference crown. The top challengers figure to be Air Force, Hawaii and San Diego State.

Thanks to BYU, the WAC stole the spotlight from the Pacific-10 Conference in the Far West. But Pac-10 members Washington, UCLA and Southern Cal won Jan. 1 bowl games and finished in the Top Ten. The Pac-10 could have a wild scramble among those three plus Arizona, Arizona State and Washington State.

Southern Cal was the 1984 Pac-10 champion and Coach Ted Tollner says of the Trojans "We'd like to get back to the Rose Bowl."

The probable key to the Trojans' fortunes is quarterback Sean Salisbury, who tore cartilage in his right knee in the second game of 1984 and missed the rest of the season.

Washington's only loss came at the hands of Southern Cal. The Huskies return five starters from a defense that led the nation with a total of 51 interceptions and fumble recoveries but Coach Don James admits he doesn't expect to duplicate those accomplishments.

Like Sothern Cal, the Huskies will have an experienced quarterback in senior Hugh Millen. UCLA is without an experienced quarterback but among the returnees are All-American placekicker John Lee and sophomore tailback Gaston Green, who rushed for 144 yards in the Fiesta Bowl.

Washington State will field one of the nation's best backfields — quarterback Mark Rypien and tailback Rueben Mayes were All-Pac-10 in 1984 and fullback Kerry Porter, out most of last season with an injury, made it in 1983.

U.S. wins 4 gold medals in University Games

By The Associated Press

KOBE, Japan — With world record holder Matt Biondi and two of his teammates breaking meet records, U.S. swimmers raced off with four gold medals Sunday as full-scale competition opened in the 1985 World University Games.

Biondi, world record holder in the men's 100-meter freestyle, edged Stephan Caron of France in the 200 meters, finishing in 1 minute, 49.52 seconds to Caron's 1:49.78. Both beat the two-year-old event record of 1:51.19.

A U.S. team anchored by Mary T. Meagher, world record holder in two butterfly events, raced away from the Soviet Union in the women's 800-meter freestyle relay, a new event in the Games. The Americans won in 8:15.14 and the Soviets in 8:21.78.

In the start of women's basketball action, the United States downed North Korea 108-81.

Canada started strongly in men's volleyball, beating the United States 15-7, 15-4. In women's volleyball, Japan beat the United States 15-4, 15-7, 15-0.

Veterinary medicine students rank No. 1 on national test

By TRISH MEHAFFEY
Staff Writer

The College of Veterinary Medicine's 1985 graduating class was ranked No. 1 in the nation out of 26 universities, based on results of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Accreditation Examination.

This exam accredits doctors of veterinary medicine to authorize domestic or international transportation of animals and take care of all public health governmental regulations, said Don Seedle, assistant professor of laboratory medicine.

The exam was given in December 1984, but the results were not available until January.

Seedle said all 105 students passed the test and scored at least 6 percent higher than any other veterinary medicine class in the nation. There was only one other university with a perfect score, but the school only had 37 students.

"This test is extra-curricular to the requirements of graduating in veterinary medicine," said John Noordsy, dean of the Veterinary Medical Center. "It's beyond the practicing test.

"One reason K-State scored high was because the preparation was good and it laid out the groundwork. K-State has a unique program and veterinary medicine is getting greater play and becoming more significant in public health."

Seedle said Kansas has done well on the exam in the past, but it's the first time K-State has ranked No. 1.

"The students are of a very high caliber and the interest in public health by the department heads and administration has rubbed off on the students."

Seedle said this test is only a small part of the courses taken but is important to veterinary medicine. More importance is put upon public health because of the opportunity of travel. People are able to travel to foreign countries and acquire animals which causes more concern for diseases.

One disease that causes concern is foot and mouth disease, which can be spread during transportation, Seedle said. This is a viral disease and causes blisters on the feet and in the mouths of animals.

An example of what the test covers besides transportation is animal welfare, Seedle said. If an animal is being mistreated, the veterinarian is sometimes called and they can inform the party of what action can be taken under government regulations.

"Not many practitioners would hire people if they were not accredited," Seedle said. "This test is not the national board test required to practice."

Federal appointees waning

Study blames job discontent

By The Associated Press

WATERVILLE, Maine — Wanted: Very bright, ambitious men and women to run the U.S. government. Pay $68,000 a year and up. Long hours, lots of frustration, no privacy.

"We've stacked the deck against the presidential appointees," concludes G. Calvin Mackenzie, who is winding up a year-long study of the difficulty of recruiting the best and brightest candidates to accept presidential appointments in the federal government.

The Colby College professor has been on a leave of absence for the past year, directing the $250,000 study for the National Association of Public Administration, a nonpartisan think tank. His draft report was completed this month, and the final report will be released Nov. 1 in Washington, D.C.

Mackenzie said the study confirmed suspicions that inadequate pay levels, resentment of disclosure requirements and other "petty aggravations" discourage some of the best candidates.

Mackenzie concludes that government service attracts "better people than it deserves" but not as good as it should.

The NAPA study originated with the Business Roundtable, an organization of top corporate executives, which was troubled by the length of time the Reagan administration had taken to fill high-level posts after assuming office in 1981. The following year the organization funded a study of presidential appointments; Mackenzie was its principal investigator.

The study focused on 400 to 600 key policymaking jobs at the subcabinet level and in regulatory agencies; all require confirmation by the Senate and pay from $68,000 to $82,000 a year. "It's the kind of job that won't ring a bell when you tell your grandchildren you held it," says Mackenzie.

Salaries in the neighborhood of $75,000 may seem lavish to most Americans. Mackenzie, however, says they're not enough to attract what he calls "the fast-track people" — top lawyers and managers in the prime of their careers who can make much more in the private sector and are not independently wealthy.

The survey found that 38 percent of the appointees took salary cuts — many of them substantial — and often went without pay raises even in years of raging inflation.

Vacancies increase in residence halls

By LEANNE STOWE
Staff Writer

The number of vacancies in sidence halls increased another 200 udents this fall, according to the mber of signed hall contracts by ening day of the halls Wednesday. it the Department of Housing pes to decrease the figure with the lp of late contracts, said Rosanne oite, assistant director of housing. There are 3,600 to 3,700 signed con-acts, compared to about 3,900 con-acts last fall.

The vacancies may be filled soon, oite said, because the housing partment has written an addi-nal 139 contracts since Wednes-y.

"Last year we wrote 125 or so con-acts after we opened the halls and is year I expect we will write more an that," she said.

Response to privacy programs 'great'

"We planned to close the terraces (basement floors) in the halls that have them. We wanted the vacancies to be spread out through all the halls so that we wouldn't have to close any one hall. As it became more apparent what our numbers would really be, then we made additional closings across the board," she said.

Because of protests last year regarding the closing of halls, avoiding further closings was a top priority, Proite said. Closing corridors became the apparent solution.

Proite said the decrease in the number of students returning to the residence halls will probably be proportionate to the decrease in the number of students returning to the University. However, enrollment figures and the number of on-campus students are not directly tied together, she said.

She also said returning students who did not return to the residence halls had a variety of reasons for not returning.

Several new programs in the halls this year have been successful, Priote said. The new programs provide students with a quiet study atmosphere. There are RESPECT floors (Residents Encouraging Study, Peaceful Environment and Community Thinking), Transfer/Upperclass Student floors, Intensive Study floors and Academic Cluster floors.

"The response to our privacy programs has been great," she said. "We will probably end up with over 150 students getting single rooms this year, for which they are paying an additional $300. I think that says something."

A decline of incoming freshmen in the past few years has left the residence halls with space to fill. One contributing factor was a lack of enforcement of the Parietal rule, which states that all incoming freshmen must live in on-campus housing.

Proite said when the space became available because of declining enrollment, a group of Department of Housing personnel went to the president and the council of deans, but didn't get the support they needed to enforce the rule.

"Essentially the University decided that we would continue to strongly encourage students (to live in the residence halls), but that it would no longer be a rule," she said.

Engine malfunction grounds Boeing 737

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — A United Airlines Boeing 737 with 69 people aboard was delayed from taking off for 44 minutes Sunday after a valve malfunctioned in one of its two engines.

An engine on a British Airtours Boeing 737 exploded on takeoff from Manchester, England, last week, spilling fuel and touching off a fire that killed 54 people.

United spokesperson Mary J. Swanson said she did not know whether the engine that malfunctioned Sunday was a Pratt & Whitney engine, which was the type in the British jet.

United Flight 1030 taxied back to a gate where mechanics fixed the problem in the pneumatic bleed valve, said Swanson.

Airport police, fire and operations personnel said they were not aware of any problem on the plane.

In Washington state, a Northwest Airlines Boeing 757 carrying 129 people made a precautionary landing at Spokane International Airport after one of its Pratt & Whitney engines apparently overheated, officials said.

Permits for on-campus parking e costing students and faculty ore this year because of an in-ease in the cost of maintaining rking facilities, said Gene Cross, ce president for University acilities.

After no increase in cost last year, oss said it was determined a 10 rcent increase in the cost of the rmits was needed to meet the cost maintaining the University's park-g facilities.

Parking permits for students have en increased $2, from $20 to $22. aculty and staff permits for those aking under $20,000 a year have so been increased to $22 from $20, d for those making over $20,000 arly the cost has gone from $40 to 4.

"We like to keep increases at or ss than 10 percent," he said.

Cross said a long-range study was mpleted and a 10-year capital tlay plan was drawn up to handle rking plans for the University.

He said a $250,000 operational aintenance budget is required to aintain parking facilities, with ex-nses for maintenance increasing about 5 to 7 percent yearly.

"Parking has to be self-sufficient," said.

The parking fee fund, used to aintain the University's parking cilities, is supported through park-g permit sales and misuse fees and ceives no state funding.

Vaporization of gas brings autos to halt

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Does your car cough and buck on the freeway ramp after a short pit stop? Maybe even quit altogether?

Blame "vapor lock" and the gasoline, say some auto industry engineers.

Gasoline in recent years, they say, has been getting more volatile — meaning it's more likely at a given temperature to change from liquid to vapor. This makes vapor lock more likely and increases pollution.

The Environmental Protection Agency is considering regulations to control the vapor pressure of gasoline. The agency has the support of the auto industry, whose engines are designed for the less volatile gasoline of a few years ago.

It would also make the industry's task easier if EPA decides, as expected, to require beefed-up fuel vapor recovery systems on cars.

Vapor lock occurs when the engine compartment heats up, evaporating the gas in the fuel line. This builds up pressure, forcing the liquid fuel out through the fuel pump. As a result, there is nothing in the fuel line but vapor.

Vapor lock usually strikes when the car is stopped, heat builds up under the hood and the car is restarted — if it will start — on the thimbleful of liquid in the carburetor float bowl, good for a few hundred yards.

Cars with fuel injectors are less susceptible, and half of all new cars have them.

Clark maintains that vapor lock "is commonplace," although no surveys have been done.

Sexual crime reports may harm victim

Media balance privacy, right to know

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

The point at which a rape or sexual assault victim's right to privacy ends and the public's right to know begins was the subject of a Friday afternoon discussion involving several local groups.

Judy Davis, executive director of Manhattan's Crisis Center Inc., spoke to local media, law enforcement officials, University faculty and area groups concerned with rape and sexual assault regarding a proposed policy dealing with media coverage of sexual assault crimes.

"Unless there is coverage it will be quite an invisible crime," Davis said. "If statistics are to be believed, three of every 10 rapes are reported to the police, which is an increase from 10 years ago when one of every 10 rapes was reported."

But the wrong kind of coverage could drive the topics of rape and sexual assault underground again, which would be a mistake, Davis said.

Withholding information about the victim ensures the victim's privacy and usually is not essential to story information, Davis said.

Anonymity is crucial to the recovery of the victim, she said, and reporting details of the crime can further hurt a victim if identification is possible.

An incest case presents a special problem. Because incest is a family crime, reporting the charge as incest and naming the accused tend to identify the victim. Instead of listing the charge as incest it was suggested the words "sex offense" or "sexual assault" be used to describe the charge.

The policy recommendation called upon the media to:

—Withhold the name of the victim/complainant unless the victim was also killed or the complaint was found to be invalid and the complainant was charged with filing false information.

— Withhold information which would tend to identify a victim.

— Publish feature stories about rape/sexual assault in order to increase public awareness of the crimes and their effects.

— Report only the general location of a crime using a standard map. Such a map, used by all local media, would break up the city into easily identifed areas.

The practice of the media using a standard map when identifying the location of a crime would serve two purposes, Davis said. It would help provide anonymity for a victim by not identifying specifically where a rape or sexual assault occurred; but would still let the community know which general area was affected by the crime.

"People need to know that their neighborhoods are affected," Davis said.

The map should be "a standard quadrant system with recognizable streets as boundaries." Terms such as the Aggieville area or the Northview area are often vague locators without clearly defined borders.

Davis, on behalf of the Cri Center, also requested featu stories on rape and sexual assault used by the media to help educate t public.

Carol Oukrop, associate profess of journalism and mass communic tions, has conducted research rape and sexual abuse coverage newspapers. Oukrop said s believes occasional feature articl concerning rape are effective combating rape gossip.

People also need to know abo rape trauma, the long-term effects victim may have as a result of t crime, Davis said. Dispelling ra myths is also a concern of the cente

"People need to know that you c be raped when you are not 19, wea ing a low-cut top and hanging out ir bar," Davis said. "Victims of ra need care and protection, but v want to inform the public too."

University child-care center solicits parental involvement

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

Parents at K-State now have an alternative form of child care available for their offspring.

Thursday afternoon marked the public presentation of the new KSU Child Care Cooperative located in L-6 Jardine Terrace. The co-op, which is open to students, faculty and staff offers three programs: full day care for toddlers 12 months to 2½ years old and preschoolers 2½ to 5, and interval care for toilet-trained children 2½ to 6 years old.

The center, which occupies Jardine apartments L-1 through L-6, features a playhouse, building blocks, books, block letters, chalkboards and other toys and learning aids inside and sports a playground, complete with sandbox, behind the building.

The interval care program is designed with a flexible timetable, said Veva Ruggles, acting director of the child care center.

"It's set up on a real flexible schedule, but as flexible as we are right now it's not as flexible as everyone would want it to be," she said.

Interval care is available from 7:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m.

Children who are enrolled in this program may be at the center as few as two hours a week up to a maximum of 20 hours a week. Some parents may bring their children in daily as their schedule demands while others may need to use the center only one day a week. In addition, the time when a child is brought in for supervision may vary from day to day within a week, she said.

Children in the full-day programs may arrive at the center as early as 7:45 a.m. and may be picked up by their parents as late as 5:15 p.m.

Each of the three full-time teachers at the center will have a framework for their programs.

"There's a schedule. The teacher will plan activities throughout the day. Sometimes the children will just be there playing, but everything that they have there will be planned. The whole curriculum is structured," Ruggles said.

The teachers will also be helped by students on the student work study program and three part-time aides.

"We are very excited. We've got some really good staff. We wanted people who would just love the kids, and we did extensive interviews. The work study are mostly in early childhood development classes or they've done a lot of baby-sitting," she said.

One aspect of the center which makes it unusual is that it is a cooperative. Before a child may be enrolled in any of the three programs the parents must become a member of the co-op by paying a $25 fee.

"They become a member and with membership they have a voting right. They have a right to voice their opinion on what they would like to see us develop into, because this is just what we've started out with. This is just a starting point for us," Ruggles said.

"Now, once they become a member and their child is enrolled they are asked to put in 10 hours a year to help us out. If they don't want to put in 10 hours they can pay $50."

Ways the co-op members could use up their 10 hours included finishing work on the playground, typing for the center or constructing toys for the children, she said.

Enrolling a child in a program brings additional fees. The toddler and preschool programs, which are both full for the fall semester, cost $9 and $8.50 a day respectively. The interval care program, which is still open for enrollment of preschool age children, carries a fee of $1.50 an hour.

Ruggles said she believed the cooperative's prices were lower than one other day care center she knew of in the Manhattan area. The cooperative, however, has advantages in that it affords parents the opportunity to see their children throughout the day because the center is close to campus, and the parents control the destiny of the program.

Membership is available to anyone who wants to be a member and who wants to help with supervision and expansion of the services. Ruggles explained that parents planning to enroll their children in a program in the future may want to join the co-op now to ensure the programs will grow to meet their expectations.

The co-op system employed by the center is the result of a child care task force appointed by President Duane Acker last year and input from interested parents at planning sessions.

At the ribbon-cutting ceremony, John Markiewicz, senior in construction science and chairman of the board of directors for the co-op, said the child care center and the services it provides would make K-State a more attractive university for study and work.

'Dragon' suffers from poor casting

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Film Review

Michael Cimino's new film, "The Year of the Dragon," gets off to a good-looking start. As the camera follows a parade through New York's Chinatown, the screen is filled with colors — brilliant oranges, reds and yellows. Firecrackers explode overhead and their fragments fall in a steady rain. The screen is so full of exciting colors, images, and sounds that a real contrast is established with Cimino's last film, the infamous bomb "Heaven's Gate."

It'd be nice to say that "The Year of the Dragon" lives up to the energy and excitement promised in the opening scenes, but that's not the case. The visuals remain quite stunning throughout, and even when Cimino sticks to the action the film has a lot of power. Unfortunately when he has to let the audience know about the film's lead character, Stanley White (Mickey Rourke), New York's most decorated police detective, the film comes apart at the seams.

After White is appointed captain of New York's Chinatown, he becomes determined to stop gang warfare. This means he wears his racism on his sleeve as he tries bullying the Chinese mafia into seeing things his own way.

Mickey Rourke has delivered interesting performances since he appeared as the arson expert in "Body Heat," but it's difficult to imagine a performance being more wrong than his performance in "The Year of the Dragon." The audience is expected to desperately believe this man is one of New York's finest police officers. At least twice the film explains he's the most decorated policeman in New York, but precious little is seen to back this up.

Rourke's performance is principally to blaim for this. At the beginning he's very charismatic — shades of his performance in "The Pope of Greenwich Village," — but he is also supposed to be a loner and a rebel. A loner and rebel? That sounds a little like Pee-Wee Herman. And that's part of the problem with the film. Ultimately Stanley White is too much of a wimp to really deserve any attention. He wants to be a heavyweight, though, and he struts across the screen like the cock of the walk, but it's just so much posturing.

But it isn't the posturing of a police officer who has lost touch with everyone around him. It's the posturing of someone who has no idea whatever what it means to be a police officer.

It was easy to believe Al Pacino as the loner and rebel in "Serpico," but Mickey Rourke tries to make his character too many different things and in the process no one thing is convincing in its own right.

Most noticeable is his age. Stanley White is supposed to be well past 40, but the only indication of that is his hair color. Nothing about the way he acts backs that up. He's supposed to be married, but it's difficult to believe he's ever been in the same room with his wife.

Farm record-keeping system may prevent financial failure

By The Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Bookkeeping on the farm: A grain receipt blows out the pickup window, planting data scrawled on an envelope is washed with the bib overalls, and a fertilizer bill disappears in a six-month pile of paper.

These mistakes might have been merely annoying when agriculture was economically healthy. But declining grain sales and rising production costs and interest rates have combined in recent years to depress farm income and land values.

The U.S. Agriculture Department says farm income will drop this year more than 24 percent from 1984.

That means lapses in bookkeeping can spell bankruptcy, say three farm wives who have devised a bookkeeping system to get farmers organized.

The Agriculture Department says farm income will drop this year to between $22 billion and $26 billion, down from $34.6 billion in 1984.

Their book, "Put Paperwork in its Place," gives farmers a step-by-step plan for keeping good records — just "paperwork shortcuts," said one of the authors, Ann Jorgensen of Garrison, Iowa.

"It makes you really look at the figures to see if you're making money or losing money so you can react in the proper way, Jorgensen said.

"We're in an economic time where your banker wants to know your cash flow, profit projection and cost of production — all pencil-pushing activities."

The problem, said Jorgensen, is that farmers traditionally have concentrated on raising crops while shunning paperwork.

"They tend to buy a desk, let papers pile up and not know how to file them," she said.

The book outlines basic plans for sorting the "tons of paper that arrive in the mail every day," from farm magazines and tax bills to business letters and junk mail.

The book offers a system for creating files for important items "so information flows and doesn't get into a bottleneck. Do a little filing every day and it's a piece of cake."

There are motivational tips, such as put a red dot on a document each time it is handled, and "if it gets measles, you've wasted a lot of time."

Jorgensen said farmers often write important field information on a scrap of paper or the back of an envelope, then put in in their pocket.

Such problems can be solved by carrying a small metal storage box with a clipboard on top.

Notes and receipts can be slipped safely inside and taken to the office for filing on a regular basis.

The book, published by Wallace Homestead Book Co. in Lombard, Ill., also urges farmers to get away from the "buy it in the spring and pay for it in the fall" system and to ask suppliers to send monthly bills.

Jorgensen said she and co-authors Julianne Anderson of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Janice Geiken of Vinton, Iowa, developed an efficient farm office system through "the trial-and-error method — a poor use of time," and decided to write the book to save others that trouble.

Good records allow farmers to create the kind of economic projections bankers seek.

The women also distribute a "Farm Home Offices" catalog in which they offer custom-designed worksheets and other office supplies to make farm bookkeeping easier.

Woods succeeds Dunbar

Ag dean introduces open door policy

By BRUCE NEY
Staff Writer

The former head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry at Purdue University has assumed the duties of dean of K-State's College of Agriculture.

Walter Woods, 53, from Lafayette, Ind., succeeds John Dunbar, who retired on June 30.

Woods, who has more than 20 years of animal science teaching and research experience at five universities, said he is looking forward to the challenges offered at K-State.

"Probably the most interesting part will be interacting with people. Because of arriving just at the end of summer school and the students being gone during the last month, I have had the opportunity of probably meeting somewhere around a dozen students," he said.

Woods plans to maintain an open-door policy for students and faculty as much as his schedule will allow.

Woods said there are several reasons why he wanted to become an agriculture dean.

"I'm an individual who likes to think if I make a decision, that I can make a contribution by that decision. So, one of the reasons was that I thought I saw an opportunity to make a contribution," he said. "Secondly, I enjoy a challenge and obviously trying to effectively represent agriculture in the broadest sense of K-State represents a challenge.

"The third reason — and you have to put all of these together — was that Kansas being a major agriculture state, and K-State being a major land grant university, represents where a lot of action is going to be. Putting those things together led to my decision."

Since his arrival, Woods has taken time to visit the college's various departments to get acquainted with the staff as well the programs being carried out by each department.

"I have tried to get acquainted with the staff, programs and activities," he said. "This broad overview has been very exciting to me, to see the breadth and depth of the programs that are under way here at K-State."

He said he has both long-term and short-term goals for the agriculture college.

"The short term is to get acquainted with as many of the programs, staff and students as fast as I can and that takes a lot of time," he said. "Two, is to get acquainted with people in the state. Three, is to understand the needs of Kansas agriculture and to then make sure our programs, teaching, research and extension are meeting those needs as well as we can."

Woods plans to strengthen the agriculture alumni program "so they can assist in recruiting faculty and students for K-State," he said.

Originally from Virginia, Woods received his bachelor of science degree in agriculture from Murray State University in Kentucky. He completed his master's degree in animal nutrition at the University of Kentucky and a doctorate in animal nutrition at Oklahoma State University.

New University class serves to push ASK

By The Collegian Staff

The Department of Political Science is offering students a special class this fall — Public Policy Issues. The three-credit-hour course will focus on policy issues in Kansas and their effect on higher education in the state.

Students enrolled in the course will take part in the lobbying process in Topeka, research public policy issues, study the gubernatorial race in Kansas and look at the budget process in the Kansas Legislature. The course is being taught by Aruna Michie, assistant professor of political science.

Involvement with the K-State chapter of Associated Students of Kansas will also be a course requirement. Kevin Elmore, senior in computer science and ASK campus director, said he and Michie will provide guidance in this area for class members.

"The idea (for the class) sprang from the fact that ASK, as a unit on campus, is not as strong as it should be," Elmore said.

The course, POLSC 790, will be offered from 1:05 to 3:35 p.m. on Tuesdays and is open to all students, regardless of major.

Students wanting information about the course may contact Elmore at the Student Governing Association office in the Union.

Iowa, religious schools clash over standards of education

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Leaders of two fundamentalist churches are asking a federal judge to bar the state of Iowa from imposing its educational standards on their small, religion-based schools.

The issue is crucial, fundamentalists say, because public education is failing and they must teach their children as they wish, using large doses of the Bible and discipline. Parents of the children say they're willing to go to jail, if necessary.

The state, proud of its traditionally high literacy, argued during the first week of testimony in lawsuits brought by the churches that it must enforce its standards to guarantee that all Iowa children receive a sound education.

"Parents' rights are sacred in law, but they are not absolute," said Ivan Webber, a Keokuk lawyer defending the state. "That's why we have child abuse laws. That's why we have child labor laws."

But the church schools say schooling is part of their ministry, and argue that state regulation of their schools violates their constitutional protections of freedom of religion.

"We believe in civil government, but it can't interfere with the work of our ministry," testified the Rev. David Jaspers, pastor of Fellowship Baptist Church in Marshalltown and head of the 130-student Central Iowa Christian Academy.

Suits filed by the Marshalltown church school and the 64-student Keokuk Christian Academy challenge a state law requiring that private schools meet state standards and use state-certified teachers. Under the state's truancy laws, parents can be prosecuted for not sending their children to an approved school.

The state Department of Public Instruction says 77 of 230 private schools in Iowa are not state-approved.

Similar disputes have cropped up in Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota and other Midwestern states as fundamentalists say they want to challenge the basic underpinnings of public responsibility for educating children. They see education as simply another arm of the church, and don't want government intervening in how their children are taught.

Last May, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled in a similar case involving the Calvary Baptist Christian Academy in Charles City that the state had a clear right to regulate schools.

Tire plant closing hits Oklahoma town

By The Associated Press

MIAMI, Okla. — Now the efforts begin in earnest to retread a Miami economy that has rolled comfortably along on B.F. Goodrich Co. tires for 40 years.

Even after weeks of rumors, the announcement Friday that the giant tire manufacturer would close its $40 million Miami plant in six months took this northeastern Oklahoma community of 15,000 by surprise.

The effect was widespread.

"It's certainly the talk of the day," one storekeeper said, smiling wryly with the understatement.

The 1,900 employees at the plant represent one of every six people working in Ottawa County. An average annual wage is in the $19,000 range — $13 and $14 an hour.

The $55 million annual payroll ripples at least 50 miles in all directions, into southeastern Kansas and southwestern Missouri.

The future of hundreds more jobs in support industries and retail trade could hinge on how Miami leaders react to the crisis.

"We have to try and take up the slack before it gets away from us," said Joe Thompson, executive director of the Miami Chamber of Commerce. "The milk has been spilled, and we can't afford the luxury of just sitting around crying about it."

The goal, he told leaders gathered to discuss the closing Friday, is to "make it a short-term recession."

City Commissioner Dick Seybolt said Miami officials should view the closing as a chance to bring new industry to the city.

"This is an opportunity for us. Nothing happens until you have a problem," Seybolt said. "We have a big one."

A group called Miami 2000 has been in place for a year, exploring ways to diversify the community's economic base. Its role acquires new urgency.

Miami civic leaders have asked their representatives to inventory programs to help the community and, in particular, Goodrich employees.

They want to explore how other communities similarly affected responded.

They speak of Miami's access to railways and an interstate highway, a sophisticated vocational training system, state tax inducements for new industry and the picturesque countryside jeweled with popular lakes.

It has a bustling downtown with mall-like streets, an active junior college.

"One guy told me you've just got to play the hand you're dealt," said Miami pharmacist Willie Osborn. "I think that's what we need to do."

The meetings with representatives of the state Economic Development Commission begin next week.

Grover Phillips, director of the department's industrial division, said state officials would like to interest another tire manufacturer in the Goodrich plant, although Goodrich officials said they tried and failed to find a new operator.

"Tire manufacturing is alive and well in Oklahoma. It's a good climate for tire manufacturing," Phillips said, pointing to operations by Uniroyal at Ardmore, Goodyear at Lawton and Firestone-Dayton in Oklahoma City.

"We need to get some jobs and that's what it's really all about," Nickles said. "We're going to have to look under some stones."

Jones, recently back from a trip to Japan, said he had spoken with the chairman of the Bridgestone Tire and Rubber Co. about locating a plant in Oklahoma. Jones said he expected a site selection committee to visit Miami.

"Maybe Miami would have a good shot at it," Jones said. "It has a solid work force, a good plant. ...I think it at least would be in the running."

The plant manufactures farm equipment tires, off-the-road vehicle tires and radial heavy-duty truck tires.

B.F. Goodrich Tire Group President Robert A. Eisentrout said the company had been losing money in the large tire segments of the overall tire market, primarily because of depressed market conditions and the increased imports now sold in the United States.

Big Lakes improves handicapped access

By The Collegian Staff

The Big Lakes Regional Council and Certified Development Company will move to a new location because of a need for handicapped accessibility.

The new location, at 104 S. Fourth St., is on the second floor of the old Union Bank Building, above Seiferts Department Store.

Big Lakes Regional Council is a voluntary association of local governments established to reinforce and strengthen local governments in the region it serves and to help provide more efficient and economical service through inter-governmental cooperation. Big Lakes serves governing bodies in the five-county area of Riley, Geary, Clay, Pottawatomie and Marshall counties.

The new offices, to be occupied on Aug. 30, can be entered either by stairs or an elevator at the east entrance. Curb cuts at the sidewalks near the building and a no-rise door entrance will assist in providing the handicapped entrance into the new offices.

Big Lakes has a two-year lease on the office space, which will not be affected by the downtown mall project, although it will be across the street from other downtown redevelopment work. The building is one block west of the actual mall site.

Parking for the new offices can be found in nearby city parking lots, which have two-hour time limits. Other lots with longer hours can be found at the corners of Third and Humboldt, Fifth and Pierre, Fifth and Humboldt and Third and Houston streets. All are within 1½ blocks of the new location.

Authorities arrest Tutu's son for swearing at police officer

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Bishop Desmond Tutu's son was arrested under state-of-emergency laws and imprisoned Monday, accused of swearing at a white policeman, his lawyer said.

The bishop, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize for his anti-apartheid work, said the incident made him feel proud.

"You speak your mind, even if you speak in somewhat picturesque language. I should say I am proud," the black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg told The Associated Press.

His son Trevor, a 29-year-old account executive with a Johannesburg advertising company, was jailed for 14 days, lawyer Richard Spoor said.

He was put in Diepkloof Prison in Soweto, and is denied access to family or a lawyer under the state-of-emergency regulations, which were imposed July 21 in 36 towns.

Police announced that 66 more people have been detained since Friday under the regulations. They reported holding 1,094, and said an additional 1,103 had been detained and released.

In the Indian Ocean port city of Durban, police arrested the white director of a church-supported community-services agency despite objections from southern Africa's ranking Roman Catholic official, Archbishop Denis Hurley.

And in Cape Town, the Rev. Allan Boesak, a leader of the anti-apartheid United Democratic Front, said some 20,000 people were expected to join in a march Wednesday demanding the release of Nelson Mandela from the city's Pollsmoor Prison despite the white-minority government's threats of tough action.

"I presume...(authorities) will call out the army and the police and we will see once again the predictable response of the South African government to peaceful protest," Boesak told a news conference at his parish church in Belleville South, a mixed-race suburb of Cape Town.

Mandela, leader of the outlawed guerrilla movement, the African National Congress, is serving a life term imposed in 1964 on conviction of plotting sabotage.

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

President Duane Acker's June 27 resignation tops the list of changes in University administration which occurred during the summer.

Acker, the University's 11th president, plans to relinquish his position June 30, 1986, at the completion of his 11th year as president.

"We express a tremendous appreciation for the fantastic 10 years at Kansas State University," Acker said at a June 27 news conference to announce his plans to leave the presidential post. "We're looking forward to the 11th (year) with a lot of things to get done."

Acker has compiled a list of priority items he wants to accomplish in his last year as president. Heading the list is an effort to improve student retention.

Part of the effort will involve improving and enlarging student advising.

"This year, we have (the equivalent of) 50 full-time faculty advising students compared to last year when we had 37.5," Acker said.

Acker has made no immediate plans for his future.

"At this stage, things are wide open to the private sector but also to the public sector, including other universities," Acker said.

Changes also occurred among University vice presidents during the summer months.

William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, was selected to replace former vice president of Student Affairs Chester E. Peters, who retired June 30.

Sutton is responsible for the University's educational and student services. He has been charged with the responsibility of reorganizing educational and student support services, after consideration of recommendations by the Board of Regents and a University task force, announced in February.

Sutton, formerly provost and Germans arrest secretary as spy

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — The first person arrested in the country's spreading espionage scandal is a 50-year-old secretary in the president's office who had access to secret cables from West German embassies, authorities said Monday.

An Interior Ministry spokesman said Margarete Hoeke, a secretary in the office of President Richard von Weizsaecker's office, was suspected of spying for East Germany.

"I'm afraid she can cause a lot of damage," spokesman Michael-Andreas Butz told reporters. "But not as much as Tiedge can cause."

The major figure in the spy scandal is Hans Joachim Tiedge, a counter-espionage official who last week fled to East Germany. Tiedge was in charge of combating East German spying in West Germany and some officials believe he was a "mole" planted years ago by East Germany.

He defected after authorities began a search for three people who disappeared and are believed to have fled to East Germany. The defection of Tiedge also raised concern that Western agents operating in East Germany may be exposed and that NATO intelligence operations may have been compromised.

Government officials have said privately that hasty arrangements were made to bring some undercover operatives out of the Soviet bloc before they could be exposed by Tiedge.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said West Germany's NATO allies, including the United States, were attempting to determine if Tiedge's defection had harmed other Western intelligence agences.

Federal prosecutors on Monday reported they had opened a new espionage investigation against an employee in the Koblenz-based military procurements office. The employe's name was not disclosed.

Nichols ready to open after 2 years of work

By SUE DAWSON
Staff Writer

Finishing touches have readied Nichols Hall for service, adding it to the list of University building projects completed this summer.

Earlier this month the speech and computer science departments moved into Nichols, which has been under construction for nearly two years. Nichols was destroyed by fire in 1968 and had remained empty because no concensus could be reached as to the future of the building.

The building will house offices and classrooms, said Helen Cooper, University building space analyst. Classes have been scheduled in Nichols for this semester.

Shelving units for 200,000 books from Farrell Library have not been installed in Nichols because the units that arrived earlier this year did not meet the University's specifications, Cooper said. She said the correct shelves have been ordered and are scheduled to arrive in November.

While the estimated cost of Nichols was $5.58 million, Cooper said she did not know how close the actual cost of the building would be to that figure.

The formal dedication of Nichols will be in October.

Co-operative home economics extension offices have been relocated from Umberger Hall to Justin Hall. Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Home Economics, said the move comes as a result of goals set by President Duane Acker in 1983.

Unused laboratories were remodeled and made into offices for home economics and extension faculty. The rooms now serve as offices and meeting rooms, as well as classrooms.

Art classes previously taught in Justin have been moved to the second floor of the Art Building. New studios are being built at the north end of the Art Building by dividing an old industrial laboratory. The remodeling will also create additional classroom, office and gallery space.

An addition will be made to Cardwell Hall to house the new Ion Collision Laboratory for use by the Department of Physics.

James Richard, director of James R. MacDonald Laboratory, said state funding of $600,000 and a grant of $3 million from the U.S. Department of Energy will be used for con-

Coliseum could face up to 6-month delay

By JERI HEIDRICK
Campus Editor

Ground breaking for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum could be delayed as much as six months, President Duane Acker said after Monday's meeting with representatives of the architecture firm responsible for the project.

Gossen Livingston Associates, the Wichita architecture firm in charge of the coliseum project, will draft a list of possible construction changes, potentially including a decrease in seating capacity, Acker said in a press conference Monday in the Union Director's Conference Room.

"The architects will now discuss where they will go from here and what changes need to be made in the program," Acker said. "They will achieve construction within the projected budget ($14.5 million). We will proceed to build the coliseum within the total budget of $16.1 million.

"It's imperative that we have a high-quality facility."

The meeting with the architectural firm came a week after the announcement that the lowest construction bid for the 16,000-seat coliseum was $3.4 million above the budgeted construction cost.

Acker said he and other University officials will meet with the architecture firm on Sept. 6 for the list of possible changes.

Another aspect Acker touched on was his upcoming September recommendation to the Board of Regents that the Department of University Facilities be consolidated with the Department of Administration and Finance. The board would then review the program's structure, to be proposed by George Miller, vice president of administration and finance.

Acker also said during the news conference that William Sutton, vice president of educational and student services, will be refining that department's organizational structure, which will also need approval by the regents.

When asked about the semester's decreasing enrollment figures,

Young diplomat dies in plane crash

AUBURN, Maine — Samantha Smith, the schoolgirl whose correspondence with Soviet leader Yuri Andropov launched her on a mission to promote world peace, died in a fiery plane crash along with her father as they were returning from a trip to England, her mother said Monday.

Six other people aboard the Bar Harbor Airlines plane also died when the Beechcraft 99 turboprop plane crashed at 10:20 p.m. Sunday in rain a half-mile from the Auburn-Lewiston Municipal Airport, authorities said.

At a news conference in Bangor, the airline identified the two crew members killed as Roy Fraunhofer, the pilot, and David Owen, the first officer, both from the Bangor area. The others were not immediately identified, but the mother of 13-year-old Samantha said her husband, Arthur, and daughter were dead.

Smith said her husband and daughter were returning from a two-week stay in England where Samantha had been filming the new weekly ABC-TV action-adventure show "Lime Street," which was to begin Sept. 21.

Samantha attracted worldwide attention two years ago when she wrote to the late Soviet leader Andropov expressing concern about the potential for nuclear war. Kremlin leaders responded by treating her to a two-week, all-expenses-paid tour of the Soviet Union.

Reagan to announce trade decision

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — The White House said today that President Reagan, while continuing his advocacy of free trade, is "prepared to take steps" against unfair competition as he nears a decision on shoe imports.

Spokesman Larry Speakes said the president has not made a decision on the shoe import issue and he does not expect any decision before Wednesday.

An administration official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said over the weekend that Reagan is likely to reject recommendations of some advisers that he increase tariffs on imported footwear, or impose a quota, to protect domestic manufacturers.

The president, vacationing at his ranch near here, said in a telephone interview with a radio correspondent that he would not tip his hand about his decision, but he remains opposed to protectionist measures.

Speakes said, "The president has always coupled free trade with fair trade and we will certainly take a close look at those countries or cases in which unfair trade practices are used to harm U.S. industries and be prepared to take steps in those instances."

Truck crashes into pool,

WINFIELD — A pickup truck ran into a public swimming pool in Winfield Sunday evening, injuring two boys standing near the pool but missing more than a dozen people in the water.

The truck driven by Carl O. Buell, 55, landed in the shallow end of the pool at about 6:30 p.m., police said. Buell was not injured, and the cause of the accident remained under investigation.

The two injured boys were walking away from a chain-link fence unaware that the truck was headed toward the swimming pool, located about 100 feet from the road.

The boys were pinned by the fence when the truck crashed through it. David Bromlow, 15, who had to be freed by rescue workers, was listed in fair condition at St. Francis Medical Center in Wichita with a fractured skull and lacerations. Aaron B. Pegorsch, 14, who freed himself, was treated for lacerations and released.

INTERNATIONAL

China, Vietnam trade prisoners

PEKING — China and Vietnam on Monday exchanged prisoners captured in their border conflict, state-run China Central Television News reported.

It said China released 15 captured Vietnamese in return for 19 Chinese at "Zero-Kilometer Point" on the road between China's Friendship Pass and the Vietnamese border town of Dong Dang.

The broadcast identified the Chinese prisoners as "illegally kidnapped border inhabitants" and the Vietnamese as military personnel captured in the border areas of Yunnan province and Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region.

The Vietnam News Agency said Aug. 15 its Chinese captives "illegally infiltrated into Vietnamese territory."

China and Vietnam, former allies, have fought a sporadic border war since 1979, when Peking briefly invaded Vietnam as "punishment" for Vietnam's occupying Cambodia and ousting the Peking-backed Khmer Rouge regime.

Insurance company pays Air-India

NEW DELHI, India — A government insurance company said Monday it has paid Air-India $95 million in a settlement for the crash June 23 of one of the state-owned airline's jumbo jets that killed all 329 people aboard.

The settlement is the highest single claim in the history of civil aviation, according to a company statement.

Ashok Goenka, chairman of the General Insurance Corp., said the settlement would enable Air-India to replace the Boeing 747 that plunged into the ocean off the Irish coast.

The plane had left Canada and was scheduled to stop in London before continuing on to India when it disappeared from radar screens and crashed without making a distress call.

Indian officials have speculated that a bomb caused the crash.

PEOPLE

Professer reunited with rescuer

DENVER — It took 40 years of searching, but Inger-Johanne "Tutta" Gerwig has finally found the soldier who jumped into the water and saved her life in 1945.

"All my life I wondered who he was. Finally, I found him," the University of Colorado professor said Sunday of rescuer Oddvar Nass.

Gerwig said she was just 10 years and could not swim when she fell in while reaching for a starfish outside Oslo, Norway.

The Norwegian language and literature professor learned that her rescuer had been assigned to the 99th Infantry Battalion.

Politicians' wives to write novel

KENNEBUNK, Maine — Jane Muskie, wife of former Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie, and Abigail McCarthy, wife of former Sen. Eugene McCarthy, have teamed up to write a spy novel.

The authors "have concocted a political thriller centering on the drugging-kidnapping of the vice president's wife," according to Publisher's Weekly. The book, "One Woman Lost," is to be published next spring by Charles Scribners Sons, according to book editor Judith Kern in New York.

Another prominent Maine resident, Sen. William S. Cohen, teamed up with Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado on the spy novel "The Double Man," published this year by William Morrow and Co. Inc.

Israeli soldiers offer mercenary service

By The Associated Press

More than 100 working overseas

TEL AVIV, Israel — You won't find them listed in the Yellow Pages, and they don't hand out calling cards. But their business spans four continents — from the palaces of Third World autocrats to the limousines of European industrialists.

They are mercenaries, men in their 20s and 30s with experience in elite Israeli combat units. They have become a new export product for this country, selling their expertise as bodyguards and weapons instructors.

Many of the Israeli mercenaries and their contacts refuse to openly discuss their business for fear of exposing their identities and compromising their clients. But from private talks and various media reports the following picture emerges:

At least 100 Israelis are employed as private guards and personal bodyguards overseas. Job offers are advertised by word-of-mouth among veterans of elite army units, and the deals are sealed with a handshake.

Recruitment is sometimes carried out through former Israeli security agents who reside abroad or through wealthy expatriate Israelis, said a reserve army captain, who is deputy manager of an established Tel Aviv security firm. He spoke on condition that he be identified only as Aryeh.

Airlines are some of the most recent employers, he said.

After the June 14 hijacking of a TWA plane that resulted in American hostages being held for 17 days, a major Western airline put out word that it was seeking 20 security guards for its worldwide flights, Aryeh said.

Aryeh would not give the name of the airline for publication but said he got the information through a U.S. contact and circulated it among some of his friends.

"There are other mercenaries — French, English. But what makes Israelis special is a reputation for loyalty. They are trained to be loyal in the army and loyalty in this business is a hard trait to buy," said Aryeh, who is lean and brash and wore dark sunglasses through most of the interview.

Aryeh said he recently returned from a two-day job in London. "Some rich guy called up and said he needed two guards for a short job. They didn't need to speak English, just be there," he said, declining to give further details.

A loose Israeli mercenary network extends all the way to the Philippines, where Israelis are part of the small private army that guards President Ferdinand Marcos, according to Aryeh Egozi, a reporter for the mass circulation Yediot Ahronot newspaper who has studied these professional soldiers.

Egozi also said in an interview that Israelis guard wealthy landowners in the Philippines, businessmen in Mexico and industrialists who fear kidnappings in Germany and Italy.

Another Israeli who described himself as a "security expert" but declined to be identified said Israelis guard the gaming tables at the Sun City casino in Bophuthatswana, one of South Africa's so-called "homelands" for its black majority.

Israelis also guard the leaders of another "homeland" — Ciskei — where several Israeli businessmen have invested, said the security specialist, whose Tel Aviv office walls are covered with advertising posters for Israeli-made weapons.

Israel has sent military advisers to Africa, Asia and Latin America to teach weapons and the protection of government leaders.

"These jobs have much to offer our young men: It's exciting. It's a way to see the world, and it's excellent money," said the security expert.

He declined to say if the Israeli government was involved officially or unofficially in the employment of Israeli guards abroad. The Foreign Ministry also declined to comment.

An experienced guard can make as much as $50 an hour on a bodyguard assignment, according to David Dor, who owns a private investigations office in Tel Aviv and has worked abroad.

Many mercenaries are banned from carrying guns in foreign countries. "Some of them make do with substitutes such as chemical sprays and others take a chance and carry guns anyway," said Dor.

Eytan Savir, a 23-year-old reserve army lieutenant who has just finished a five-year hitch, is going to the United States to teach an Israeli-developed method of self-defense to Jewish communities.

Prison health staffs serve more inmates

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Despite hefty inmate population increases during the past five years, the size of medical staffs at two Kansas prison facilities has remained nearly the same, according to a report presented Monday to a legislative panel.

The report, by the Legislative Division of Post Audit, showed the number of medical positions at Kansas State Industrial Reformatory increased from 18.5 in 1981 to 19 in 1985. However, the population of the Hutchinson prison jumped from 891 to 1,301 inmates during the same period.

Moreover, the report presented to the Legislative Post Audit Committee, showed the medical staff at the Kansas Correctional Vocational Training Center in Topeka decreased from seven positions in 1981 to 6.5 positions in 1985 while the population increased from 165 to 212.

The report, which studied health care only at the two facilities, said the decrease of medical staff at KCVTC was because a part-time dentist position was taken off the state payroll and turned over to a private contractor.

Medical staffs at the two institutions also are smaller than what the U.S. Department of Justice requires for federal prisons, according to the report prepared by Leo Hafner, a senior auditor with the post audit division.

The report said officials of both institutions are having trouble meeting the dental needs of inmates. The worst problem was at the reformatory, which had a backlog of 362 requests for dental services, dating back to late 1984.

Religion is a 'fairy tale' for believers

DANIEL GRUBB
Collegian Columnist

Christians and Moslems like to boast about having "advanced" religions as opposed to such "primitive" religions as those of the Romans, Egyptians, Greeks, Hindus or Buddhists.

I have to admit complete befuddlement as to what the distinction between an "advanced" religion and a "primitive" one is. Both types have official dogma, accepted superstition, prophesies, appeals to a god or gods and other nonsense.

All that seems different is that Christianity, Judaism and Islam are either "our" religion or closely associated with "our" religion. And, of course, "our" religion must be correct.

Now maybe I'm being dense, but isn't it strange that each religion swears up and down that it alone is the final and unalterable truth and that all others are either incomplete or wrong? Isn't it strange that each one is based on a "faith" that all others are false? And isn't it strange that to explain why they believe the way they do, all pious people say "because it's the truth?" Now I ask, how is one to choose?

Let us stand back and look at the various beliefs that people have accepted. Every religion has miracles. Everyone believes that people can obtain special knowledge through its practice. Many teach that the hardships of life can be escaped by following the appropriate teachings.

In short, all are advanced fairy tales that cater to the psychological problems of life. We often want the world to be different than it is.

I would say that all religion I have seen, heard or read about is glorified consultation of entrails to divine a course in life. All religions are based on a belief in a supernatural, a concept that if not self-contradictory, is at best of doubtful validity. All are based, to a large extent, on an ethnocentric view of history. For example, the Christians harbor great distain for the Roman persecutions, but fail to acknowledge their own persecutions of the pagans, Jews, Moslems and Indians. Other examples abound in other religions.

Because of this systematic contempt for any truth which disagrees with their own viewpoint, all religions should be considered in a critical light. I believe that when this is done all will be seen to be fundamentally flawed, and it will become apparent that they should be discarded. Oh, they do have value in understanding the credulity of the human race, but intellectually they are worse than useless.

Because I take this view of the superstitions of culture, I believe that all religions are dangerous, no matter how good some adherents may be. In almost every case, a militant fundamentalism appears, such as is happening now in the United States, and has happened in the Middle East already. Persecutions often follow, sometimes killing the great minds of the time. If for no other reason, religions should be guarded against; to do otherwise is cultural suicide. Remember, one of Socrates' sins was supposed to be atheism.

I feel that all of us should be aware and beware of the dangers inherent in superstitions. Eventually, all will degenerate into persecutions, all will discourage learning except in special areas, and all begin with the horrific concept of faith, a belief that nothing could possibly disprove the tenets of the religion.

We all need to become aware of what to expect when fundamentalism gains power, be it in the Roman Empire, Byzantium, modern Iran or the United States. It is part of our duty as a society to argue against this menace and to defend the freedom of opinion and inquiry that is necessary to truly solve any of the mysteries of life.

ANYONE MAY submit a guest column offering an opinion on a topic of public interest. Columns should be about three double-spaced typewritten pages. Travis helps school image

It's a new look, a new image and a new athletic director for the University this year.

So far Athletic Director Larry Travis is proving he is interested in the "extra-man advantage" both on and off the field.

Travis, with the assistance of several campus organizations, began the fall semester with Kickoff '85 — an alcohol-free event which drew a crowd of more than 2,000 to KSU Stadium Saturday. The program allowed students to discard inhibitions, have fun and get excited about K-State athletics.

Several volunteers, including Travis, combined their talents to paint the stairs of the stadium purple and white in an effort to enhance the image of the University's athletics.

In a move to instill a new upbeat image of the athletic program, Travis altered the Wildcat logo and added the Big Eight color green to Willie's uniform and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletic's stationery.

Travis has been criticized by some individuals for moving up the starting times for three football games. But, according to Travis, the move is part of his marketing strategy. The game times were changed so out-of-town alumni may return from Manhattan football games at a reasonable hour and to accommodate members of the media.

Some faculty members participated in Kickoff '85 and showed students they want them to gain more than a formal education. However, while students had a chance to meet other students, administration officials were conspicuously absent.

This absence is symbolic of the interest some administrators show toward students. If University administrators would get out of their offices and discover what K-State is about — in the manner Travis is — more students may decide to remain here and pay more attention to intercollegiate athletics.

Travis symbolizes the type of leadership needed to get the University, as well as the athletic program, back on its feet.

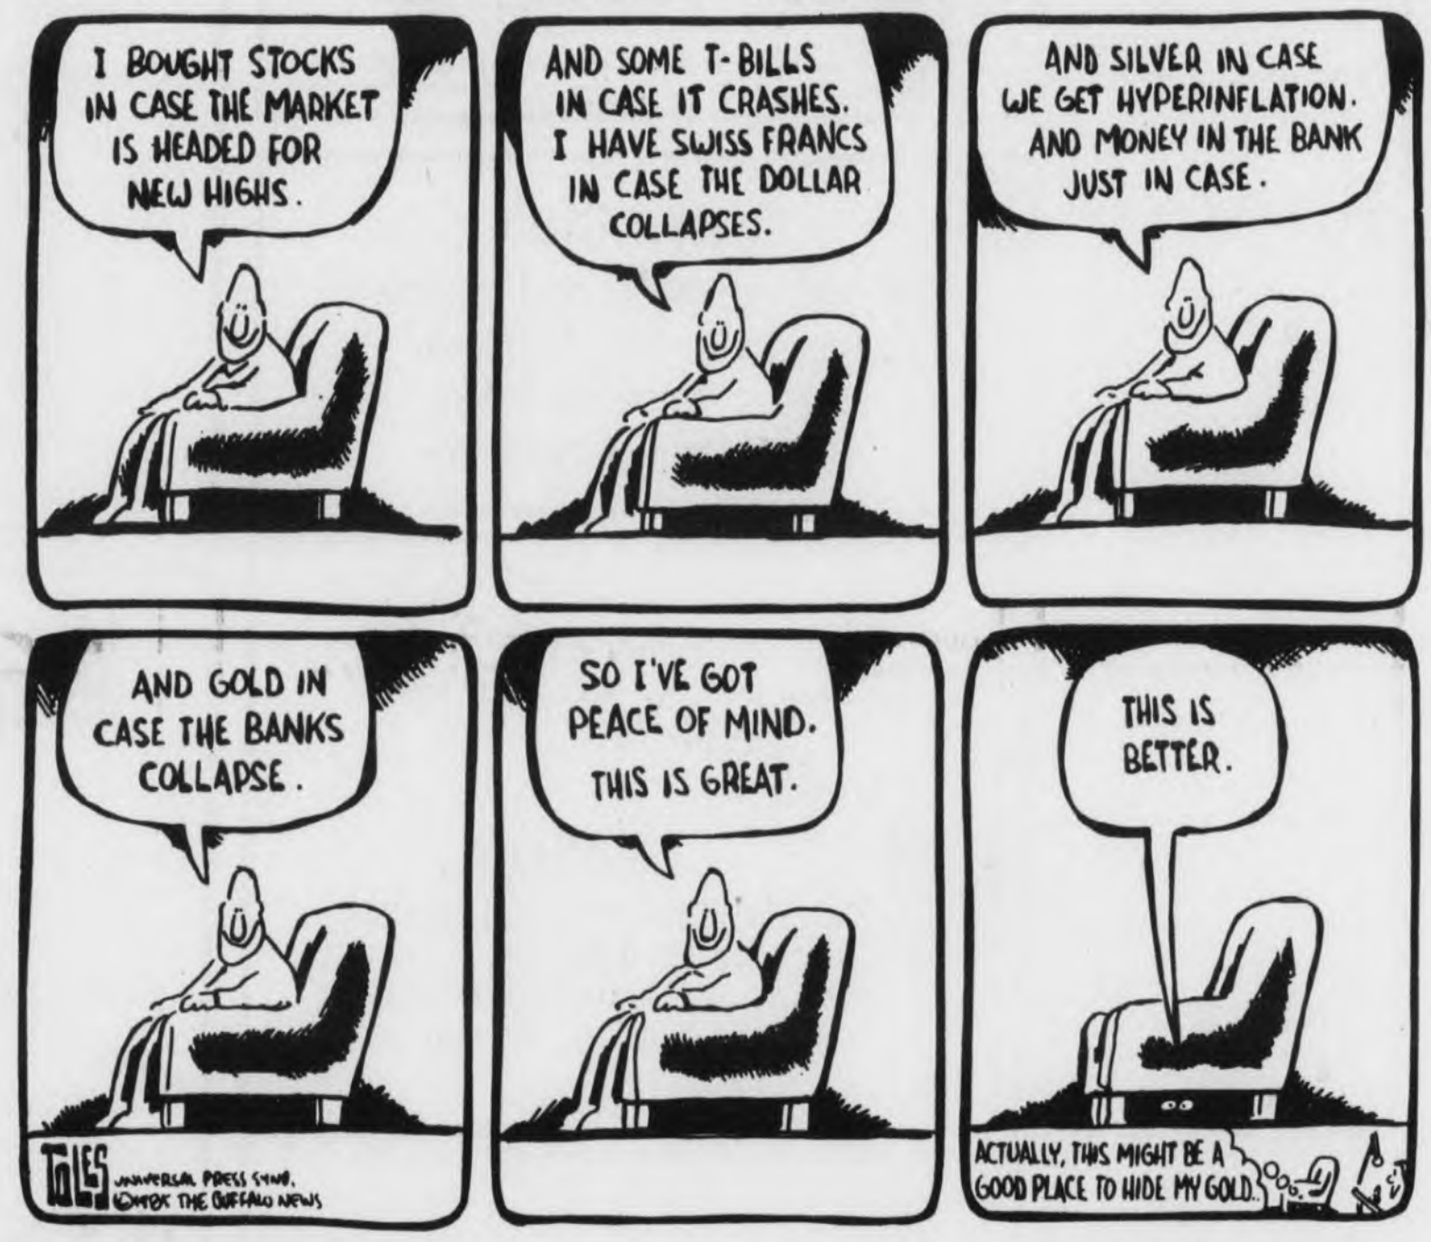
Coliseum needs redesign

It may be time to say "told you so."

Last spring much controversy arose when students, faculty and Manhattan residents began to speak up about the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum. Should there be 16,000 or 14,000 seats? Has there been adequate planning for the facility? Questions have been asked on almost every aspect, from whether it should be built to what to name it if it ever is built.

A few student senators succeeded in stirring things up for a while by circulating a petition asking the Board of Regents to stop the issuance of bonds for the coliseum until market and pro forma studies were done. Unfortunately, not much came of it; the project was on a tight schedule.

University President Duane Acker announced at a press conference Monday that ground breaking for the Coliseum may be delayed up to six months because base construction bids ranged from $3.4 million to $8.2 million above the projected cost. This does not include such luxuries as office furniture or landscaping.



Acker said he was "surprised and disappointed" that even the lowest bid was more than $3 million off, but there are many who are not the least surprised. The blatant lack of planning, and the blind allegiance to that almighty figure — 16,000 seats — comes to mind.

Yes, there were warnings and there were questions (most of them unanswered). But there is still hope. And there is still time — perhaps six months — to take one last long hard look at the coliseum issue. Some questions could be asked again.

There are several options. More money could be collected. (Perhaps student services or academic programs could be cut to help with the construction costs and operating expenses.) There could be a huge bake sale to fund the additional $3 million. The project could be trashed completely. Or, the coliseum could be redesigned with fewer seats.

This "we're gonna do it no matter what the consequences" attitude is getting very old and less persuasive. It's time to look back and mend the mistakes of the past. Some pride could be swallowed along with a couple thousand seats.

Small talk: the art of returning students

KEVIN ELMORE
Collegian Columnist

Welcome back, campers!

Today's column is a direct result of an intense and debilitating writer's block, so please forgive my discourse into the inane. Today's inanity is an art that we all possess to varying degrees — the art of making small talk.

Small talk is essential for social survival in this busy first week. Anyone who tries to actually say anything of consequence just takes too much time. So, even though we all hate to listen to or take part in small talk, we've got to be able to do it as the need arises.

After speaking (briefly) with some of the best small talkers on campus, I've assembled this small guide to excellence in your meaningless babble.

Small talk conversation consists of an introductory greeting, three to five main body questions and a smooth exit line. During the conversation, the true small talk expert never uses the other person's name. This protects the speaker from terminating the conversation (and perhaps relationship) by mangling this poor soul's name in public.

This usually occurs immediately after they've correctly recalled your mother's maiden name and date of birth. In fact, one of my interviewees claims to be capable of introducing two people without ever knowing either of their names. For maximum effect, you should be able to conduct the entire conversation without ever really listening to the other participant's replies.

First impressions are always the first subject of any public relations class, and small talk is no exception to the public relations rulebook. Intro lines should only be used once, and should be delivered with a firm handshake and a glowing smile.

"How are you?" is standard table fare for all, and is noncommittal while being courteous. The slang "Hi" is still a biggie with the shy and introverted, and "What's Up?" gives the respondent time to ramble while the small talker conducts business on the side.

"Still no job, huh?" is a great way to toss a thorn in the side of those post-grads who come back time and time again. Finally, the staple "Good to see you again," which can be used sincerely or as a prelude to a snow job that makes John DeLorean look like an amateur.

Main body lines should be delivered with a quick glance for eye contact to reassure the listener that you are really interested, and not just scoping the immediate crowd. Three to five should be used; with less than three, the other person feels slighted. More than five and you lose that all-important "exit advantage."

The "exit advantage" is the knowledge that you made the move to terminate the conversation. Witn the advantage, you maintain that suave Big Man or Big Woman on Campus reputation.

"How was your summer?" "Where did you stay?" and "Where did you work?" all fit well together, and can be used sequentially to provide time for a high-speed name/face memory scan. "Still in the same major?" also assists in the identification process.

If you need to fill some dead air, "Buy your books yet?" and "Are all the bars this full?" lead into the standard "You won't believe how long I stood in line for..." spiel. Even though freshmen may be new to the small talk scene, insiders say that "Do you know where I can find a fake I.D.?" is shooting up the charts, and may soon challenge for that coveted No. 1 slot.

The exit line is the most vital part of the small talk conversation. Without that casual yet final withdrawal, the conversation enters what the experts call an "infinite loop."

The conversation drops to discussing the weather and class schedules until both participants stare ahead blankly and slack-jawed. And we all know what being slack-jawed does to a nice evening out on the town.

The perfect exit line is brief, and leaves the listener with the impression that you are a busy person with better things to do (refer to the "exit advantage" discussion above).

"See you around" and "Gotta go" are nice abrupt phrases to end a conversation that's not turning out well. More polite brush-offs are: "Do you know where the bathroom is?" or "Have you seen so-and-so tonight?" followed by a rapid stride in the indicated direction.

Promises of later contact always sound good, such as "Hey, give me a call sometime" or "We'll get together this week." Getting/freshening up a drink is a fave-rave with the social movers, and "I think I'll belly on up to the bar" always identifies a smooth small talker. (Freshmen can substitute "lemonade stand" or "pop machine" in place of "bar".)

Lately, smart pop-offs such as "Glad that you got to see me" have come into vogue, but the true small talker avoids comments that may spark sarcastic ripostes.

Well, gotta go. After conquering this writer's block, I really need to belly up to the bar. We'll do that lunch thing sometime, OK?

Bid for clemency fails

'Mercy killer' remains in jail

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A 76-year-old man sentenced to life in the "mercy killing" of his wife lost his bid for freedom Monday when two more Florida Cabinet members rejected the governor's recommendation to free him while he appeals his murder conviction.

"The law does not give one person the right to kill another because of illness or age," said Comptroller Gerald Lewis, the last of the six-member Cabinet to take a stand on the case of Roswell Gilbert.

Lewis' decision left Gov. Bob Graham with only two of the three votes required from members of the independently elected Cabinet to allow Gilbert to leave Avon Park Correctional Institution near Tampa.

"The law does not provide that an adult who commits a criminal act shall be judged according to age," Lewis said.

Agriculture Commissioner Doyle Conner announced earlier Monday that he would not support conditional commutation for Gilbert, who was convicted in May of first-degree murder.

"Mr. Gilbert made a choice outside the system, and now he's embroiled in the system," Conner said. "I don't want to change the system to suit him."

Upon learning he would not be freed, Gilbert told reporters, "I'm mad more than anything else and I'm angry."

"I think the whole thing is rather unfair because morally I had to do what I did," Gilbert said. "It's very disappointing and I think it's grossly unfair."

Graham had recommended Thursday that Gilbert be allowed to pursue his appeals from the Fort Lauderdale condominium where he twice shot his wife, Emily, after giving her a sedative.

Mrs. Gilbert, 73, suffered from Alzheimer's disease, a progressive deterioration of the brain, and osteoporosis, a painful ailment that causes deterioration of bones.

Gilbert's attorneys said he killed her out of love and no criminal thoughts were involved.

But prosecutors noted that Gilbert had to reload the pistol before firing the second shot and contended that he killed his wife because she had become a burden.

Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington and Secretary of State George Firestone had supported the governor's recommendation.

Conner said he hoped his decision would send a message to young people who lose touch with their elderly parents.

"I'm condemning young people who live on Wall Street and practice law and go to banks and offices every day and have elderly parents in Florida and don't know what's happening to them," Conner said.

"I think Florida is going to suffer as a result of this. But most importantly, elderly people, senior citizens in our state are the ones who are really suffering."

Conner said his office had received calls on the case from across the nation and said he spoke with one of Gilbert's neighbors who was uncomfortable about the possibility of the retired engineer returning home.

"We are receiving messages from all over the country," Conner said.

Tutu

two days after saying he feared being arrested for demanding the release of Mandela.

Boesak and 18 others face charges stemming from their attempt last month to enter a riot-torn black township which police had declared off-limits to anyone but residents and security officials.

One of his lawyers said Boesak, who is of mixed race, sought to have the hearing postponed.

South Africa's year of rioting, in which more than 620 people have been killed, claimed two more lives, police reported. They said a black man was shot to death after attacking a policeman in Port Elizabeth's New Brighton black township.

A black policeman who was in a vehicle set on fire by youths last week died Monday from his injuries, police added. The incident occurred in the nominally independent tribal homeland of Ciskei.

Trevor Tutu was arrested as he and his mother attended hearings in a Soweto courtroom for 90 of the 300 children arrested last week for boycotting classes. At one point, a very young boy was brought before the magistrate, and many people in the room sighed.

Witnesses said the younger Tutu made a remark about police wasting time chasing children, which prompted an officer to order him into the chief magistrate's office.

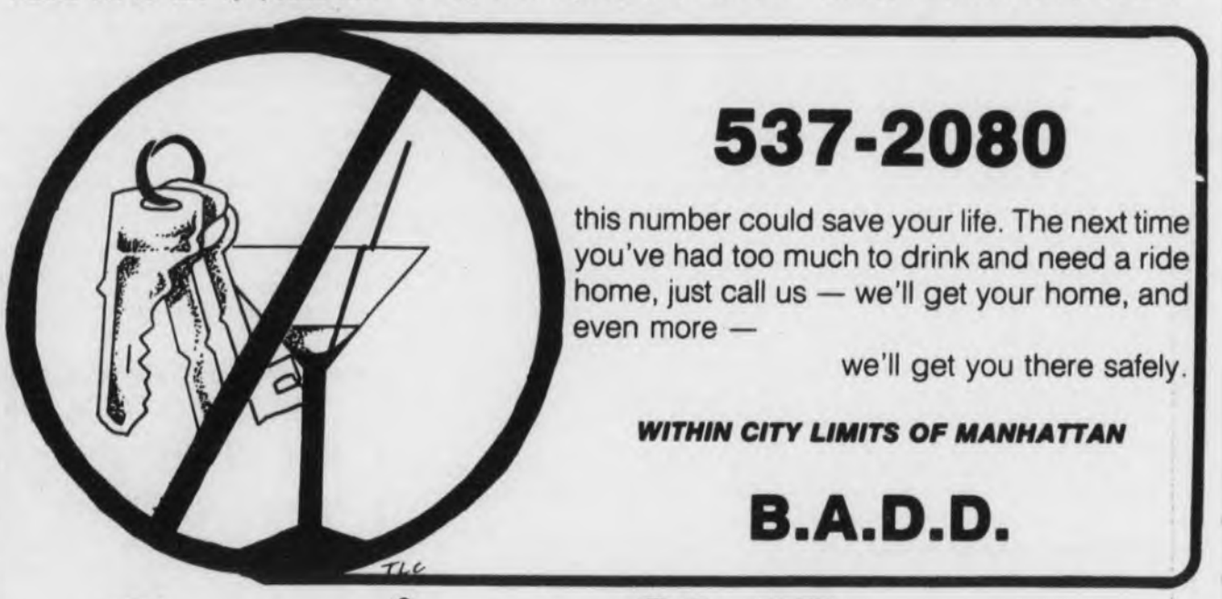
According to witnesses, Tutu and the policeman then argued in the hall. The young man accused the white officer of hypocrisy and allegedly used an obscenity.

The officer promptly arrested Tutu.

"My son was detained simply for the ego of that policeman," said the bishop's wife, Leah, who added that her husband had an "altercation" with the arresting policeman Friday.

"It is important who he is, but more than that it is a gross abuse of power," said Priscilla Jana, whose law firm is handling Tutu's case.

Bishop Tutu has three daughters.



His son, who is married, the father of one child and lives in Soweto, is not considered as much an activist as his father.

He and his mother were at court Monday as observers, although it was not clear if they were representing a particular organization. The judge postponed until October the case of the youths charged with boycotting classes.

In Durban, Archbishop Hurley, a white, told the AP in a telephone interview that security policemen ordered him out of the offices of the Diakonia organization as they arrested its director, Paddy Kearney.

Livestock program may aid cattle sales

By RUSTIN HAMILTON
Agriculture Editor

The exportation of U.S. cattle and livestock to foreign nations is awash with confusion, but a University professor is working to resolve the controversy.

With the addition of Bill Able, professor of animal sciences and industry, to the International Livestock Program in the position of assistant director, exporting livestock could become a more common occurrence in the United States — particularly in Kansas.

Able, who has been the livestock judging team coach for 16 years, is the chief operator of a program which strives to educate both foreign and U.S. livestock operators who export cattle, sheep, swine and horses. The director of the program is Don Good, head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

The program is funded by $40,000 in donations from private commodity groups and $80,000 from the Kansas Legislature.

"It will be our job to provide seminars which will teach the technical skills of livestock management to all the people involved in exporting," Able said. "This will include feeding and nutrition, health and the processing of livestock.

"We're not actually involved in the direct exporting of livestock ourselves," he said. "On the other hand, we are often the go-between for the buyer and the seller. Our first loyalty will be to Kansas, but we will be operating on a national basis."

Though Able will be traveling extensively in the United States and abroad, most of his work will still take place on campus. With the help of faculty members from animal sciences and industry, each area of management will be discussed at the seminars by a specialist in that field.

At this time, Able is writing a handbook which will list the health requirements necessary for the exportation of livestock from the United States.

"There are some countries we still cannot export to, primarily because of health reasons. Right now we cannot ship any livestock into Great Britain and our exports to China are very limited," Able said.

Able will soon travel to Washington, D.C., where he will meet with officials of the Foreign Agriculture Service to enlist support for the program.

An October trip to Chihuahua, Mexico, is likely. Plans call for Able to introduce the international program to livestock operators of Mexico.

Nicaragua detains 2 American boaters

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — An American couple who set sail from Florida to California via the Panama Canal has been held for almost three weeks under armed guard in Nicaragua after being charged with gunrunning, federal officials said Monday.

Lee and Dolores Lajeunesse of Fort Myers, both 53, have been detained at or near Nicaragua's Atlantic Ocean port of Bluefields since Aug. 7, 13 days after their departure, State Department spokesman Bill Callahan said in Washington.

The couple tried to enter the port to make repairs on their 60-foot ketch, the Wahine, Callahan said. Nicaraguan naval authorities towed the boat to port, then charged the couple with gunrunning after finding two pistols and a shotgun aboard the craft, he said.

The couple's daughter, Lynn Lajeunesse, also of Fort Myers, said the weapons were strictly for personal protection and to ward off sharks.

The U.S. embassy in Managua has been in contact with the couple by phone, but has been denied permission to visit them, Callahan said.

The Nicaraguan government has still not contacted the American embassy, which he said it is required by an international treaty to do whenever it detains a U.S. citizen, he said.

The embassy has lodged a formal protest over the incident, he said.

Callahan said it was unclear if charges remained pending against the couple.

The Americans were held for two days in an unknown location, then four days in a hotel, and since then on their boat, said Lynn Lajeunesse, 30.

"Every dime they had was taken from them, and they've been held under close guard the entire time," she said. "Apparently they haven't been abused physically, but they've been interrogated at least five times, once for eight hours."

Lynn Lajeunesse, who has not been in direct contact with her parents, said her information came the State Department and another daughter, Gwen Swanson of Minneapolis, who spoke with their parents on Aug. 10.

Both husband and wife are experienced sailors who traveled along the same route four years ago from Newport Beach, Calif., to Fort Myers, Ms. Lajeunesse said.

Judge sets new trial for Teamsters officer

By The Associated Press

AKRON, Ohio — A federal judge Monday granted a new trial for the uncle of Teamsters union president Jackie Presser, but said he would consider dismissing the embezzlement charges, which involve alleged payoffs from a Teamsters local.

Allen Friedman, who had been serving a three-year prison term on a 1983 conviction, was released on a personal signature bond after the ruling by U.S. District Judge Sam H. Bell.

Bell, who set no trial date, said he would decide after a Sept. 20 hearing whether to dismiss the charges, which accuse Friedman of accepting $165,000 from Teamsters Local 507 without doing any work from 1978-81. Presser is secretary-treasurer of the local.

Lawyers for Friedman contend the government withheld vital information from Friedman's trial, including unconfirmed reports that Presser was an FBI informant and that Presser was authorized by the government to participate in the alleged payroll-padding scheme that led to Friedman's indictment.

"I think it's time we all dispel the shadow of rumor and innuendo and shine the light of truth on the happenings before the last trial," said Bell. "By that I do not mean Presser's non-involvement or involvement, but why (the government) proceeded with this trial ... and indeed why we're here today."

Government attorneys told Bell in a closed conference Aug. 16 that they would agree to a dismissal of the embezzlement charges against Friedman rather than divulge confidential information about Presser.

Board names Nellis adviser of year

Duane Nellis, assistant professor of geography, has been named 1985 Student Organization Adviser of the Year by the University Activities Board.

The award was established in 1981 to recognize faculty advisers of student organizations for their time and contributions beyond their normal responsibilities. Nellis advises the campus chapter of Gamma Theta Upsilon, a geography honor society.

The University Activities Board is the sanctioning body for student organizations and is affiliated with the Student Governing Association.

Foundation establishes memorial

A memorial to former University professor Cho Chin Tsen has been established with the KSU Foundation.

Tsen, a prominent bakery scientist, died July 22 in Shanghai, China, of cancer. He was 62.

He joined the faculty in 1969 as a professor of grain science. Prior to that he worked at the American Institute of Baking in Chicago and the Canadian Department of Agriculture's Grain Research Laboratory.

Tsen was widely recognized for his work in developing methods to include high-protein enrichment of wheat-flour bread and for his research in the use of dough enhancers in bread.

The memorial will be used to promote cooperation in the field of grain science between the United States and China, said Charles W. Deyoe, head of the Department of Grain Science and Industry.

Butler joins continuing education

A native of Salina, Bill Butler, began work recently in the Division of Continuing Education as administrator of the Community Education program.

Butler is in charge of program development and administration for the Community Education program, which includes five sessions a year of gymnastics, aquatics and other special interest classes for the Manhattan area.

Butler came to campus from Dallas, where he worked for International Services Co. Previously he was outreach coordinator in Hays for the University of Kansas Medical Center and assistant athletic director of Fort Hays State University.

Butler has a bachelor's degree in biology and physical education and a master's degree in physical education from K-State.

French deny Greenpeace bombing link

By The Associated Press

PARIS — An official report issued Monday said the French government was not involved in bombing the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior and that six French secret service agents who had the vessel under surveillance were not responsible for the attack.

David Lange, New Zealand's prime minister, said Tuesday that the report was "incredible and transparent." He hinted the French ambassador may be expelled.

The New Zealand government has implicated the six French intelligence agents in the attack.

In London, Greenpeace Chairman David McTaggart said the environmental organization feels "that any attempt to deny a relationship between the presence of six French government agents in New Zealand and the bombing of the Rainbow Warrior cannot be considered credible."

The report of an investigation ordered earlier by President Francois Mitterrand detailed a major surveillance operation in New Zealand by agents of France's General Directorate for External Security (DGSE), the main spy agency.

New Zealand says report 'incredible'

But Tricot, a respected Gaullist political figure, concluded: "All I have heard and seen gives me the certitude that, at the government level, there was no decision taken that the Rainbow Warrior be damaged."

Tricot said that from the information available to him, none of the six espionage agents involved in the French operation was responsible for the bombing.

Two of the French agents, identified in the report as Capt. Dominique Prieur and Maj. Alain Mafart, are in jail in New Zealand on charges of murder, arson and conspiracy.

International arrest warrants have been issued for three crewmembers of the yacht Ouvea, believed by New Zealand police to have been involved in the sinking. They have been identified as Roland Verge, Gerald Andries and J.M. Bartelo, all noncommissioned officers and combat frogmen working for the security agency.

The three turned themselves in to French police on Monday at Tricot's urging. They were released pending further investigation.

The sixth agent was identified only as Dubast, who was in New Caledonia in June.

"I can't believe for an instant that an efficient investigator could arrive at such conclusions," New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange was quoted as saying in the newspaper Le Monde. "The DGSE therefore was running a vacation club for its agents and their stay just happened to coincide with the visit of Greenpeace militants!"

"I can't believe for an instant that an efficient investigator could arrive at such conclusions," Lange was quoted as saying in the Paris newspaper Le Monde. "The DGSE therefore was running a vacation club for its agents and their stay just happened to coincide with the visit of Greenpeace militants!"

He told a radio interviewer Tuesday in New Zealand: "You cannot have a form of acceptable association with another country that sets its spies on you and ignores your warrants for arrest for murder."

"The French have a remarkable flair for getting out of New Zealand in a hurry. They've demonstrated that recently. Perhaps the same principle could apply to the diplomat."

Lange said New Zealand would seek an official apology from France. "That is a minimal position," he said, adding that the report "is littered with inconsistencies, it skirts around facts, it has contradictions at key points."

The report seemed sure to lead to a heated political debate in France between the Socialist government and the conservative opposition. One opposition deputy, Alain Madelin, said: "The Tricot report takes the French for imbeciles. They want to make us believe that they send combat divers to take photos."

Poison leaks from Union Carbide plant

By The Associated Press

SOUTH CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Poisonous hydrochloric acid leaked Monday night from a Union Carbide Corp. plant near where 60,000 people had gathered for an outdoor concert, but the spill was contained quickly and no injuries were reported, authorities said.

Emergency whistles blared at the giant plant as the company's fire crews worked on the spill, and a white cloud rose over the facility, which was the site of a toxic leak on Aug. 13.

No residents were evacuated and no injuries were reported, said Kanawha County Emergency Services spokesman Glen Smith.

The spill occurred about 8:30 p.m. in a section of the plant that is located on an island in the Kanawha River. About a mile and a half upstream, more than 60,000 people had gathered for the city's annual river festival to hear rock 'n' roll singer Chubby Checker.

As a precaution, police closed the Patrick Street Bridge, which connects Charleston and South Charleston runs adjacent to the huge Kanawha County plant.

The spill was caused by a gasket on the plant's silicon unit which leaked, said Carbide spokesman Mike Lipscomb. It was contained about 9:30 p.m., he said, but he did not know how much had leaked.

Lipscomb said the leak was 35 percent hydrogen chloride and 65 percent water, and said the cloud was steam resulting from water poured on hot equipment by the emergency crews.

Ron Engle, chief chemist with the state Air Pollution Control Commission, said the chemical that spilled was the same as hydrochloric acid, a strong corrosive.

"If you were in it, it would cause burning of the eyes, the skin, the respiratory system," Engle said.

South Charleston police Sgt. V.K. West said Carbide officials called her about 8:30 p.m. to notify her of the leak. She said she was not told what leaked.

City firefighters were sent to the scene as a precaution, she said.

Union Carbide officials "called here and reported it was all under control," said S.C. Nichols of the Kanawha Valley Emergency Services office. "They said it did not contain anything dangerous."

The huge Kanahwa County plant was the site of a toxic leak Aug. 13. It is located five miles from Union Carbide's Institute plant, where a spill of aldicarb oxime and methylene chloride occurred Aug. 11 and sent 135 people to the hospital. The company was criticized following the Insitute spill for waiting 20 minutes before notifying emergency officials.

KU gets $3 million gift for humanities

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — The Hall Family Foundations of Kansas City, Mo., has given a gift of $3 million to the University of Kansas' humanities endowment, Chancellor Gene Budig announced Monday at the university's 120th opening convocation.

The gift from the family of the founder of Hallmark Cards Inc., Joyce Hall, was the largest earmarked for the humanities in the university's history, Budig said.

The humanities include such fields as history, literature and languages.

Budig said the gift would fund four new distinguished professorships in the humanities and enable the school's Center for Humanistic Studies to develop more support services for academic programs.

Parties desire changes in Chile's government

By The Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — Chile's Roman Catholic primate announced Monday that 11 political parties had agreed on a plan for "transition to full democracy" from military rule.

The declaration of principles by 22 politicians called together by Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno represented his second effort in the past two years to achieve national consensus on ending the authoritarian rule of President Augusto Pinochet.

Pinochet, an army general, led the armed forces in the coup that ousted the elected government of the late Marxist President Salvador Allende in September 1973.

Pinochet's regime had no official comment on Fresno's statement, but government spokesman Francisco Cuadra had criticized the cardinal's initiative earlier. "A religious authority should be removed from political concerns," Cuadra said.

The document agreed upon by the politicians proposes election of a Congress with power to reform Pinochet's 1980 constitution so a president can be chosen by popular vote. Pinochet's constitution provides for the armed services to choose a single candidate, for approval in a 1989 referendum, and for congressional elections a year later.

The policial leaders, ranging from conservatives to socialists, also called for strengthening trade union rights, which have been weakened by military decrees, and guaranteeing private property.

They proposed a business-labor pact to settle disputes on the principle of "equal sacrifice" in Chile's recovery from a long economic slump.

'Night Stalker' deaths stir fear in California

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Residents deluged authorities with telephone calls Monday, the day after the latest attack by the man known as the "Night Stalker," who has ignited fear throughout Southern California with a series of 14 slayings.

"People are really paranoid," said Glendale police Sgt. Steve Campbell. "A lot of people are asking for security checks, they are buying locks and high-intensity lights and they want to know where to buy a gun."

Calls reporting prowlers and suspicious people are up nearly 50 percent in places, police said Monday, an indication of the anxiety aroused by the killer, who is believed responsible for 35 attacks.

The killer struck again early Sunday, attacking a man and woman as they slept in their Mission Viejo home. Both survived, but the man was left in critical condition with a gunshot wound to the head.

A week earlier, the killer struck 600 miles to the north, in San Francisco, where a man was slain and his wife wounded.

"The number of calls by alarmed residents has taken a big jump," Campbell said. "The graveyard shift has received a lot of calls."

"Calls for services are up between 10 percent and 50 percent throughout the county," said Los Angeles County Deputy John Broussard. "They are reporting prowlers, suspicious activities and possible suspect sightings.

"Even though the leads haven't panned through so far, it shows the community is aware."

Task force detectives have put a lid on information about the investigation, fearing details of the crime might trigger copycat slayings or force the attacker to change his methods.

Most of the killer's victims have lived near freeways and had left their doors or windows unlocked. Victims have been attacked with guns, knives and other weapons.

Dutch balloonists crash into Atlantic

By The Associated Press

Gas leak scuttles record challenge

FALMOUTH, England — Three Dutch adventurers who set off from Canada in an attempt to cross the Atlantic in record time ditched their balloon in the ocean Monday and were picked up by a merchant ship.

The Ever Greet, a 43,000-ton container ship registered in Panama, picked up balloonists Henk Brink, 43; his wife Evelien, 30, and Evert Louwman, 45, about 900 miles west of Land's End, the southwestern tip of England.

"We crashed into the water. We are all very shocked. It is a hellish affair," Brink told a Dutch radio station from aboard the Ever Greet.

He blamed the failure on a defect in the balloon that caused a gas leak.

"We tried to bail out with our parachutes, but had no time," he said.

The Dutch station quoted Brink as saying the balloon was at 16,000 feet in fine weather when alarms signaled a gas-valve malfunction. As the gas escaped, the crew threw dozens of steel gas cylinders overboard to slow the descent, the station said.

Mike Collins, an officer at the Marine Rescue Coordinating Center at Falmouth in southwest England, had said in announcing the rescue earlier: "As far as we know they are all well."

A Royal Air Force search plane sent from a base in Scotland had spotted the three crew members floating in the gondola of the balloon Flying Dutchman.

The balloon went down 870 miles southwest of Ireland at about 9:45 p.m., approximately 331/2 hours after lifting off from St. John's, Newfoundland, according to Coby Hoolman. She is a spokeswoman for the balloon's flight control center at Schipol Airport in Amsterdam, Holland.

The center said the last radio contact was made more than an hour before the balloon ditched and the crew reported "technical trouble."

Brink is a professional balloonist and licensed pilot, as is his wife. Louwman is president of Toyota Netherlands, according to the flight control center.

Brink and his crew took off from St. John's on Sunday morning and had hoped to land in northern France late Tuesday or early Wednesday.

They were trying to beat the 137 hour crossing time of the trans-Atlantic balloon flight made in 1978 by Maxie Anderson, Ben Abruzzo and Larry Newman. The three Americans took off from Presque Isle, Maine.

The Montgomery Ward store, 410 Houston St., was the victim of a recent burglary resulting in a loss of more than $2,300.

Between 2:30 and 6 p.m. on July 26, an unknown person or persons pried the main entrance doors of the store in an attempt to gain entry. Failing in that attempt, the suspect(s) shattered the window east of the doors and entered the building. Inside the building, a glass watch display case was smashed and the watches stolen.

Among the items stolen were four watches described as a Tissot brand quartz, a Waltham quartz ananlog, a Jules Jergenson brand and a Helsbros quartz watch. An AT&T brand Merlin telephone system, black with a silver face was also stolen, along with a Montgomery Ward Videocassette recorder, model 10551, VHS-format, serial number 925785.

Also listed stolen was a gray metal lockbox used for charge slips, which was later recovered from bushes in the south alley of Pierre Street, just east of 10th Street.

Information on this or any other crime may be reported to Crime Stoppers at 539-7777. Callers need not use their names and may qualify for a cash reward of up to $1,000.

AIDS victim takes classes by phone

By The Associated Press

KOKOMO, Ind. — Classes for 13-year-old AIDS victim Ryan White began Monday when his science teacher at Western Middle School dialed a telephone number and Ryan pushed a button.

One by one, the 30 seventh-grade pupils introduced themselves to Ryan — who was sitting in his bedroom, listening on a speaker phone.

Ryan, a hemophiliac who contracted acquired immune deficiency syndome through a blood transfusion, would have preferred beginning his first day of school in the classroom.

But Western School Corp. officials say questions about the communicability of AIDS led to their barring Ryan from school. Ryan has been out of school since December.

Teacher Fran Samspel began her science lesson by continually reminding students to speak clearly and loudly so that the boy sitting five miles away would feel part of the class.

But Ryan's mother, Jeanne White, said she's skeptical of the telephone system's effectiveness.

"It's better than nothing," she said. "But I'm worried about visual aids. Anything they do on the blackboard he'll miss out on." Teachers said special projects will be videotaped for Ryan to watch at home.

Mrs. White, who has alleged in federal court that the school discriminated against Ryan as a handicapped person, said she was glad her son was not in school Monday.

"It's not that I don't want him there. But not until the parents and teachers accept him." And that, she said, won't happen until more is understood about AIDS.

Parents have signed a petition supporting the school's decision and have threatened to sue if Ryan is allowed into the classroom and another child contracts the disease.

U.S. District Court Judge James E. Noland ruled Aug. 16 that the case must go through school channels before he can consider it. But he retained jusidiction in the case.

School officials said a hearing officer would be named soon.

Studies have shown AIDS is spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions. There is no evidence that it is spread by casual contact.

High-risk groups for AIDS, which robs the body of its ability to fight infections, include male homosexuals, hemophiliacs and intravenous drug users.

Ryan's physicians and state health officials have said Ryan's condition does not threaten other students and that he should be allowed in the classroom.

"I have no problem being around Ryan," said school Principal Ron Colby. "But I have 380 children between the ages of 11 and 13 that would have to be trained to deal with this (if Ryan attended school.) "

Colby said "everything possible" was being done to make things easy for Ryan to adapt to his long-distance schooling.

Couple waits 65 years

Parted sweethearts to wed

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — Teen-age sweethearts Harry Ennis and Geraldine McLean aren't youngsters anymore, but they're still in love and plan to marry — after 65 years of waiting.

Ennis, 82, and McLean, 79, were sweethearts in 1920 in the small town of Marquand, Mo. Folks there recall the two as inseparable — attending parties, dances and hayrides together.

The two sweethearts wrote each other monthly at first, but gradually the letters became fewer and farther apart.

Still, after Ennis graduated in 1923, he wrote McLean that he was learning to install building tiles and he hoped to have enough money for them to get married soon.

McLean says she never received the letter.

When Ennis, who went on to work for the U.S. Postal Service in Miami for 33 years, did not receive a response, he figured she had met another man.

McLean also thought Ennis' silence meant he had met another woman. Each went on with their own lives.

McLean married and lived with her husband for 55 years, until he died three years ago. Ennis married twice. His first wife, Frances, died in 1961 after 36 years of marriage. He was married to his second wife, Alieph, for 21 years. She died in 1984.

Last Christmas, Ennis' nephew and niece from St. Louis, Ken and Diane Farrar, traveled to Miami Beach and visited him. They knew McLean and asked their uncle if he had been in touch with her.

He said he had not, but admitted, "You know, I've loved that girl all of my life."

Patrolmen request training center

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Highway Patrol asked a state building committee Monday to recommend construction of a $3.8 million training center in Topeka that could be used to train 50 to 60 recruits at a time.

The proposed training center would replace the highway patrol's current facility on the grounds of the former Shilling Air Force Base in Salina, said Capt. Richard W. Barta, who heads the patrol's public education and training division.

According to plans presented to the Joint Committee on State Building Construction, the 45,500-square-foot training center would be built on existing state-owned property near an interstate highway in the Topeka area.

Although the patrol did not specify a site, officials said the land should be large enough to include a shooting range, a pursuit driving instruction area and space for future expansions.

The building should have space to house, feed and train 50 to 60 students in addition to the patrol's instructional staff, said Barta, who added that the idea of a patrol training center has been under study for at least five years.

The committee, which will recommend construction projects to the 1986 Kansas Legislature, took no action on the training center proposal. Members of the panel on Monday also toured the State Board of Agriculture laboratories and the Kansas Museum of History in Topeka.

Barta said many problems plague the present training center, which is in a converted Strategic Air Command crew building. The current 15,200-square-foot structure, leased from the Air Force, also includes one of the patrol's division headquarters.

"It's not a place that's conducive to learning," Barta said. "There are no windows, just two small classrooms."

Contract limitations prevent remodeling the old Air Force building, which has an annual utility bill of more than $20,000, according to a report prepared by the Legislative Research Department.

The current 52-bed facility has only one shower stall for female trainees in the building's only womens' restroom and just four shower stalls for men, the report said. The patrol says the building is not accessible to the handicapped and suffers from plumbing and sewage problems.

The report said more than 500 people will be trained in the patrol's training center during the current fiscal year, which began July 1, and the number is expected to increase during the next several years.

Anti-fraud programs recover $1.2 million

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Two state agencies reported Monday that they have recovered about $1.2 million in fraudulently obtained state unemployment and welfare payments.

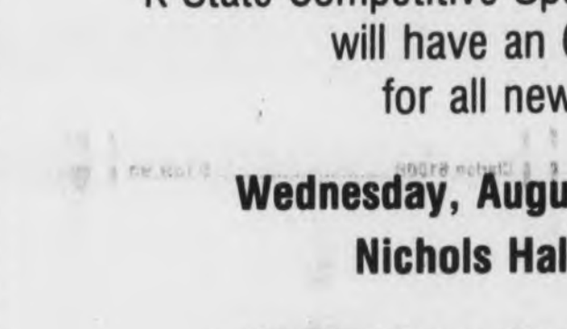
Robert C. Harder, secretary of Social and Rehabilitation Services, said his department's anti-fraud program recovered $947,031 in fraudulent overpayments to welfare recipients and providers during the fiscal year that ended June 30.

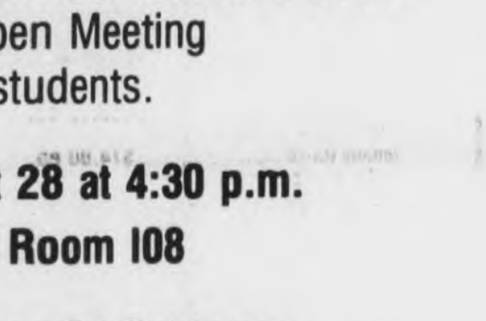
Harder said the amount recovered represents a 5 percent increase in fraud collections from the previous fiscal year.

Meanwhile, the Kansas Department of Human Resources said in a separate announcement that $257,542 in fraudulent unemployment payments were recovered during the last 18 months. Larry E. Wolgast, secretary of human resources, said his department's investigations have resulted in 138 fraud convictions during that time.

The SRS identified 2,048 cases of suspected welfare fraud during the past year, referred 197 of them to Kansas prosecutors and obtained 77 convictions, according to a statement by the department.

Among the tools the SRS has used to help detect welfare fraud is its so-called fraud "hotline," which resulted in a savings of $223,081 in overpayments, the statement said.





The Early Detection and Prevention Program also helped the SRS "prevent assistance fraud before it begins," the department said. The detection units have opened in Wichita, Topeka and Kansas City.

The human resources department has been using new methods to detect fraud as well, Wolgast said.

"Auomated audit procedures comparing employer records of wages to unemployment insurance benefits paid have made fraud investigation procedures effective," said Wolgast, who estimated the new system has detected 80 percent of all unemployment fraud cases.

Natural gas recoverable

Infill drilling key to success

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — The potential waste of recoverable natural gas in the Hugoton field is the primary reason Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. have filed for permission to drill more wells, a witness told the Kansas Corporation Commission Monday.

The testimony came as the KCC started its fourth week of hearings Monday on a proposal to allow infill drilling in the vast southwest Kansas field.

O.B. "Blake" Seay, a Cities Service petroleum engineer who has worked in the field for the past 24 years, said he also believes there will be a market for the additional gas produced by infill drilling.

He said without infill drilling, the field won't be pumped anywhere near its potential.

"I don't care if it's a car, or a house or what. If something is neglected, it goes to pot. That's what we have here," he said.

Cities Service and other producers want permission to drill two wells per 640-acre unit in the Hugoton instead of the one well now allowed by the KCC. Infill drilling proponents claim the new wells could double the field's recoverable reserves.

But opponents, including pipeline companies and gas utilities, claim the proposal is little more than a ruse to raise natural gas prices.

The opponents point out Hugoton gas from regulated old wells sells for about 65 cents per thousand cubic feet while infill well gas would sell for more than $3 per thousand cubic feet.

Seay underwent cross-examination all day Monday by lawyer Martin Bregman, representing KPL Gas Service Co., an infill opponent. Many of the questions were highly technical and dealt with mathematical calculations Cities Service had made to prepare its case.

During a break in the hearing Monday, KCC Chairman Michael Lennen said the commission might lengthen the hearing days or extend the 10 weeks set aside for infill hearings because of their slow pace.

Cities Service originally was to take two weeks to present its case. But because of lengthy cross-examination by infill opponents, the hearings are in the fourth week and Cities has one witness left after Seay.

The KCC has been meeting from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday to hear infill testimony. Fridays have been reserved for study of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant rate case.

Soviets fighting Angolan guerrillas

By The Associated Press

PARIS — A guerrilla spokesman in Paris said Monday that for the first time since Soviet troops entered the southwest African nation of Angola in 1975, they are actively engaged with government forces in fighting the rebels.

Spokesman Paulo Gato said a Soviet infantry battalion joined an offensive he said was aimed at sheltering Marxist Angola's capital of Luanda from rebel action prior to a September summit meeting of non-aligned nations.

The claim could not be independently confirmed.

"The great preoccupation of the Luanda government is to prove it is in control of the situation and to thus realize a good propaganda effort," said Gato, spokesman for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, known as UNITA.

Gato said the offensive has led to fierce combat on the Cuito-Luena axis, in central Angola.

He said Cuban troops based in Angola have been given responsibility for security in preparation for the summit. Gato said among other security measures, units have been assigned to guard power lines in Luanda to prevent sabotage, and certain stores being stocked are under "discreet surveillance" to prevent pillage.

Speakes clarifies apartheid statements

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan opposes detention of political dissidents in South Africa and does not believe, as he appeared to suggest in a weekend interview, that segregation in public places has been eliminated in the white-ruled country, his chief spokesman said Monday.

Deputy press secretary Larry Speakes outlined what those views as the president, convalescing from cancer surgery, continued his vacation at his mountaintop ranch 30 miles north of here.

Asked at a news briefing for Reagan's views on the most recent detentions in South Africa, Speakes said:

"We do not believe that repression and detentions will bring an end to South Africa's political crisis. We think many of those who have been detained are leaders of organizations which the South African government should be negotiating with to restore law and order, end the state of emergency and begin bargaining for a new political dispensation in the country.

"We have made these views known to the South African government," Speakes added.

Police in South Africa say 2,197 people have been held under the state of emergency declared July 21 to put down anti-apartheid rioting. They say 1,094 are still in cells.

In a telephone interview from the ranch on Saturday with Atlanta radio station WSB, Reagan said South Africans "have eliminated the segregation that we once had in our own country — the type of thing where hotels and restaurants and places of entertainment, and so forth, were segregated — that has all been eliminated."

Speakes said the president "is talking about in major cities where there has been a step in that direction to remove barriers of apartheid in major areas such as Pretoria, Cape Town and others."

Asked if Reagan believed that racial segregation in South Africa has been eliminated, the spokesman said, "Not totally, no."

Critics of the Pretoria government say it has not moved to dismantle the major structures of apartheid, which deny blacks any voice in the government and subject them to white-imposed rules as to where they may live and work.

Reagan also said in the interview that he was pleased that the Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of the Moral Majority, had declared that he made a poor choice of words when he said Tutu is a "phony" if he claims to represent black South Africans.

He said Falwell was told, during a recent visit to South Africa, that "some considered Bishop Tutu a leader; others rejected him as a leader. And this is what he was trying to say."

Speakes said the president respects Tutu and believes the bishops should take part in talks with the South African government instead of boycotting them as he has done.

In another radio interview over the weekend, Reagan repeated his belief that economic sanctions against South Africa would hurt blacks by damaging the country's economy.

Soviets renew efforts to halt Afghan rebels

By The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — The Soviets are pouring major reinforcements into an area of eastern Afghanistan where guerrillas and Soviet troops are engaged in heavy new fighting, Western diplomatic sources said Monday.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said thousands of Soviet troops with tanks and helicopter gunships have been pitted against anti-Marxist rebels in a full-scale attack in Paktia province near the Pakistani border.

The Soviets are battling to end the siege of Khost city, which has been under attack and bombardment throughout the summer by large formations of Islamic insurgents, the sources said.

Khost has been encircled by guerrilla forces for more than a year. It is garrisoned by Afghan army troops aided by several dozen Soviet advisers. More than 3,000 guerrillas are reported dug in around the town.

The Soviet attack also appears to be a continuation of efforts to seal off rebel supply routes used to bring weapons and reinforcements across the border from Pakistan. Paktia has been a major route for the guerrillas.

Space shuttle launch scheduled for sunrise

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle Discovery was declared ready Monday for its a third launch attempt in four days, but officials said the weather would be "marginal at best" for liftoff.

Shuttle managers were keeping their fingers crossed that the launch, scheduled for sunrise today, would not be blocked again because time is running out for an effort to salvage a lifeless satellite during the mission. Thursday is the last day the shuttle can be launched to intercept the satellite.

Air Force Lt. Scott Funk, the shuttle weather officer, called conditions marginal, with thunderstorms and rainshowers in the vicinity of the launch pad.

Of most concern, he said, was a disturbance off the southern tip of Florida, moving west-northwest.

The weather outlook for Wednesday, Funk said, is worse but Thursday looks better.

Discovery's five-member crew, commanded by Joe H. Engle, is to deploy a satellite for American Satellite Company in the first 10 hours of flight, one for the Australian government on the second day and for the Navy on the third.

With a new emphasis on the K-State passing game, wide receiver James Witherspoon hopes to make things happen downfield for the Wildcats.

Witherspoon looks forward to new role as team leader

By DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

When the Big Eight Skywriters Tour rolled into Manhattan last week, several writers questioned Head Football Coach Jim Dickey about an obvious lack of experience in some of the skill positions on offense.

Dickey admitted that the problem exists, and said the 'Cats would need key performances from their experienced players to be a winning club in 1985. Leadership, however, would be even more important than performance, the Wildcat coach said. Enter James Witherspoon.

Witherspoon returns to K-State in 1985 for his fifth season as a member of the Wildcats. As a freshman in 1981, Witherspoon played in just one game and was awarded another year of eligibility because of an NCAA ruling that says a player must participate in 20 percent of the school's games in one year to lose a year of eligibility.

'I look at myself as someone who can make things happen. With the new emphasis on the passing game, I hope to help us open things up downfield a little more.'
— James Witherspoon

Witherspoon came to K-State from Liberal High School, where he was an All-American running back. He rushed for more than 1,600 yards his senior year, leading the Redskins to a 12-0 record and the 1980 Class 5A state championship. Witherspoon amassed over 4,000 rushing yards during his career at Liberal and had his jersey number retired.

But, as Witherspoon admitted then — and admits now — his size was his biggest drawback. He was 5 feet 6 inches tall coming out of high school, and some major college coaches shied away from taking a chance on him. But Dickey saw something in Witherspoon that others didn't.

"Coach Dickey approached me and told me he wanted me to run back kickoffs and begin working some as a split end," the now 5-foot-7-inch receiver said. "I just wanted to get a chance to play in the Big Eight and show scouts from other major colleges that I could play in the big leagues."

But the conversion from high school running back to college split end was not an easy one. Roommate Mike Wallace, a split end for K-State from 1981 through 1984, helped make the transition an easier one, Witherspoon said.

"Mike was my roommate when I first got here, and as anyone who watched us our bowl year knows, he was a great split end," Witherspoon said. "Since I had come from running back, he had to help me out each day (by) telling me some of the rules and some of the moves and explaining how I could use them to my advantage.

"I'm kind of looking to step in and take over where he left off. One of my biggest jobs, as I see it, is helping the younger guys learn the system."

Witherspoon said the teaching his teammates did during the 1982 season was a key in K-State's drive to a berth in the Independence Bowl. This season will be no different, he said. Only now it is Witherspoon doing the teaching.

"All of us that have been here four or five years know that our leadership is important in getting back to a bowl game," he said. "We've got to come through."

Witherspoon said the team is putting quite a bit of importance on the season opener Sept. 7 against Wichita State University. It's not exactly a "do-or-die" game, but momentum and confidence are keys to success, he said.

"We really need to win the first game. Football is different than basketball. In football you just play one game a week. In basketball you can come back in just two days and redeem yourself. In football we've got to wait a whole week," the split end said. "The confidence gained by winning the opener isn't just important the first week. It's important all year."

'I just wanted to get a chance to play in the Big Eight and show scouts from other major colleges that I could play in the big leagues.'
— James Witherspoon

Witherspoon hopes the year will be a productive one for both the team and himself.

"I look at myself as someone who can make things happen. With the new emphasis on the passing game, I hope to help us open things up downfield a little more," he said.

Witherspoon said he has no regrets about his decision to attend K-State. Of the many good things that have happened to him since he's been here, he said one would stand out — playing four seasons without serious injury.

Another bowl bid could add to that list of good things. So could a win over one of the Big Eight powers.

"I'd like to be able to say I was a member of a team that beat Nebraska or Oklahoma. KU did it last year," he said of the Jayhawks' 28-11 win over the Sooners. "But a bowl game is what we're all working for.

"If we can play together and the seniors can help the younger guys to develop quickly enough, we can do it."

Cyclones' Criner takes good with bad

Kicker Frank may pull double duty

By The Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — And now in an age of sports specialists comes Rick Frank, a throwback to days of yore.

The holder of three national junior college kicking records, this apple-cheeked Californian will be booting field goals this fall for Iowa State University.

But there will be times when the offense stalls out short of three-point range. And that's when Frank will really begin to earn his scholarship. Coach Jim Criner says he'll probably be the Cyclones' punter as well as place-kicker.

There is a difference. The two skills demand entirely different leg motions and timing. Double-duty kickers may have been common in Pop Warner's days, but not anymore.

"I don't mind doing all the kicking," Frank told Big Eight Skywriters Saturday. "In fact, I like it. I prefer to do it that way."

Criner says there's a simple explanation for what Frank does.

"Athletic ability," he said. "Rick is just a very fine athlete."

If Frank had been kicking for Iowa State last season instead of Fullerton, Calif., Junior College, the Cyclones most likely would not have come in with a 2-7-2 record. Five of their losses were by a total of 16 points. Kicker Marc Bachrodt, still on the roster, made only seven of 20 field goal attempts and hit just five of 12 from 39 yards and closer. Punter Jim Thompson, no longer with the team, averaged only 37.1 yards.

"We're going to be very, very good in the kicking areas," is Criner's bold prediction.

On the final days of Iowa State's last spring practice, Frank hit all but three of 18 field goals from 52 yards away and averaged almost 45 yards on 19 punts. In the annual spring game he unloaded an eye-popping, wind-assisted 97-yarder.

"When you watch him punt, you'd never know he was a place-kicker," Criner said. "He has a beautiful kicking form."

With a left-footed soccer style, Frank set national juco records for field goals in a season with 22 and field goals in a career with 32. His 168 career points are also a national juco standard.

Quiet and soft-spoken, the native of Cypress, Calif., also gives lie to another football stereotype — that all kickers are either "flakes," or brooding loners.

"Kickers do seem to have that reputation," he said. "But most of the kickers I know are normal guys. I don't know where they get that from."

Minor dismissed for breaking rules

By The Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — Iowa State Football Coach Jim Criner on Monday said he kicked Robbie Minor off the team last week because the receiver missed team meetings and was found drinking at a local restaurant after a team curfew.

"Everyone in our program must adhere to the same rules in what is a team game," Criner said in a statement issued Monday. Criner did not say whether the 6-foot, 175-pound junior from St. Louis would have a chance to be reinstated.

"I wish him the best of luck in his future endeavors," Criner said.

Minor had started the past two years at wide receiver for the Cyclones and was expected to give the Cyclones an offensive punch with the return of pass-minded Alex Espinoza at quarterback.

Criner said Minor missed a 10 p.m. curfew last Friday and was seen drinking at a local restaurant by three members of the coaching staff at 11:20 p.m. Criner also said Minor failed to attend a mandatory team dinner and meeting Friday and was not present at the mandatory team breakfast the next morning.

Minor has said he was not included by Criner in a number of team activities since the start of practice last week and that he was excluded from an earlier team dinner.

Minor said the coach did not tell him when fall practice would begin, was given a locker in a storage area away from other team members, was assigned to practice as a running back with a scout team and was not told about the visit to ISU Saturday by reporters who cover Big Eight football.

Minor has been in Criner's doghouse since February, when the coach suspended him for a year, reportedly for using abusive language. Minor denied the charge and appealed to a special university tribunal, which reduced the suspension to six months, making him eligible to play this fall.

"I'm sorry that Robbie did not make the commitment to follow normal team policy after he was given a chance to redeem himself," Criner said.

Minor could not be reached for comment Monday afternoon.

Earlier, his mother, Jacqueline Minor, said she and her husband were unhappy with their son's dismissal but were not certain what action they would take next.

"If it is not resolved to our satisfaction, we will take further action," she told the Des Moines Register. "We don't think Robbie has done anything to deserve this kind of treatment from the coach."

East could see return to dominance in '85

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the second of a four-part article previewing the 1985 college football season. Today's story focuses on the teams in the East. Part three will cover teams in the South.

Despite Penn State's poorest season since 1966 and Pitt's collapse from a No. 3 preseason ranking to its first losing record since 1972, Penn State's Joe Paterno thinks Eastern football will rebound from last year's woes to have as good a season as ever.

Paterno says Penn State is "going into the season with the idea that we're starting all over. We're starting all over with the offense, with the defense, the whole bit."

The defense has 18 of the top 22 players back, including eight starters led by strong safety Michael Zordich. The offense returns six starters from last year's 6-5 team but will have a new quarterback, probably junior Matt Knizner.

Pitt's main goals are to replace linebackers Troy Benson and Caesar Aldisert and pump life into an offense that frequently sagged last season when the team fell to 3-7-1. Quarterback John Congemi, plagued by injuries last year, is back.

Boston College will try to remain in the rankings despite the loss of Doug Flutie, major-college football's all-time passing king.

Shawn Halloran, Flutie's backup for two seasons, is the likely successor. He is a dropback passer who cannot scramble like Flutie.

West Virginia is aiming for an unprecedented fifth straight bowl trip and the Mountaineers intend to do it with defense, where 10 starters return, including linebackers Matt Smith and Fred Smalls and free safety Travis Curtis. The big man on offense is 290-pound tackle Brian Jozwiak, but the key is new quarterback John Talley.

Army was among the major surprises in 1984, capping an 8-3-1 season with its first ever bowl trip. Fullback Doug Black, one of the nation's top rushers, is among 41 returning lettermen.

Navy has the first redshirt in its history, Napoleon McCallum, who was only 84 yards short of the career rushing record when he suffered a broken ankle in the second game last season.

Schedule may knock OU out of top spot

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — The University of Oklahoma Sooners may be rated No. 1 now but Coach Barry Switzer says he wouldn't be surprised to see his club fall down the list.

The reason is not his team. It's the schedule.

"With the late start we've got, you can be fairly assured we'll not have played a game and fall out of the top spots," Switzer says.

Oklahoma doesn't play until Sept. 28 at the University of Minnesota due to a schedule change. The Sooners were originally supposed to open two weeks earlier against third-ranked Southern Methodist University, but the game was moved to Dec. 7 for television.

History also says Switzer is right. Since the Associated Press began its preseason poll in 1950, only six teams ranked No. 1 at the start have won the national championship. Three times that team has been Oklahoma, in 1956, 1974 and 1975.

"It just raises the expectations of your fans. It creates so much anticipation and they feel so disappointed when it doesn't happen," Switzer said of being ranked No. 1. "They ought to know that unbeaten seasons just don't happen much any more."

Spending spree results in millionaire athletes

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: Sports is squeezed by rising salaries and dwindling revenues. This first of a three-part series looks at the problem.

A decade-long spending spree by professional sports has boosted player salaries 400 percent, creating a generation of millionaire athletes whose paychecks will keep on coming well into the 21st century.

The result: One in three teams is already losing money. And with the bills piling up and television threatening to stop bankrolling the industry, sports executives are scrambling to cut costs and scout out new sources of revenue.

The most conservative count shows that 43 of 112 big-league franchises lost money in 1984 — seven in baseball, 10 in the National Basketball Association, seven in the National Hockey League, five in the National Football League and all 14 in the United States Football League.

In each case, the biggest single reason is salaries, which have risen up to twice as much as income since 1975. Even Bob Woolf, who has negotiated more than 2,000 contracts for athletes and includes Larry Bird and Doug Flutie among his richer clients, says that can't continue.

"It's probably reached as high as it can go," Woolf said. "But that's pretty high. There's just so much money available. Nobody's all that foolhardy anymore."

With the money pressures have come other problems.

Baseball players struck for the second time in four years after arguing for months over the owners' claim that they lost an average of $1.1 million in 1984.

The NFL has endured a summer of holdouts by veterans and rookies trying to keep pace with escalating salaries of the past few years.

After abandoning its spring-summer experiment, the USFL has suspended operations until the fall of 1986 and is trying desperately to regroup after losing $150 million over three years, $60 million of it in 1985.

In the past decade, the average player salary for the four major sports has jumped almost 400 percent, not including the first half of this year. In some sports, the increase is more than 700 percent.

"I don't think that anybody in the game today knew what the baseball salaries would be when he started," says the St. Louis Cardinals' Ozzie Smith, who signed a $2 million-a-year contract this season. "If they had, there'd be a lot more guys playing baseball."

"Fans are getting turned off by the sports page becoming the sports business page," said Tex Schramm, president of the NFL Dallas Cowboys.

Many fans say they are being priced out.

Since 1975, the average ticket price has gone from $5.38 to $12 in the NBA, from $7.09 to $14 in the NHL, from $8 to $15 in the NFL and from $3.45 to $6.21 in major league baseball. When parking, food and other concessions are added in, taking a family of r to a game can cost more than $.

Attendance is up in all sports, but more and more the seats are filled by corporate guests whose tickets are written off as tax deductions for business entertainment — tax deductions the Reagan administration wants to abolish.

Television is changing, too. Ratings are down, advertisers are balking at record prices for commercials and the networks are vowing to slow their spending on sports.

It was that massive infusion of television money that fueled the sports boom in the first place. What's happening today comes from how sports spent the money.

Chiefs cut 9 players to reach limit

By The Associated Press

LIBERTY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs placed nine players on waivers Monday and moved another to the injured reserve list to reach the National Football League's mandatory roster limit of 50 by today.

Joining them on the waiver wire were two 1985 draft choices, seventh-round pick defensive end Vince Thomson and eighth-round choice wide receiver Ira Hillary.

Also released were three free-agent rookies, linebacker Charles Merritt, fullback E.J. Jones from the University of Kansas and cornerback Matt Courtney.

Rookie wide receiver Andy Hill was placed on the injured-reserve list because of a hamstring pull.

Coach John Mackovic said that Smith's departure came down to numbers. He wanted to keep three tight ends on the final roster, and because of the reduced 45-man squad this year, that meant he could carry just four wide receivers.

Smith, 29, had 167 receptions in seven NFL seasons, but he was better known as a punt returner.

He averaged 10.6 yards a return in his career, and in 1980 he was selected an All-Pro after returning 40 punts for a 14.5 average. He was selected as an alternate for the Pro Bowl in 1981 after leading the American Football Conference in punt returns (50 for 528 yards).

Condon said he was not surprised by his release, since rookie Bob Olderman was inserted into the starting right guard spot Saturday against Houston. Condon, 32, had held that spot for about 10 years. He had more seasons, 11, and games played, 147, than any player on the team.

Brett, Wilson spark Royals

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — George Brett homered for the fourth consecutive game and drove in four runs, while Hal McRae and Dave Leeper knocked in two runs apiece Monday night as the Kansas City Royals trounced the Texas Rangers 9-2.

Willie Wilson sparked the Kansas City attack with three singles, three runs scored and three stolen bases, giving him 39 on the year.

Charlie Leibrandt, 13-6, won for the seventh time in eight decisions, blanking the Rangers on three hits over seven innings after allowing two unearned runs on four singles in the first inning. Dan Quisenberry pitched the ninth for Kansas City.

Jeff Russell, 1-4, was the loser.

Brett's three-run homer in the sixth inning was his 21st of the year and gave him four or more RBI in game for the eighth time this season. It was the second time in Brett's career that he has homered in four straight games.

Rose continues chase; winter prediction fails

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose took an offhanded swing last winter at predicting his record-setting hit. He missed by a dozen.

The Cincinnati Reds player-manager was pressed last February to predict the day he'd top Ty Cobb's all-time hit mark of 4,191. Hesitantly, he picked Monday, Aug. 26 as the probable day.

"There was no way for me to judge, no way for me to know," Rose said this weekend. "I didn't look. I just hit the 26th."

There's no sense of urgency in reaching Cobb's mark. In fact, Rose is thinking not just of hit 4,192, but also of 4,193, 4,194 and beyond.

"I'm going to keep getting hits," he said. "That's my job. I won't stop after 12. I wouldn't be surprised if I get four the next day."

Rose didn't play Sunday in a 5-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs, keeping him 12 hits shy of the mark going into Monday night's game with St. Louis.

Rose, 44, has been content to chip away at Cobb, playing himself against right-handed pitchers and using hot-hitting Tony Perez, 43, at first base against lefties. Perez had two hits Sunday, raising his average to .338.

Rose is sticking with the platoon system at first base even though it could cost him a shot at the record during the current homestand, which lasts through next Sunday. The Reds then leave for six games before returning home.

The matter of where he'll get the hit has been a little sticky. Reds owner Marge Schott would like Rose to get it at Riverfront Stadium, where large crowds are expected this week and during the next homestand.

"Obviously, I'd like to do it here," Rose said this weekend. "But it's not a do-or-die thing with me. It might be with Marge. She told me the other night, 'Boy, I want you to get that hit at home.' I want to get off the phone when she starts talking like that."

The city is ready to celebrate its biggest baseball moment since the days of the "Big Red Machine." A sign above a downtown office tower has counted down Rose's hits from Opening Day. Rose-Cobb shirts are selling briskly, and more than 106,000 people turned out for a three-game weekend series with the Cubs to watch him approach the mark.

Rose is taking all the attention in good humor. One reporter asked him about the carnival atmosphere and whether he'll be glad when it's over.

"It's always a carnival atmosphere. You guys are all clowns," Rose joked, drawing a room full of laughs. "How am I going to get rid of the carnival?"

Sooners

first-place votes and 1,090 of a possible 1,200 points in the preseason poll, chosen by sports writers and sportscasters. Second-rated Auburn received 13 first-place votes and 1,027 points in balloting results announced Saturday night.

The late start means Oklahoma will be able to forego two-a-day drills, something Switzer said will be a plus.

"The players are fresher and you get more out of the practices," he said. "Two-a-days are a tremendous strain on the athletes."

He said, however, that he's worried about the Sooners' early opponents.

"I'm concerned about two games: Minnesota and Kansas State," he said. "I've said those two teams will have more of an advantage on us than Texas. When we play Texas it'll be their third game and our third game.

"But when we play Minnesota it'll be our first game and their third. They're liable to be 2-0 when they play us. Kansas State will have played four games. They might be 3-1 or 4-0 by the time we play them."

Oklahoma is expected to be strong defensively, with eight starters back from a team that last season ranked first in the nation against the rush and was second in total defense. The major question marks are the defensive secondary and quarterback.

Troy Aikman, a 6-foot-3, 215-pound sophomore, is the Sooners' starting quarterback. Switzer says Aikman has the best arm ever at Oklahoma, but although Aikman had an outstanding spring passing the ball, he is virtually untested running the wishbone in a game situation.

His only start came last season against Kansas, when the Jayhawks won in an upset, 28-11. It's a game that Oklahoma followers have found hard to forget.

Wine to manage Atlanta

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Bobby Wine, calling it one of the highlights of his career, was named manager of the Atlanta Braves for the remainder of the 1985 season Monday following the firing of Eddie Haas.

"Lots of things can happen in six weeks," Wine said at a news conference shortly before Monday night's win over the Pittsburgh Pirates in his debut as manager.

"We've got no place to go but up," Wine said of a team that has struggled through a dismal season mired in fifth place in the National League West race.

Haas, 50, a member of the Braves organization since 1958, was in his first season as a major league manager.

academic vice president at Chicago State University, Chicago, Ill., began his new job on Aug. 1. His first order of business will be to improve recruitment of students. He will also be working to increase the student retention rate 10 percent per graduating class per year.

Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, resigned from his position on July 23 to accept a similiar position at Columbia University in New York City.

Cross served as a consultant to Columbia during his five-year tenure at the University of Delaware as an assistant vice president.

Cross had interviewed for the position of vice president of facilities management at Columbia at the same time he interviewed for the K-State job, but elected to come to Manhattan to raise his children in a smaller environment.

"It's a positive move, both professionally and personally," Cross said.

A successor to Cross will not be named. Responsibility for facilities will be transferred to George Miller, current vice president for administration and finance.

Espionage

The mass-circulation Bild daily newspaper reported without citing its sources that about a dozen Bonn government secretaries are under investigation on suspicion of espionage. One of the secretaries works in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's office, Bild said.

Kohl's government has been shaken by the scandal and the chancellor was to meet with Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann to assess the damage. The developing scandal appeared to be the most harmful security breach since 1974, when Chancellor Willy Brandt resigned when his top aide, Guenter Guillaume, was convicted of spying for East Germany.

struction, scheduled to begin in September.

Greenhouses being constructed north of Throckmorton Hall will replace the existing greenhouses south of King Hall, the site of the planned chemistry/biochemistry building.

The new greenhouses will have updated equipment not available in 1916 when the King Hall greenhouses were built.

The expected completion date for the greenhouses is set for October.

Weber Hall will also undergo some renovation and upgrading, Cooper said. A new meats lab will be added to the facilities.

"We'll be taking bids for that in early November," said Cooper, who estimated the construction cost at $5.9 million.

A child care center has been established in building L of Jardine Terrace. The center is owned and operated by the University and is open to anyone affiliated with the University.

Projects to improve the quantity and quality of campus parking lot surfaces are also under way.

Capt. Charles Beckom, KSU Police Department, said a connecting drive has been added between parking lots A1 and A2 in the southeast corner of campus.

Lot A3, behind the president's house, has been expanded to an 83-car capacity. A new pad for motorcycle parking has also been added.

In addition, an unstaffed information booth will be installed at the Vattier Street and North Manhattan Avenue entrance to campus. Beckom said the building will provide visitors with a general information bulletin board and a direct telephone line to the Campus Police Department.

The Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex parking lot is being expanded to 100 stalls and paved, Beckom said. The lot will be funded by student and faculty fees, and parking will be by student and faculty/staff permit only.

The lot behind Justin Hall has also been enlarged to accommodate 87 faculty/staff vehicles.

In a press conference Monday, Acker said the ground-breaking ceremony for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum, set for Sept. 7, could be delayed for up to six months because the Aug. 20 bids for construction of the 16,000-seat structure were more than $3 million over the projected construction cost. Jim Sheppard, University architect, said a minimum of 60 days is needed for Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, the architecture firm working on the coliseum, to prepare alternative solutions.

Acker said the figures are lower than he expected. The preliminary figure is 14,384 students, 608 students less than last fall. The enrollment process continues until the 20th day of classes, Sept. 23.

Even though enrollment has declined, the University will not make sweeping changes in educational programming, Acker said. But there could be a shift in the areas in which the majority of students pursue degrees, he said.

"Our attention will be spent on fine tuning and refining (programs) so we make sure we are distinctive in the disciplines (of teaching) so we can sell the disciplines well.

"We live in an increasing urbanized society so we expect fewer (students) to prepare for farming and ranching," he said. "The College of Business, for example, has become larger in numbers, though."

He also mentioned that the College of Architecture and Design has produced increased enrollment. There were decreases in the freshman classes of the colleges of agriculture, arts and sciences, education, engineering and home economics.

JOHN MORRELL DIDN'T BECOME A TRAINEE AFTER COLLEGE. HE BECAME A MANAGER.

1st Lt. John Morrell was a business major at the University of Iowa and a member of Army ROTC.

"As Executive Officer of the Army's Defense Language Institute at Monterey, California, I'm responsible for the housing, feeding and well-being of 500 students. And that's no small task. I manage an annual food budget of over a million and a half dollars. And I'm accountable for five million dollars worth of property.

"On top of managing money, I also supervise a staff of 24 people. And each one has unique problems that I have to handle on a daily basis. You better believe the leadership and management training I received in Army ROTC is paying off."

There are other good reasons for taking ROTC, too. Like scholarship opportunities. And financial assistance – up to $1,000 a year for your last two years of ROTC.

If you want a job after college that offers real challenge and real responsibility, do what John Morrell did. Take Army ROTC.

Salvadoran guerrillas captured

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Three leftist guerrillas suspected of participating in a cafe massacre in which four U.S. Marines were killed have been arrested and a fourth is dead, President Jose Napoleon Duarte said Tuesday.

At a news conference, Duarte read a letter he sent to President Reagan advising him of the arrests.

He said other guerrillas who took part in the June 19 killings of 13 people at two sidewalk cafe in San Salvador have been identified and are being sought.

A rebel group, the Central American Revolutionary Worker's Party, claimed responsibility for the night-time attacks on the cafes in the Zona Rosa entertainment district.

Among the 13 slain by the killers firing automatic weapons were the four Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy who were off duty and two American businessmen who worked for a computer company.

The Marines were identified by the Pentagon as Sgt. Thomas T. Handwork, 24, of Beavercreek, Ohio; Cpl. Gregory H. Weber, 22, of Cincinnati; Sgt. Bobby J. Dickson, 27, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; and Cpl. Patrick R. Kwiatkowski, 20, of Wausau, Wis.

Duarte and members of the military high command, who flanked the president at the news conference at the executive mansion, refused to say when, where or how the three were captured.

A government communique later identified those arrested and the suspect killed as members of the Central American Revolutionary Workers' Party, known by its Spanish initials as the PRTC. It is the smallest of five guerrilla groups in the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front coalition that is battling the U.S.-backed government.

Duarte's letter to Reagan praised the U.S. government for providing "efficient and disinterested aid" to Salvadoran authorities in tracking down the suspects and making the arrests. American help included the cooperation of the FBI.

Officials at the news conference identified the slain guerrilla as Jose

Hazing violation draws sanctions against fraternity

By WAYNE PRICE
Managing Editor

The Interfraternity Council board of directors has issued sanctions to a fraternity for hazing of a number of pledges last fall semester, Barb Robel, advisor for greek affairs, said Tuesday.

The sanctions against Alpha Tau Omega, 1632 McCain Lane, were announced Monday night at an IFC meeting in the Union Big Eight room.

The sanctions against the fraternity were the result of an investigation by the IFC board of directors after IFC officials received a complaint last July from a number of former ATO pledges, Robel said.

Robel would not comment on the nature of the hazing or specify the number of people involved in the complaint. According to the IFC constitution, after a hazing complaint is filed with IFC, the board ivestigates the charges to determine if sanctions are warranted.

Joel Hermes, senior in computer science and president of ATO, said the fraternity is appealing a number of the violations and sanctions imposed by the board.

The board of directors consists of the following IFC officers: president, executive and rush vice-presidents, public relations chairman and executive-secretary. The IFC consists of presidents from all the fraternities at K-State registered with the Office of Greek Affairs.

Robel said the board of directors' investigation took place from Aug. 21 through Aug. 26. Final sanctions against the fraternity were decided on Aug. 26, she said.

Robel would not comment on the severity of the sanctions but Gary Arroyo, sophomore in veterinary medicine and president of IFC, said he does not believe the sanctions are severe.

"That's part of the appeal process and it's still under investigation so we can't really say anything more about the sanctions," Arroyo said.

Hermes would not specify the sanctions but he said he believes a number of them are unfair.

"We feel they're inappropriate," Hermes said. "That's why we're appealing."

Robel said the IFC will hold a special meeting on Sept. 3, to decide ATO's appeal. If the decision is upheld, the fraternity can then appeal to the Council on Student Affairs. The final decision on such matters rests with President Duane Acker.

The sanctions are not effective while the matter is being appealed.

Hermes said he is optimistic that ATO's appeal will be successful.

"We want to be judged by our peers, which are the other fraternity presidents," Hermes said. "I have a lot of confidence in their judgment."

Nigerian officers oust former military regime

By The Associated Press

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — Army officers overthrew the Nigerian government Tuesday, accusing Maj. Gen. Muhammadu Buhari and his military regime of abusing power and failing to revive the economy.

All communications with Nigeria were cut and no information on Buhari's fate was available. Reports reaching Abidjan and London from Nigeria indicated there was no initial violence.

The new military leaders said Maj. Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, the army chief of staff, would assume the presidency and leadership of the armed forces. Babangida was a leader of the coup that unseated the elected civilian government Dec. 31, 1983, and installed Buhari.

Nigerian experts in London said Buhari was at his home village, away from the capital of Lagos, and his second-in-command, Maj. Gen. Tunde Idiagbon, was on a religious pilgrimage to Saudi Arabia.

Announcement of the coup was broadcast on regional stations throughout Nigeria, and a dusk-to-dawn curfew was announced in Lagos and all state capitals.

In a 14-minute address that apparently was pre-taped, Babangida promised a cleanup of the economy and a review of the cases of some of the hundreds of people detained by the previous regime. The speech was monitored in Abidjan.

He promised to overhaul the country's feared secret police, release jailed journalists and review the cases of other detainees awaiting trial.

He said the 1983 coup was meant to end "the mismanagement of the economy, lack of public accountability, insensitivity of the political leadership and a general deterioration in the standard of living."

But "Nigerians have since then been under a regime that continued the trend," Babangida said.

Maj. Gen. Sanni Abacha, a member of the Supreme Military Council, told the nation of 83 million earlier on the state-run radio: "The state of the country's economy is getting more and more deplorable," and "the life of the ordinary citizen is becoming increasingly unbearable."

Babangida became a Nigerian hero in 1975 for helping put down an abortive coup in which the country's popular military leader, Brig. Murtala Muhammed, was assassinated.

The coup announcement came early in the morning after the feast of Weinberger scuttles production of gun

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Tuesday he was scuttling production of a new air-defense gun on which the Army has sunk $1.8 billion, because it doesn't work much better than the weapons the service has now.

Before Weinberger's decision, the Army had planned to spend another $3 billion on the weapon, a twin-cannon gun unit mounted atop a tank chassis and known formally as the Division Air Defense gun or Divad.

"The independent operational tests demonstrated that the system's performance does not effectively meet the growing (Soviet) military threat," Weinberger said.

"The tests demonstrated also that while there are marginal improvements that can be made to the Divad, these are not significant compared to the capability of current air defense weapons and therefore, not worth the additional cost," Weinberger said. "So we will not invest any more funds in this system."

The cancellation of a weapon program, particularly after production has begun, is rare.

Although the Sgt. York has been plagued with development problems almost from its inception, Weinberger's decision caught many Army leaders by surprise.

They had argued privately the weapon was worth preserving because additional improvements could be made, and that the Army needed a radar-directed gun that could operate at night and in bad weather.

The Sgt. York has been under development for more than seven years. The Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp., after winning a competition against the General Dynamics Corp., received a contract in 1981 to supply up to 618 Divad units. The company, which assembles the Sgt. York at a plant in Newport Beach, Calif., had delivered 65. Weinberger said he had ordered the Army not to accept any more of the guns.

Ford Aerospace said Tuesday the

New policy encourages responsible drinking

By JERI HEIDRICK
Campus Editor

Campus groups are encouraging students to drink responsibly since the legal drinking age was raised this summer, University officials say.

The Ad Hoc Committee on Campus Drinking Policies — a group of students and University personnel formed this summer — put together a proposed University alcohol policy in order for campus groups to have guidelines on alcohol consumption because of recently implemented alcohol legislation. The Kansas Legislature changed the legal drinking age for 3.2 beer from 18 to 19 on July 1.

The policy would limit how campus groups can serve cereal malt beverages at events, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for student affairs.

"The proposed guidelines say that we (the University) will be committed to non-alcoholic programming," Bosco said. "If a group sponsors an event and has cereal malt beverages, they just must follow some guidelines. The proposed guidelines just complement our aggressive non-alcoholic campaign."

Members of the ad hoc committee include Mark Jones, Student Senate chairman; Rosanne Proite, assistant director in the Department of Housing; Charles Beckom, captain of the KSU Police Department; Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs; Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney; Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development; and Sally Routson, coordinator of Student Activities.

Bosco said as the members were chosen "we tried to have a representative sampling from those areas most directly affected" by the drinking law change.

Guidelines in the proposed policy include precautionary measures to ensure that alcoholic beverages are neither accessible nor served to people under legal drinking age or people who appear to be intoxicated. Direct access to 3.2 percent beer would be limited to designated servers.

Other guidelines state that no function may include drinking contests and that non-alcoholic beverages must be available at the same place as the alcoholic beverages.

Bosco said the committee will take the policy statement to the Council of Student Affairs once campus groups, such as Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, the Association of Residence Halls, Union Activities Board and Intercollegiate Athletic Council, discuss the guidelines. The guidelines could become University policy in mid-to-late September if the Council of Student Affairs approves of the proposed policy.

The policy also contains a violations section. According to the policy, if violations occur, appropriate action will be taken by the campus group sponsoring the event at which the offense occurred. Determination of appropriate action will be determined by the group with jurisdiction in that area.

University action may be taken in addition to any prosecution by the city, county or state, according to the policy.

Another section states any disorderly person will be barred from attending an athletic event or will be evicted from the site of the event.

Bosco said it's the campus group's responsibility to deal with the education and enforcement of the proposed policy.

ARH also approved drinking guidelines in May. An ARH guideline states that an approval form be adopted by each hall. The approval form will include the number of participants at events, the anticipated amount of 3.2 percent beer to be served and a list of people in charge of entrances and kegs. Another guideline states residence hall organizations provide alternative transportation for individuals from hall functions to avoid liability.

Keith Petracek, junior in electrical engineering and president of ARH, said peer pressure from older students will be a factor in keeping minors from drinking 3.2 percent beer allowed in the halls.

"It is a privilege to be able to have cereal

Moslems hijack bus in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslems hijacked a busload of Christians bound for Beirut's airport Tuesday and rival militias shelled areas in and around the capital.

In south Lebanon, Israeli troops and the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army militia shelled six Shiite Moslem villages in apparent retaliation for guerrilla attacks, security sources reported.

There was no report on casualties in the south Lebanon shelling and no independent confirmation that Israelis were involved. Sources with the U.N. peacekeeping force in the area say Israeli units operate with the militia in the "security zone" Israel has established just north of its border.

Beirut newspapers predicted another all-out round of fighting unless Christian and Moslem commanders cooperate with a Syrian-sponsored cease-fire that began at midnight last Thursday.

Spy case 'inexplicable' to Kohl

BONN, West Germany — Chancellor Helmut Kohl said Tuesday it was "completely inexplicable" that a top counterspy who defected to Communist East Germany held his job despite a drinking problem, heavy debts and depression over the death of his wife.

His remarks, reported by the chief government spokesman, came after Kohl conducted an emergency Cabinet session to review the spy scandal, which is being called the worst in West German history.

Ost told reporters: "The chancellor said he found it 'completely inexplicable' that no action was taken earlier."

He said Kohl expected to start a personnel shakeup in the nation's spy apparatus by the end of the week.

Since the beginning of the month, four suspected spies — Tiedge, two government employees and a Bonn lobbyist — have fled the country. All are believed to be in East Germany.

Craft may be hired for anchor job

NEW YORK — Christine Craft says she may soon be a television news show anchor again after two years on the college lecture circuit and writing a book about her court battle with her former employer.

"I'm looking for a job and I may have found one. I'll know some time next week," Craft said Monday at a rally for equal pay for women doing the same work as men.

Craft said the job offer was in California, and is an anchor position.

In a lawsuit against her former employer, Metromedia Inc., which operated KMBC-TV in Kansas City, Mo., Craft charged that she was asked by station management to change her on-the-air appearance.

Two jury verdicts in her favor were reversed on appeal, and she is planning an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Collision spills radioactive material

BOWDON, N.D. — A truck hauling drums of uranium oxide collided with a freight train Tuesday, killing the driver of the truck and spilling the low-level radioactive material, authorities said.

A crewman aboard the Burlington Northern train was exposed to the chemical but was not hospitalized.

No evacuations were ordered in the 4:45 p.m. accident, but authorities sealed off the area, about three miles east of Bowdon and 70 miles northeast of Bismarck, said Doug Friez, a supervisor for the North Dakota Division of Emergency Management.

Firefighters feud over Jerry's kids

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Firefighters feuding with the city because they weren't allowed to keep free Christmas food donated last year have voted not to collect money during Jerry Lewis' muscular dystrophy telethon this year.

Officials of the International Association of Fire Fighters Local No. 64 say collecting money would violate the city's ethics code, which was cited last Christmas when Acting Fire Chief Kenneth Poole returned two turkeys to local businesses and gave donated soap to the Salvation Army.

"The city's code on ethics says no soliciting or accepting gratuities of any type," said Bill Hollander, secretary-treasurer of the union.

"Last year we were made to give everything back," Hollander said. "When it's convenient for the city, they want you to do it, but when it's not, they don't. Everybody's upset about it but they feel they have to draw the line somewhere."

Republicans cancel Landon party

TOPEKA — The annual celebration honoring the birthday of Alf M. Landon, former Kansas governor and 1936 Republican nominee for president, has been cancelled following the statesman's recent fall at his home.

The Shawnee County Republican Party announced Tuesday it had scrubbed the traditional birthday celebration, scheduled for Sept. 8 at the Landon residence in northwest Topeka.

Landon served as governor in 1933-37. He will be 98 years old on Sept. 9. That same day, Vice President George Bush is scheduled to deliver a Landon Lecture on campus.

Landon fell while getting out of bed on Aug. 20 and complained of pain following the fall. He was taken by ambulance to a hospital here where X-rays of his tailbone proved negative. He then returned home to rest and recuperate.

Lack of tickets disappoints fans

LONDON, Ont. — While Bruce Springsteen belted out "Born in the USA" to 55,000 fans at Exhibition Stadium in Toronto, 600 other fans were left dancing in the dark because vouchers they bought from a vendor were worthless.

Music Mann Tours sold the $69 vouchers for transportation and admittance to Springsteen's performances Monday or Tuesday. However, police here were notified Monday by a Music Mann lawyer that the firm didn't have tickets.

Police delivered the bad news to a crowd at a city park waiting for the Music Mann buses, and the disappointed fans left peacefully.

Wyeth strips to bare bones for art

NEW YORK — Artist Andrew Wyeth, who paints in a starkly realistic style, says he once had a friend X-ray him from head to toe so he could accurately paint a fleshless self-portrait.

The painting, a birthday gift four years ago for his wife, Betsy, shows Wyeth as a skeleton, clad only in an 1812 Navy coat, sitting atop a lighthouse watchtower, looking out to sea.

But the bones could not belong to just anyone. "Oh no," the 68-year-old artist said in an interview with Arts & Antiques magazine, "those are my bones."

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Government Editor

It was spring 1985, and Steve Brown, then a sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, had a dream. He wanted to be student body president.

Brown said he wanted the student government at K-State to concentrate on the students. He said he wanted to take care of the "trivial things that bother everybody."

Brown had several goals to reach before his dream could come true. He said he wanted campus lighting improved. He said he wanted the campus to be accessible for handicapped students. He said he wanted the library to remain open longer for student use. He said he thought students should be able to understand their instructors. Most of all, Brown said he wanted open lines of communication between students and the student body president.

It is now fall 1985, and Brown has begun to fulfill his dream, but with some minor changes.

Improved campus lighting is no longer one of Brown's main goals. Instead his focus is on the problems of campus security in general.

"Ken Heinz did a lot of work on the campus lighting issue," Brown said. "There are now maps out on which areas are well-lit and which aren't. We are now mainly dealing with campus security."

The lack of officers on campus at night is one security problem which Brown is trying to solve.

"I've never seen an officer on campus at night, and I'm on campus a lot," Brown said. "I know they're (campus security) getting money, even though they say they don't have the money for it."

Brown also plans to work on the issue of campus accessibilty for the handicapped. He said he will be contacting members of the Handicapped Students Committee to discuss the problem.

High on Brown's list of priorities is funding for the library. Brown said he would like to see the library extend its hours, but would probably let library officials decide where the money could be put to best use.

"Right now we have the worst library in the Big Eight in terms of the 10 criteria used to evaluate the libraries, like volumes purchased and employee help. For seven out of those 10 (criteria) we are the worst," Brown said.

The 10 criteria are measurements of library resources, said Leslie Manning, associate dean of libraries. Farrell Library has the lowest level of resources in seven of those areas, she said.

Plans for increasing communications between students and the student body president are also under way, Brown said.

"I'm still trying to get my public relations person a column in the Collegian," Brown said. He also said that KSDB-FM would be starting a program on Wednesday nights featuring Brown in a fireside chat situation. A call-in program on KSDB is also a possibility, Brown said.

Brown said faculty evaluations has become a high priority issue on campus.

"Everyone's looking into it," he said. "The Board of Regents, Associated Students of Kansas and Student Advisory Council have each met to discuss it. Student Advisory Council met last week and is preparing a paper it can present to the regents."

Brown said the goal for faculty evaluations is to have one uniform evaluation program all the colleges can implement.

Applications available for seats on committee

By The Collegian Staff

Applications for student members of the K-State president selection committee are now being accepted in the Student Government Services office.

There are three positions available for students on the committee. One position is automatically filled by Student Body President Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine. One position will be filled by an undergraduate student and the other by a graduate student.

Persons selecting the student members are Brown, Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities, and two as yet unnamed students who are not applying for the committee.

Brown said he is not sure how interviews for the committee will be set up, but stressed that students with no heavy time commitments will probably be preferred.

"It's hard to set guidelines for a committee," Brown said. "A lot of people don't realize how much time it's going to take."

Two applications for undergraduate students and two for graduate students will be sent to the Board of Regents, who will make the final selections.

"The Regents must have those applications by Tuesday," Brown said. "They will make their final selections probably at their meeting in September."

Brown also said he is not sure where the committee will be meeting.

"We may have to go to Topeka," he said.

The president selection committee will probably consist of 10 members, Brown said. There will be three faculty members, three student members, three members from the alumni/community and one member from the administration.

Applications must be turned into the SGA office by 5 p.m. Thursday.

The Navigator's meeting was incorrectly advertised as Tuesday, August 27. The actual date should have read Thursday, August 29 at 7:30 p.m. in Union 207. The Collegian regrets any inconvenience this may have caused you.

Retention is top priority

As expected, enrollment is down this semester. About 600 fewer students enrolled Monday than enrolled the first day of classes last fall.

Although enrollment is up in the Colleges of Business Administration and Architecture and Design, the overall picture for enrollment figures at K-State and universities across the nation is grim.

The baby boomers are gone. In Kansas, the number of high school seniors has dropped 25 percent in the last 15 years. Therefore, K-State must be more competitive by upgrading its academic programs as well as taking steps to aid student retention.

Michael Lynch, director of the Academic Assistance Center in Holton Hall, said nearly half of all students will drop out of school within their first eight semesters.

To aid in student retention, the center offers a learning skills seminar to teach study skills in conjunction with required courses. A course-supplement program uses graduate students and upperclassmen who provide additional study assistance to new students. They help students review their notes or study for tests.

The center provides a good example of the kinds of programs that should be implemented on a larger scale. Several departments, including modern languages, mathematics and accounting, and the Division of Biology, offer free help sessions on a regular basis or prior to major exams. Those involved in the sessions should also be congratulated.

University officials have been studying the problem of, and possible solutions for, improving the academic advising program. They should be encouraged to continue along that course and place it at the top of their priority lists.

During the summer semester, oral proficiency requirements were set up for foreign instructors and graduate teaching assistants. This was the result of complaints from students that they could not understand some instructors.

K-State has taken many positive measures to compensate for declining enrollment, and administrators should be encouraged to continue to deal with the problem.

It is predicted that enrollment in colleges and universities will continue to decline. Academic excellence must be the basis on which the university will compete.

Illiteracy rate is appalling

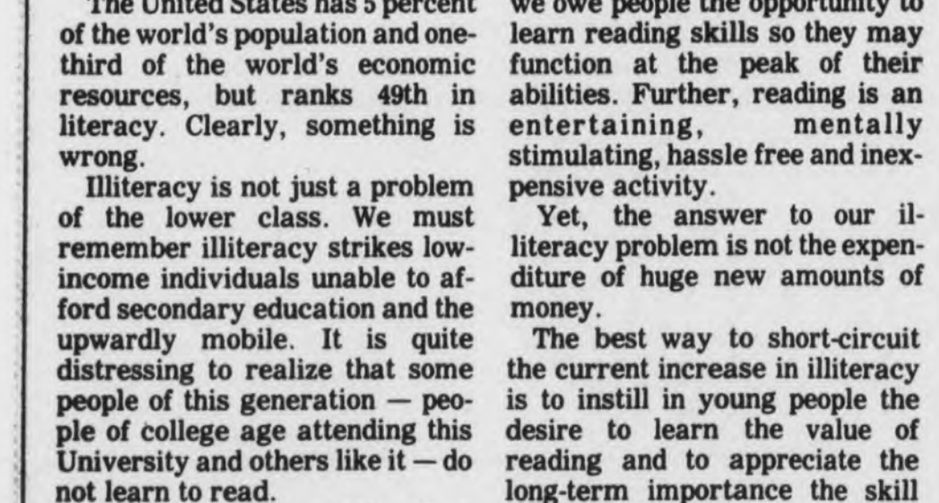
Although compulsory education has been a fixture in American life for years, our illiteracy rate is climbing.

Recent figures released by the U.S. Department of Education indicate there is a 20 percent functional illiteracy rate and a 32 percent marginal illiteracy rate among adults. Minority youth illiteracy may now run as high as 40 percent. This equates to 2.3 million additional adult illiterates each year.

The United States has 5 percent of the world's population and one-third of the world's economic resources, but ranks 49th in literacy. Clearly, something is wrong.

Illiteracy is not just a problem of the lower class. We must remember illiteracy strikes low-income individuals unable to afford secondary education and the upwardly mobile. It is quite distressing to realize that some people of this generation — people of college age attending this University and others like it — do not learn to read.

When scholars speak of a "literacy crisis," many simply mean that undergraduates seem not to write as lucidly as students of earlier generations did.



But the real literacy crisis, according to Jonathan Kozol, author and advocate for educational interests of the disadvantaged, is that millions of Americans have little or no access to the written word.

There have always been, and there will always be students who do not reach some academic standard. But education is the great equalizer in our society and we owe people the opportunity to learn reading skills so they may function at the peak of their abilities. Further, reading is an entertaining, mentally stimulating, hassle free and inexpensive activity.

Yet, the answer to our illiteracy problem is not the expenditure of huge new amounts of money.

The best way to short-circuit the current increase in illiteracy is to instill in young people the desire to learn the value of reading and to appreciate the long-term importance the skill will have throughout their lives.

Presidential selection needs student input

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

Are we turning out students or cars?

That's the question several people asked themselves after reading the comments of Stan Koplick, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, in the August 8 Manhattan Mercury.

In explaining the selection process for the new University president, Koplick stated that the regents "must match the institution and the president...If Lee Iacocca became available we might waive the PhD."

The implication that Lee Iacocca, with his reputation for no-nonsense sales "matches" the goals of an institution of higher learning is disconcerting, indeed.

In recent years the question of whether we should market students or educate them is receiving more thought. The "admit 'em, graduate 'em, move 'em out" tactic makes the most financial sense. Educating, say, a chemist in library science has no direct purpose, no financial reward.

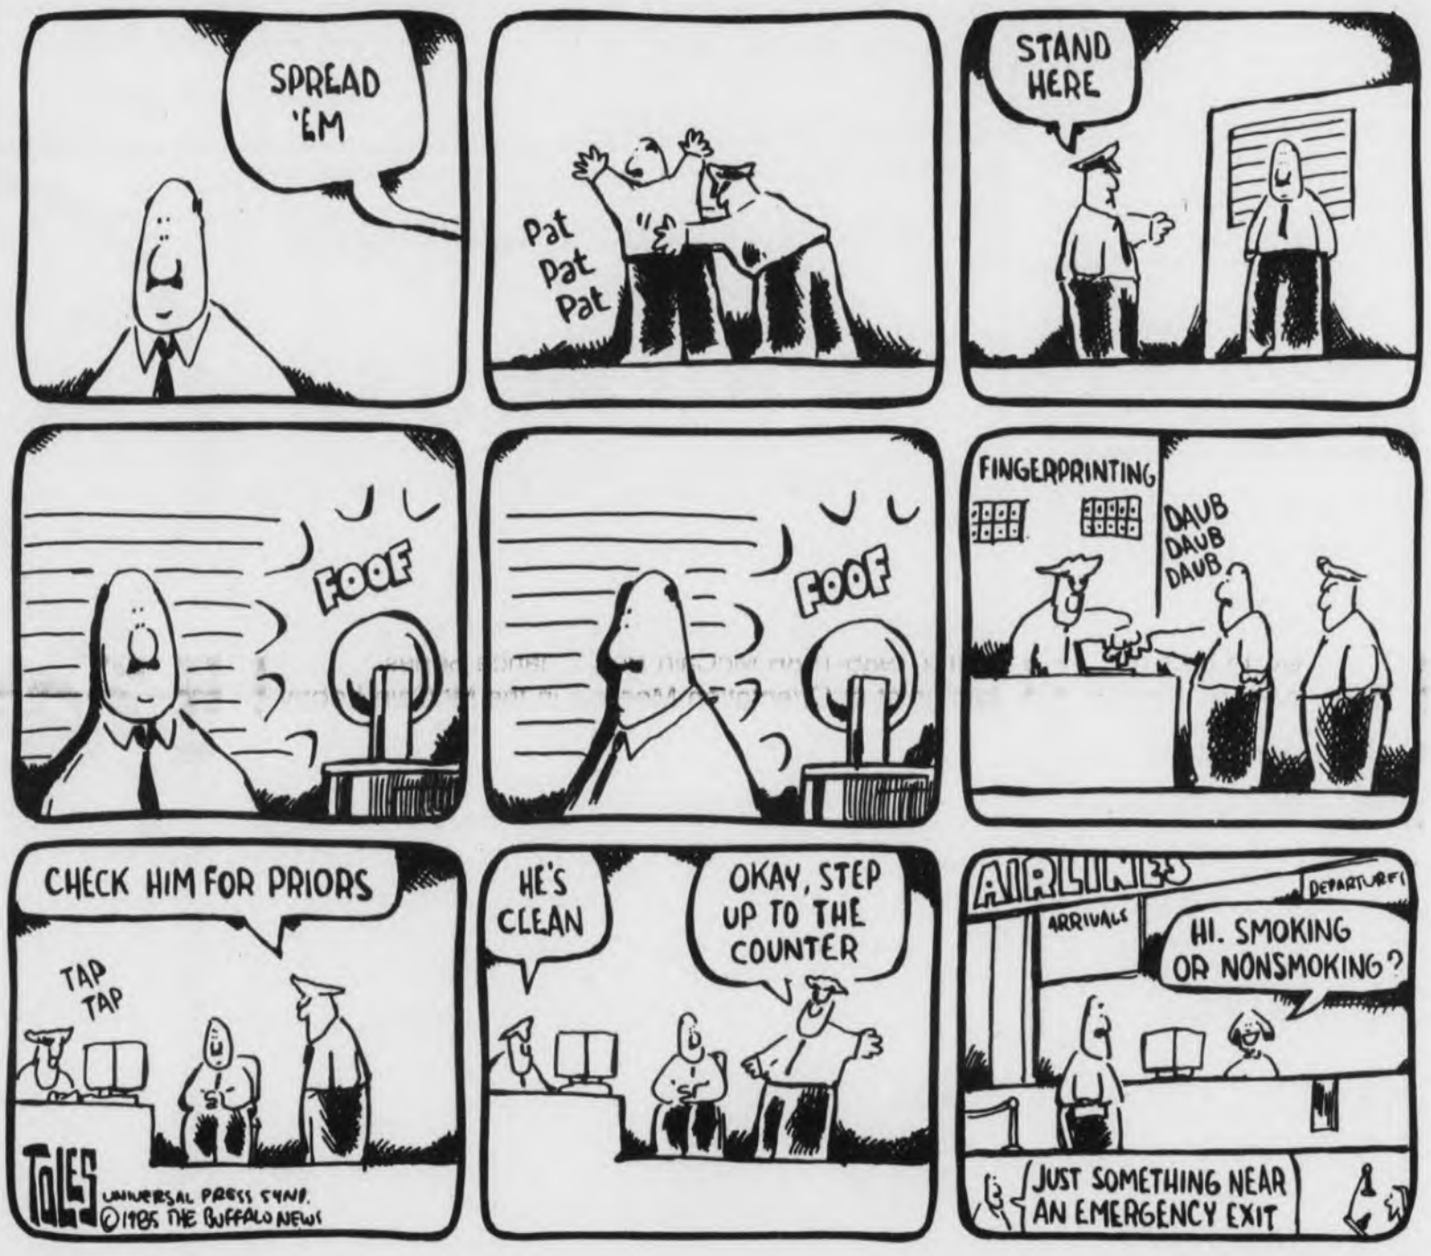
Koplick noted, though, that K-State is a comprehensive university doing an "excellent job." Few can argue that as an institution of higher learning, K-State is ethically bound to uphold, or at least tolerate, the expensive and less productive practice of introducing its students to all forms of knowledge.

Our Party party Student Body President, Steve Brown, has recently been given one of the most important assignments he will perform for K-State. He will choose the student candidates for the committee to select the new University president. President Duane Acker will leave his post June 30, 1986.

If ever there has been an urgency about a student issue, this is the issue. The decision of this committee will shape the course of the University for the next 10 to 20 years. The time during which concerned students may apply to be on the committee is the next 24 hours.

Brown, who received word of his task only last week, designed an application form Monday morning and has set the deadline for applications at 5 p.m. Thursday. Brown must make his decision by Monday, September 2. Applications may be picked up in the Student Governing Association office in the Union.

The committee will be composed of three faculty members, three students, three alumni/community citizens and one administrator.



Brown will serve as one of the three students. Koplick has requested that Brown submit four names — two graduate students and two undergraduates. From those four, the regents will choose the final two.

The selection committee will choose three finalists from the list of University presidential candidates, and the regents will make the final choice.

Except for those involved closely in student government, few are aware of the impending deadline. Students who voted for Brown wanted a change in the "way things are." There is no better opportunity for those students than this committee. The word must be spread quickly to all, especially to those who are still "Mad as Hell."

The committee will take time, meeting weekly and perhaps bi-weekly, but for those who would like to see more emphasis on academic goals, the time will be well spent.

ANYONE MAY submit a guest column offering an opinion on a topic of public interest. Columns should be about three double-spaced typewritten pages. Persons submitting columns will be asked to show identification and have a picture taken. The Collegian reserves the right to reject any material or edit it for space.

Tolerance, education necessary in viewing religion

Editor,

Re: Daniel Grubb's column, "Religion is a 'fairy tale' for believers," in the August 27 Collegian:

Daniel Grubb has carried the sweeping generalization to its logical, or perhaps illogical, extremes in his lumping of all religions together as "fairy tales." Equating all the world's religions ignores the rich diversity of faiths which make the world such an interesting place to live.

Many of the great historical figures which our species has produced spent more years than Grubb has lived studying religion. Were all these men — Christians, Moslems, Hindus or Buddhists — wasting their time on fairy tales? I don't know the answer to that question and I seriously doubt that Grubb does.

I don't know how Grubb became an expert on religions but he is sadly misinformed about at least one Catholic's religious views — my own. I choose to call myself a Catholic because I believe in the teachings of Christ and I agree with many, though not all, of the teachings of the Catholic church.

This does not mean that I blindly follow every dictate of the church, or that I think exactly like every other Catholic. My faith is certainly not based on the belief that all other faiths are false. I have found my way to God. The fact that other people have followed very different paths does not disturb me.

I believe that when each individual uses religion to guide his own life, religion can improve the world. When we use our religions to try and control other people's lives, we are doomed to failure and, as current events show, we create suffering in the world.

Grubb's intolerance of religions in general is no better than the various religions' intolerance of each other. I believe that such intolerance is at the center of much of the religious and secular strife present in the world today.

Falwell's comments on South Africa are unjustified

Editor,

Well, there he goes again. Not satisfied with inflicting his "morality" on us here at home, the Rev. Jerry Falwell went to South Africa, bringing light to the benighted. And Protestantism into the 17th Century.

The plight of the Major Majority in that troubled land is well documented in this country and around the world, but apparently (like AIDS) this is a reflection of Divine Will: they've earned it. But darned if he doesn't make Soweto sound like a reward.

And, of course, Falwell hasn't simply jumped to these conclusions (i.e., reinvest, buy Kruggerands, etc.) He met with none other than P.W. "Pee Wee" Botha, who put him in touch with "legitimate" representatives of the non-white populations. This has given him a justification to call Bishop Tutu a "phony," thereby deriding him both politically and, by innuendo, religiously. And "Truth goes out the door when money comes innuendo."

What's the matter, Jer? Competition got you nervous? Don't let that guy's Anglican bishopric and Nobel Prize overshadow you honorary doctorate. That phony isn't even on TV on Sunday mornings.

This would all make a lovely sitcom if it weren't for the fact that people are dying, children are being tortured by the authorities, and most sadly, racial war seems all but inevitable. Remember the Zulu Wars? This may just make them look like a Boy Scout jamboree.

I'm not suggesting that I have any answers to the problems of South Africa. The government has defined the terms already: Power derives from the barrel of a gun. (Where have I heard that before?) In this context the majority has as few options as Washington and Jefferson, et al. However I can't see any possible amelioration with Jerry de Torquemada stirring the waters. At least no one will drown wading through the depth of his understanding. I'd hate to take up Tutu's time, but it would be enlightening to see the two of them meet for a Landon Lecture debate. Perhaps Julian Bond or Jesse Jackson could make it.

C'mon, Jer. Even the carrion crows wait for the battle to end before they feast. Have you no shame? Why not start your reinvestment with one of Jaluka's albums?

In the past, children have been introduced to the realm of violence in fairy tales such as "Little Red Riding Hood" and "Goldilocks and the Three Bears."

"Television can reach children at a far earlier age than any other medium," said John P. Murray, new head of the Department of Family and Child Development.

Research findings support conclusions of behavioral differences in children when they view violent programs as opposed to when they view a "pro-social" program such as "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," Murray said.

"Children who view a diet of violent programs were shown to have increased aggression toward each other and their teacher," Murray said. "The same children who viewed a diet of pro-social and pro-caring programs showed an increase in spontaneous caring toward each other and would work cooperatively both with each other and with their teacher."

Murray said most children's programs are not geared toward a specialized age group but are written with a broad spectrum of ages in mind.

"Saturday morning programs are animated and have high action that is violent. It doesn't have to be violent, but it is. This holds the attention of children from infancy to preteen age.

Viewing leads to increased aggression

"No one program is beneficial to all ages," he said.

Murray explained a tendency among TV broadcasters to focus on programs with a wide audience appeal because of the advertising revenue generated. He said children's programs such as "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhod" have to be underwritten in order to survive.

"Children's programs like 'Sesame Street' are expensive in comparison to animated cartoons," Murray said. "They have to be analyzed and revised until the best possible program is produced."

In addition, programs written to narrow age ranges, such as 3- to 4-year-olds, are seldom chosen by advertisers and therefore must be carried by the company producing the program or the network.

The types of violence introduced to adults during prime time and those introduced to children on Saturday morning are different, Murray said.

"On prime time there are generally five violent acts per hour, while on Saturday morning there are 20-25 violent acts per hour," Murray said. "The conclusion is that Saturday morning programming is five times more violent.

"Not only are the violent acts there, but they are set in a humorous context which seems to trivialize the acts of aggression."

Murray noted that there are positive aspects of children's television as well.

"We need to focus on what is right about television and highlight those effects," he said.

"Television is an effective communicator. It can be entertaining and broadly educational," Murray said. "It is now — if you are selective about what children watch."

Murray described television as a "window to the world for adults as well as children.

"We need to make that vision from the window as informative and useful as possible." he said.

Murray is a self-professed "closet activist" and is a member of two nationally recognized professional organizations concerned with the quality of children's programs.

He is also a member of the American Psychological Association, in which he was instrumental in initiating a public policy statement about the effects of violent programs on children.

The association passed a resolution in February 1985 which described the potential dangers viewing violence on television might pose.

The pamphlet Murray published in accordance with the association included three effects of viewing violence on television.

— Children may become less sensitive to the pain and suffering of others.

— Children may be more fearful of the world around them.

— Children may be more likely to behave in aggressive or harmful ways toward others.

According to Murray, parents maintain the power to moderate the influence of television violence.

He lists some actions parents can take, such as watching an episode of the programs their children view, discussing what motivated the character to commit a violent act, and encouraging their children to watch programs that demonstrate caring and cooperation.

"I'm optimistic enough to believe that if we talk about an issue long enough it will change," Murray said. "We're beginning to see a little bit of a change even now."

Minority minister garners support

Boesak emerges as anti-apartheid rebel

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — From within the segregated fold of the Afrikaners' church, the Rev. Allan Boesak has emerged as one of South Africa's foremost rebels against apartheid.

The Dutch Reformed minister, who has denounced the ruling whites as "the spiritual children of Adolf Hilter," was jailed without charge Tuesday on the eve of his most daring venture — an illegal mass march to Pollsmoor Prison to demand the release of jailed black leader Nelson Mandela.

A member of the mixed-race minority — "coloreds," in South African parlance — who commands widespread support among blacks, Boesak got the white branches of the Dutch Reformed Church expelled from the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

His appeal for a "united front" resulted in 1983 in the formation of the United Democratic Front, an umbrella organization with 600 affiliates which is now the main anti-apartheid organization.

In speeches at home and abroad, he has urged civil disobedience and sanctions against this country, promoted consumer boycotts of white businesses and accused the Afrikaners of a "subtle form of genocide."

"There is a way in which they rule us that distinctly reminds me of Nazism," said the Cape Town clergyman, who in 1982 was elected head of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. At Boesak's instigation the 70 million-strong alliance has declared apartheid a "heresy."

Leading demonstrations and preaching at funerals for victims of a year of anti-apartheid riots, Boesak was inviting arrest even before he announced the march to demand the release of Mandela, who is serving a life term for sabotage.

Boesak, who had predicted the march would turn the country on its head, had been one of the few United Democratic Front leaders still at liberty five weeks after South Africa declared a state of emergency.

The South African Broadcasting Corp. described the march as "reckless." The Citizen, a pro-government daily newspaper, said Monday that Boesak wanted political martyrdom, adding, "There may come a time — perhaps this week — when the authorities will oblige him."

Boesak learned to hate apartheid early. His father, a teacher, died when Boesak was six, and his mother raised eight children in Somerset West, a wine-growing district of the Cape Province where most of South Africa's 2.8 million coloreds live.

As a child, he worked as a barefoot laborer and at 14 became a sexton — sweeping the church before Sunday services — in the local Nederduitse Gereformeerde Sendingkerk, the colored branch of the segregated Dutch Reformed Church.

As his bitterness grew, Boesak has said, he thought he would never again speak Afrikaans, the language of the coloreds and the Afrikaners, who comprise 60 percent of South Africa's 5 million whites.

While a theology student at the colored University of the Western Cape, he met the Rev. Beyers Naude, a leading white Dutch Reformed Church minister and anti-apartheid activist. That convinced him that "not all Boers were bad."

Boesak returned in 1976 from six years of theological studies in the Netherlands to a South Africa erupting in a year of black riots.

From his parish in Cape Town's Bellville South district, he plunged into politics. He chided coloreds and Asians who went along with the deal, introduced a year ago, as the "the junior partners in apartheid."

Airline plans to alter no smoking policy

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — The nation's only no-smoking airline will lose that billing Sept. 3, Muse Air officials said Monday.

Muse Air, which had banned smoking on its flights since it was formed four years ago, decided to allow people to light up after a survey showed passengers preferred smoking.

"Our goal is to make our product appeal to the greatest number of people and to provide a pleasant travel experience for all our passengers," said Ron Thornton, Muse Air vice president for sales and marketing.

Device could save school time, money

Staff members invent brush for edger

By POLLY COLIP
Staff Writer

A couple of enterprising University staff members have developed a device which could save the campus more than $4,000 in maintenance costs this year. Their invention added some cash to their pockets as well.

Don Sherley, laborer supervisor, and Rod Ruthstrom, automotive mechanic, shared a $422 award from the state for inventing a brush attachment for a curb-edger, a machine used to trim grass along curbs. The brush sweeps grass cuttings into the gutter so they can be swept-up by a street sweeper.

Before Ruthstrom invented the brush attachment, the job required three workers, a tractor, a trailer, brooms and shovels, Ruthstrom said.

"It used to take about a week to finish the whole campus, and now it takes about a day," he said.

The Grounds Maintenance Service began using the brush attachment a year ago. After it had worked and saved time, Ruthstrom said Sherley and he submitted the idea to the Faculty-Staff Suggestion Committee.

When faculty and staff make suggestions of ways to save money, labor and energy, monetary awards can be given through the State of Kansas Employee Awards Program.

Suggestions are made to the campus awards committee, who reviews them and makes selections to be sent to the state committee, said Helen G. Cooper, management analyst and chairman of the Faculty-Staff Suggestion Committee.

"We evaluate each suggestion individually, against the regulations established by the state guidelines. We look at what suggestions are useful and practical," Cooper said. "The suggestions are not submitted in competition with one another."

The state committee hears the suggestions and proposed award amounts submitted by the various state agencies, then decides if the suggestion is a viable means of saving state money, said Linda Morse, chairman for the State of Kansas Employee Awards committee.

"The key to the program is whether or not the agency adopts the suggestion," Morse said. "It is a way the state encourages employees to find ways to cut costs, labor and energy-use in their own agencies."

Most suggestions and proposed money awards are approved, Morse said.

The amount of the award is calculated as 10 percent of the amount the University can save with the improvement, Cooper said. The minimum amount awarded is $10, and the maximum is $1,000.

Some awards can't be calculated in terms of monetary value, such as suggestions which encourage workers or make the working environment more comfortable.

One of these suggestions was made by Frank Carpenter, then associate dean of the College of Agriculture. He suggested the use of ceiling fans to circulate wasted heat and make the room temperature warmer. He received a $25 award.

Thirty-five suggestions have been submitted by University faculty and staff since 1982, Cooper said. A total of five awards have been given.

Hearing will determine future of radio station

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission Tuesday scheduled a hearing in November on the license renewal application of a Dodge City radio station that has attracted sharp criticism for airing racial hate programs.

The hearing is to begin Nov. 15 before John Frysiak, an administrative law judge for the FCC. The proceeding will determine whether the operating license of the station, formerly called KTTL, should be renewed it or whether it should be granted to a competing application by a Dodge City group, Community Service Broadcasting Inc.

The station's license renewal, usually a routine matter for a broadcaster, drew national attention after civil rights gruops and other objected because KTTL aired taped programs filled with vitriolic attacks on Jews, blacks and others. The programs, which have been discontinued, were produced by two self-described ministers, one of which is associated with the Posse Comitatus, a right-wing paramilitary group of tax resisters.

In April, the commission ruled that the hate programs aired by the station in 1982 and 1983 were protected by the constitutional right of free speech and were not grounds to revoke the station's license. The decision in effect eliminated the programming as an issue in the renewal hearing.

Earlier this month, the commission released its written order directing the "comparative hearing" on KTTL's license renewal and providing a more lengthy explanation of its April decision.

Shuttle launch, deployment of satellite cargo a success

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Discovery's astronauts were launched Tuesday through the worst weather of the space shuttle program, then had to rush the release of an Australian satellite to keep it from broiling in the sun.

"Fantastic. We all breathed a sigh of relief down here," Mission Control said after the Aussat satellite was deployed a day ahead of schedule.

"You think you did!" exclaimed astronaut Mike Lounge with emphasis on the second "you."

NASA also decided to go ahead with the scheduled release later in the day of another satellite, for the American Satellite Co. It would be the first time in the shuttle program that two satellites were released on a single day.

The Australian payload, one of three satellites carried aloft in Discovery's cargo bay, had been scheduled for launch Wednesday but a damaged sunshield forced the early release.

The frame-and-fabric device was supposed to close like a clamshell over the satellite in the cargo bay until deployment time, but it hung up in the half-way position as it was opened for a satellite health check. Lounge then guided the ship's 50-foot robot arm to push it out of the way, leaving the satellite exposed.

"The Aussat satellite would have considerable difficulty in the cargo bay unprotected by a sunshield from the cold of deep space or from direct solar radiation," said Mission Control's Brian Welch. "The satellite has a very limited lifetime in the bay, perhaps only a few more orbits and at that point it would have serious problems."

Once in orbit, satellites rotate constantly like meat on a barbecue spit, preventing any portion from overheating or getting too cold.

After back-to-back scrubs Saturday and Sunday, tense launch officials gambled on a break in the clouds and sent Discovery on its eight-day mission with a spectacular liftoff that colored the clouds red, white and orange. Soon after the liftoff, the pad was obscured by a torrential downpour.

"Thanks for getting us up here," said commander Joe Engle as the launch control team's shift ended. "Don't worry about this other little stuff. We'll get it solved."

Avalon changes hands

Club serves 'party attitude'

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

New management and summer reconstruction has turned what used to be The Avalon club in Aggieville into Mannequins Ltd. Building owners Charlie and Connie Busch sold the business in mid-July to brothers Steve and John Willis of Kansas City, Kan.

"Up until three or four months ago I owned five operations, and there was a lot of overhead," Busch said. The Busches currently own and operate Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, Auntie Mae's Parlor and the Hibachi Hut. Until March 1985, the Busches owned Brothers Tavern. "I wasn't so concerned with which ones to sell, I just wanted to reduce the workload and the number of hassles," Busch said.

"We're real happy with it (grand opening)," said Steve Willis, managing owner. "The Phones helped set the pace for what we're trying to do.

"Some bars bring in the same bands over and over and what we want to do is bring in some bands that haven't played here before," he said.

Construction changes include removing three pillars, relocating and elevating the disc jockey booth, raising the stage three and one half feet and adding a platform in the back that will hold 50 to 75 people.

"This way there is more seating and the band is visible to more people," said Jed Schroeder, assistant manager. "We've hung some wild mannequins, like a bride on a motorcycle and a female and a male swimmer diving over their respective restrooms."

"It's a little bit darker and kind of different with the mannequins," said Jenny Galbraith, senior in natural resource management.

"The whole attitude has changed to more of a party attitude," Schroeder said. "The bands are like a bonus.

"The bands we're bringing to town aren't just bands that are passing through," he said. "We're bringing in a lot of new talent, like The Phones and The Producers — college music-oriented bands."

Other bands scheduled for the future include The Kidd Band and The Nelsons, Schroeder said.

"The wooden bar is nice, but they need more things on the wall," said Kathy Erdo, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine. "It needs to be more cheery."

"I think they're going in the right direction, by booking the commercial rock 'n' roll bands — high energy bands," Busch said.

Schroeder said the pricing scheme is basically the same (as The Avalon's).

Anti-apartheid activist detained before march

By The Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — The Rev. Allan Boesak, one of the nation's staunchest foes of apartheid, was jailed Tuesday on the eve of a protest march he was to lead to Pollsmoor Prison, where Nelson Mandela is serving a life term.

The government also suspended currency and share trading until Monday to halt the flight of capital. South Africa's rand, once worth more than $1, has declined sharply during a year of black riots against white-minority rule and hit a record low Tuesday of 35.75 cents.

Boesak's lawyer said the march would go ahead as planned Wednesday despite the leader's detention and government pledges to halt the illegal assembly.

Boesak, 39, is of mixed race and is president of the 70-million-member World Alliance of Reformed Churches. He was arrested at a roadblock near the University of the Western Cape, where he serves as chaplain.

He was detained indefinitely without charge under the Internal Security Act, police said.

In Washington, the State Department condemned the arrest and made a protest to the South African government.

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches said in Geneva, Switzerland, that Boesak's detention was "a manifestation of intolerance on the part of the South African government" and demanded his release. The statement was issued jointly by the alliance and the World Council of Churches.

Boesak is a fiery and eloquent opposition leader with a strong personal following. Outdoor political gatherings have been banned since 1976, and he was aware of the possibility of arrest when he announced the planned illegal march to Pollsmoor.

The government said Saturday that the march was banned and police would take "stern action" to stop it. Unconfirmed reports said police set up roadblocks to turn back buses bringing participants to the Cape Town area for the march, which Boesak predicted would draw 20,000 people.

Essa Moosa, Boesak's lawyer, said the march would be held as planned. "It is the people's march ... and it will go ahead," he told reporters.

Staff members in the cleric's office said police had told them he was "in transit," apparently indicating he had been sent to a prison out of the Cape Town area.

The Cape Town police chief, Brig. Gert Odendaal, said a soccer stadium in the city's Athlone mixed-race suburb, where the marchers are to assemble, would be sealed off throughout Wednesday. He called the march both illegal and "a serious threat to public safety."

CIA aids Nicaragan rebels despite ban

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three Nicaraguan Indian rebel leaders said Tuesday that CIA officers have brokered two agreements this year on how rival U.S.-backed insurgent groups should divide privately raised military supplies.

The leaders, active in Misura, the main coalition of Indians fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, said the agreements, brokered in Honduras, were struck with the larger Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, in February, and again in June.

The CIA's reported role in the deals came after Congress banned the agency from "supporting, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua." Congress passed the ban, known as the Boland amendment, last October.

Two congressional panels next month plan to examine whether the Reagan administration complied with the ban, particularly following reports that the White House's National Security Council helped the rebels raise money and offered military advice.

Rep. George E. Brown Jr., D-Calif., a member of the House Intelligence Committee, said the panel was aware of "continuing contacts" between the CIA and the rebels, but lacked any specific knowledge about the contents of those discussions.

The CIA has "been giving lip service to the Boland amendment, but not fully complying with it," said Brown. "The (administration's) legal eagles are interpreting all of the laws in a way to favor the policies of the president."

While refusing to comment on the Indian leaders' assertions, CIA spokeswoman Patti Volz said the agency is "complying with congressional obligations and restrictions."

The Indian leaders said despite the agreements, the FDN has failed to live up to the commitments, and has used its control over supplies to gain control of the Indian movement on Nicaragua's Atlantic coast. As a result, they said, the Indians' military campaign against the Sandinista government has been crippled in recent months.

The Indian rebel leaders, interviewed by The Associated Press, were Teofilo Archibald Wilson, a political director of Misura; Effrain Smith, a member of the Misura military high command and top commander of the Misura-aligned Southern Indigenous Creole Community, or SICC; and Charles Hodgson, an SICC political leader. They said their troops face serious shortages of food, uniforms and military equipment.

Bosco Matamoros, the FDN's representative in Washington, denied the charge. "We have always lived up to our obligations," he said.

Democratic senator to meet with Soviets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd led a Senate delegation on a mission to Moscow Tuesday and said he aims to convince top Soviet officials that Americans are united behind President Reagan as he heads into his fall summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"We feel that there's been too much rhetoric and the rhetoric ought to be lowered," Byrd told reporters at Andrews Air Force Base minutes before the delegation left.

"That goes for rhetoric on both sides. The tensions are too high, and we would hope that we could help the new leadership in the Soviet Union understand that while there might be a lot of sound and fury in our debates, that, underneath and on the fundamentals, the American people are united and the members of the Senate in both parties are united."

Kansas taverns may separate dancers, drinkers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Tavern owners may segregate beer drinkers from dancers with partitions and retain their licenses to sell beer, according to Attorney General Robert T. Stephan.

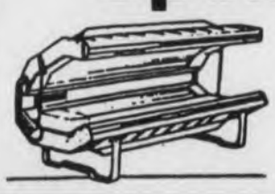
In a legal opinion issued to Rod Ludwig, Mitchell County attorney, Stephan said tavern owners may use partitions to separate drinkers from dancers as long as management ensures that patrons under the legal age of consumption do not consume, purchase or possess beer in or around the premises.

"A failure to do so may result in revocation of the owner's license," Stephan warned in the non-binding opinion.

Ludwig told Stephan in a letter that a tavern owner in the north-central Kansas county wanted his operating license changed to cover only the south side of his building.

The tavern owner planned to convert the north side to a dance hall and allow individuals of all ages to attend the dances. However, those too young to buy beer would have their hands stamped to prevent the illegal sale or consumption of beer.

Beer is currently sold in the entire building.



"If the county commission determines that the dance facility and tavern are two distinct places of business...a license for only the tavern portion of the building may be issued," Stephan said. "If such a license is approved, there is no statutory prohibition on maintaining a dance area in a separate part of the facility and allowing persons of all ages to attend."

The possibility of adults bringing beer into the dance hall was also a concern.

"As opposed to laws regulating private clubs, nothing in the cereal malt beverage statutes precludes persons of legal age from bringing beer into the dance portion of the building, as long as the purchase was completed in the tavern," Stephan said, noting the Mitchell County Commission had expressed fears such a practice would allow those under the legal drinking age to have easy access to beer.

Failure to regulate the flow of beer in the dance hall could cost the owner his operating license for six months.

Drinking

malt beverages in the halls and if it is abused, the older students will lose the privilege," Petracek said.

The proposed University alcohol and cereal malt beverage policy was planned for the sake of having reasonable guidelines for the students, Proite said.

Possible methods to ensure that students not of legal age don't drink at hall functions are hand-stamping and the use of hospital band-like bracelets, she said.

"All the halls are still in the discussion stage of what method they will use to distinguish between those of legal and illegal drinking age at functions," Proite said.

At the University of Kansas, students in residence halls won't be allowed to drink 3.2 percent beer in their rooms, but will be able to drink in designated areas in the student union. Students in residence halls at Emporia State University, Pittsburg State University and Fort Hays State University will be allowed to drink 3.2 percent beer in their rooms, officials at those universities said.

Panhellenic President Sherri Hager, senior in journalism and mass communications, and Interfraternity Council President Gary Arroyo, sophomore in veterinary medicine, both said the University's proposed policy would be strictly enforced by sorority and fraternity members. The councils will meet soon to discuss the proposed policy.

"The policy will not be hard to follow," Hager said. "We followed the guidelines during rush and everything went smoothly. Alternative drinks in addition to food will have to be served at functions where there is beer."

Several fraternities tried to have dry rush parties, but there was no ruling from the Office of Greek Affairs that required dry rush parties, Robel said. She said there was no beer at any of the sorority rush parties.

Fraternity parties over the weekend took a different approach to drinking. The Sigma Nu, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Alpha Gamma Rho, Kappa Sigma and Delta Tau Delta fraternities took safeguards to make sure under-age members did not drink.

Sigma Nu President Kent Green, senior in chemical engineering, said party goers at the fraternity Saturday night who were old enough to drink beer were required to have their hand stamped. Non-alcoholic beverages were also provided.

Safeguards taken by the AGRs, Delts, Kappa Sigs and Sig Eps at their Sunset Block Party Friday afternoon included using purple hospital bands for age clarification and professional security guards at the three carding booths.

"Fraternities and sororities are going to create more incentive for alternative programming," Robel said. "They're going to help educate members about the new laws but they're not going to be under 'I Spy' supervision."

York

Sgt. York had met the "contractual specification requirements established by the Army." The firm also suggested it might offer a replacement itself.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, applauded Weinberger's decision and said the action will likely boost the defense secretary's standing in Congress.

Designed to protect armored columns and troops from air attack, the Sgt. York consists of two 40 mm cannons — mounted atop a modified M48 tank chassis — linked to a special computer and radar. Weinberger suggested the weapon might have been flawed from the start because its cannons simply didn't have the range to strike Soviet helicopters carrying modern missiles.

Few details of his death were given, but the officials said he was wounded in a battle and was taken to a hospital where he died.

The officials identified the three captured suspects as Juan Miguel Garcia Melendez, Jose Abraham Dimas Aguilar and Willian Celio Rivas Bolanos.

Gen. Adolfo Blandon, the chairman of the armed forces Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the arrests had not been made when U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger announced last month that those responsible for the cafe massacres had been killed or captured.

Blandon called the arrests "a strong blow to terrorist organizations" and said more arrests would follow.

Nigeria

In Washington, the State Department said there was no indication that any of the 7,000 Americans in Nigeria were in danger. Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said later, "We have had a good relationship with Nigeria based on a convergence of enduring national interests. ... We expect that this relationship will continue."

The radio statement broadcast throughout Nigeria was read by Brig. Gen. Joshua Dogonyaro, who worked under Babangida as chief of army personnel in Lagos, the capital.

The statement said Buhari's Supreme Military Council was being removed because it had abused power and failed to revive an economy severely damaged by the glut of oil on world markets.

Dogonyaro said Buhari's overthrow of President Shehu Shagari had been welcomed "by the nation with unprecedented enthusiasm. Nigerians were unified in accepting the intervention and looked forward hopefully to progressive changes for the better."

He said there had been little progress after almost two years, however, and Buhari could not continue blaming the civilian government his coup deposed.

Oil brought Nigeria an economic boom in the 1970s, but the slump in prices brought a recession in the 1980s that was made worse by the corruption and mismanagement of the elected government.

Service assists students

Free check cashing in Union

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

Check cashing, a catch-22 if ever there was one.

Check cashers usually must pay a service charge in order to get their own money. But paying a service charge on checks is something K-State students don't have to experience.

The Union Check Cashing Service, located on the first floor of the Union, is available to help students, faculty and staff who find themselves with a shortage of cash on hand.

Because the service is underwritten by student fees, the Union may process checks free of charge as long as the checks don't bounce, said John Thoman, Union accountant.

First-party checks must be written for multiples of $5 and can be no larger than $50. There is also a $50 a day limit for anyone cashing a check. The limit is designed to ensure the service meets all of its cash demands and can serve as many people as possible, he said.

Another service provided at the check-cashing windows is the cashing of two-party checks. A two-party check can be cashed for any amount that doesn't exceed $50. Usually, the two-party checks are from a student's parents, roommate or employer and don't pose a problem for the service, according to Thoman. But he added that two-party checks can, at times, be more difficult to collect than first-party checks.

If a check cashed at the Union is returned for lack of funds, the Union will attempt to collect from the individual.

"First, we send out a certified letter to the bad-check casher. They have to sign it, and within seven days of the date of signing, they have to report to the Union. It's hoped they will pay it off plus the $8 service charge for a bad check," Thoman said.

The $8 service charge, however, isn't the only penalty for a bad check.

"Once you've bounced one, you're on a list until it's been cleared. Three bad checks and you're on the list for six months. If you write another bad check after the six months, you're on the list for another six months," he said.

Thoman listed students' lack of bookkeeping experience as a major cause of bad checks for the Union. Another reason for bad-check writing is not transferring funds to the checking account in time, he said.

People also need to be aware of service charges the bank may place on a checking account such as a 10 cent per check fee, he said.

The check cashing windows are open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The cashiers are the busiest on Fridays and from noon to 1 p.m. each weekday, according to Thoman.

Thoman offered the following suggestions to make check-cashing run smoother:

— Checks should have a local address and phone number either printed or written on them.

— People should check to see if another window is vacant before automatically waiting in line for the first window. On Friday two, and sometimes three, windows are open for service.

Resale of telephone service put on hold by commission

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Finalizing a tentative decision reached last October, the Kansas Corporation Commission has ruled that resale of local telephone service may be detrimental to local phone companies and their ratepayers and banned the practice in Kansas.

In an order signed late Friday, the three members of the utility regulatory board said not enough data exists to clearly convince them no danger is posed to the local companies. Until further facts and figures are presented, it will not allow resale of phone service except under few exemptions.

The commission ordered Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. and other local phone companies to collect data on how resale is affecting their revenues. The information regarding the impact of any revenue loss by local phone companies is to be submitted to the commission by May 1, 1987.

The commission defined the practice as any sharing or resale of local telephone service using more than 10 lines or electronic switchboard equipment, such as a Private Branch Exchange system called a PBX, in which the resale customers do not subscribe individually to local phone service.

Several issues surfaced during hearings last fall into the resale question. The hearings were triggered by a dispute between Bell and the Wichita Airport Authority.

Quarterback Williams happy with new offensive scheme

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

Sophomore quarterback Randy Williams will assume a new role this season on the K-State football team.

Last year, Williams began the year as the Wildcats' third-string quarterback behind seniors Stan Weber and Donnie Campbell. He ended up throwing just 51 passes on a run-oriented offense.

This year, Williams has been thrust into the projected starting role as one of the main components in a new, pass-oriented offense. This offense will hit the air in the season opener against Wichita State University Sept. 7 in KSU Stadium.

Williams' top performance of last season came in the Wildcats' 61-21 loss to the University of Missouri when he completed seven of 14 passes for 187 yards. The red-shirted freshman's only career start came in a 62-14 drubbing at the hands of the University of Nebraska. The starting assignment for Williams, who played because Weber was injured, would not have been an easy assignment for any college quarterback, let alone a redshirt freshman.

After last year's offense, which relied heavily on the running game and the talents of Weber — a run-oriented quarterback — Williams said he is pleased with the shift of offensive emphasis to the passing attack.

"We're going to open it up," he said. "It will be more exciting."

New offensive coordinator and quarterback coach Al Sandahl, formerly a quarterback coach at Syracuse University, has been working with Williams on some of the techniques of quarterbacking.

"He's taught me a lot about defenses and delivery of the ball," Williams said.

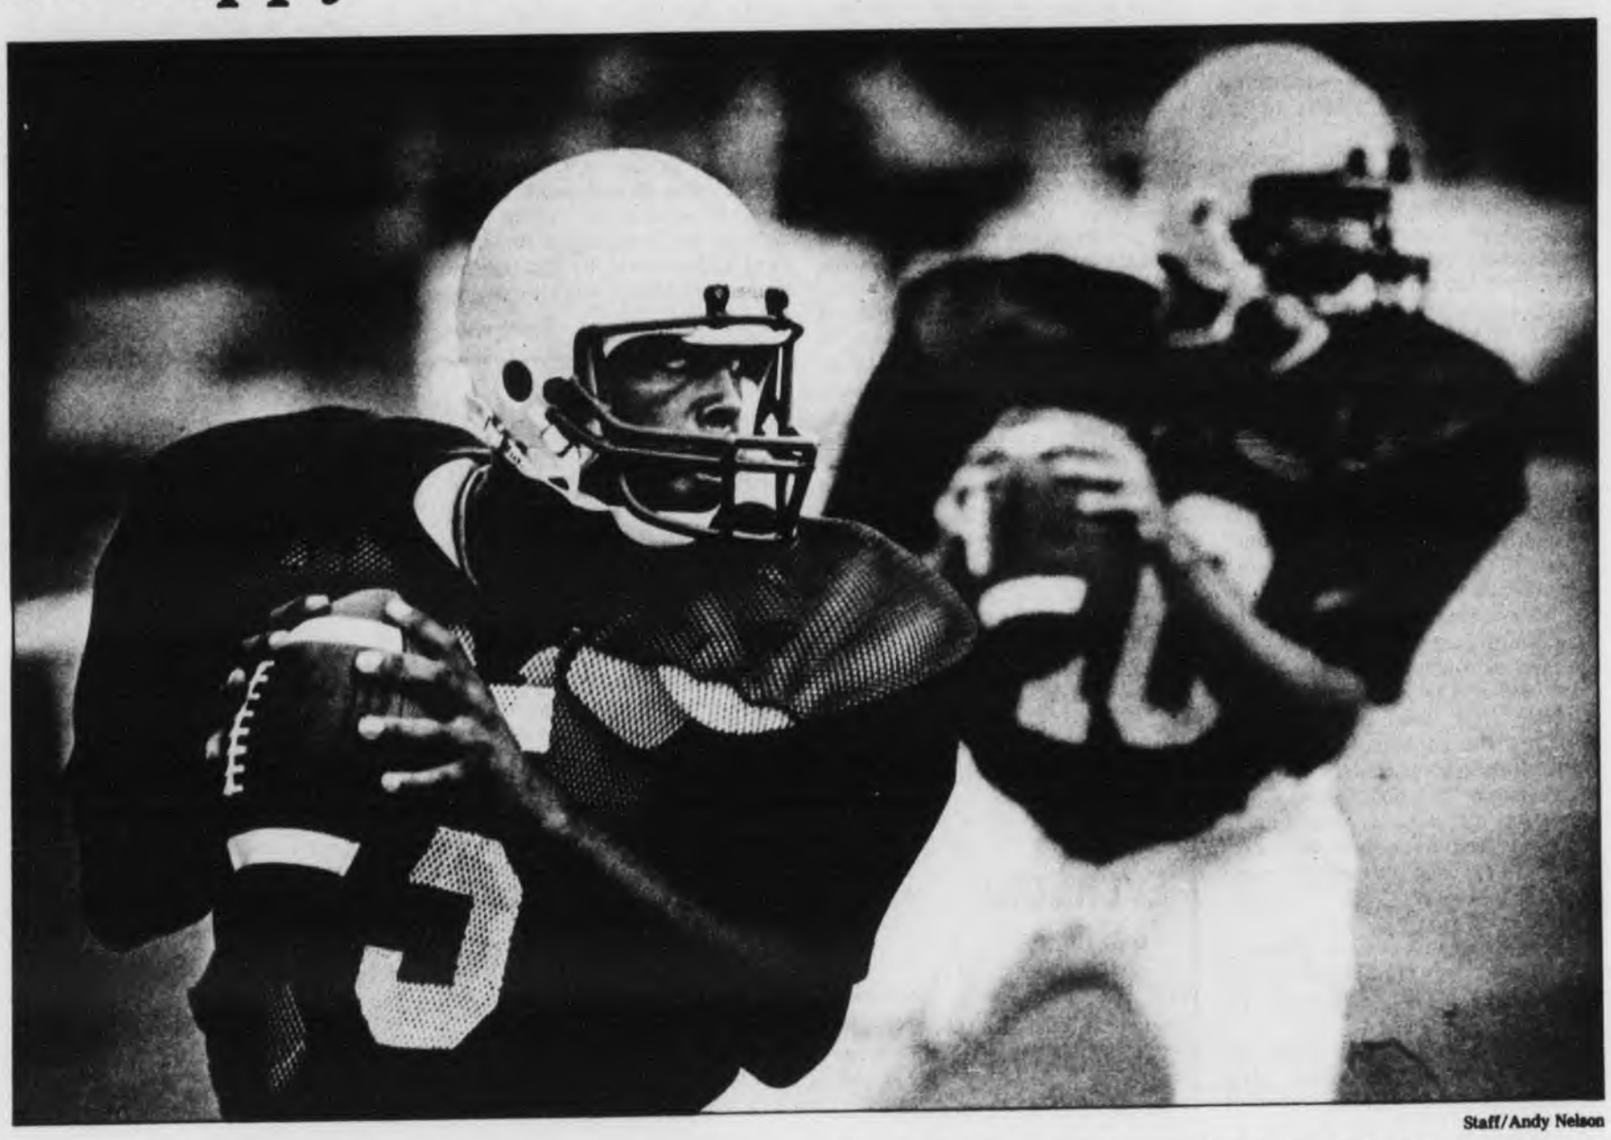
Williams, who said he can throw the ball accurately as far as 60 yards, is encouraged about the talents of his pass receiving corps.

"Gerald Alphin, Dick Warren and James Witherspoon can all catch the ball real good," Williams said of the three returning receivers.

With Williams' new role as starting quarterback also comes the additional role as a team leader, a role he feels confident he can handle despite his soft-spoken nature.

"I'll have to take more leadership. Last year, I guess I just followed, you might say," he said.

"I really try to lead by example."



Williams said the only time he would raise his voice would be to call a play in the huddle.

"You really have to keep their attention (in the huddle)," Williams said. "If not, they might lax off.

"Also, you have to be confident in yourself. You can't be a quarterback without self-confidence. You kind of have to be self-motivated."

Williams said he hopes to get a good start toward establishing the new passing attack during K-State's four-game home non-conference schedule. Beginning with the Sept. 7 game, the non-conference schedule continues with the University of Northern Iowa on Sept. 14, Texas Christian University on Sept. 21 and North Texas State University on Sept. 28.

"We're really looking forward to the non-conference games to give us a boost in Big Eight play," Williams said.

Staff/Andy Nelson

'Green Age' of 1980s dominates pro sports

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: Sports is paying the price for a decade of free spending. This second of a three-part series traces the increases in salaries, television money and franchise values.

If the 1920s were the "Golden Age" of sports, the 1970s and 1980s will be remembered as the "Green Age," the dawning of million-dollar contracts for athletes and multimillion-dollar price tags for franchises.

"When I started out in 1962, if a guy was making $15,000, that was a lot. They had no leverage," said lawyer and player agent Bob Woolf.

Then new leagues — the American Basketball Association, the World Hockey Association — started springing up.

"That's when the insanity started," Woolf said. "Nothing wakes people up more than competitive bidding. Teams that wouldn't have given a player a $5,000 raise were giving him $50,000 just to keep him. Derek Sanderson had signed for three years with the Boston Bruins (of the National Hockey League) for $10,000, $12,000 and $14,000. From there he went to close to $500,000 with the (WHA's) Philadelphia Blazers."

Then big money started coming from television.

Starting in 1978, the NFL got $640 million over four years from ABC, CBS and NBC; the current contract will pay more than three times as much, $2.1 billion over five years.

Auburn favored in South

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the third part of a four-part article previewing the 1985 college football season. Today's story focuses on the teams in the South. Part four will cover teams in the Midwest.

Auburn and Maryland, two of the most highly-regarded teams in the nation in preseason polls in 1984, are once again favored to contend for their conference crowns in the South this season.

Auburn was the preseason No. 1 team a year ago but the Tigers lost their first two games to Miami and Texas. If tailback Bo Jackson stays healthy, they should contend for the Southeastern Conference championship.

Elsewhere in the South, Maryland is favored to capture the Atlantic Coast Conference championship for the third year in a row and Miami of Florida, Florida State and South Carolina are expected to challenge for supremacy among the area's Division 1-A independents. Defending champion Tennessee-Chattanooga, The Cidadel and Furman should battle for the title in the Southern Conference, a Division 1-AA league.

Auburn's most serious challenge is expected to come from Florida, which is on probation and ineligible for SEC honors. The Gators won last year, the first one in the school's history, but it was taken away by the conference presidents because of recruiting violations that landed the Gators on NCAA probation.

Brewers beat Royals, 8-5

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Earnest Riles collected three singles and drove in two runs, pacing a 13-hit attack Tuesday night that led the Milwaukee Brewers past the Kansas City Royals 8-5.

Builders differ on value of new multi-plexes

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

With the marked increase in construction of high-density apartment complexes in Manhattan, a question confronting housing developers and renters alike is how much construction is too much, and what will be the effect on the community's rental rates.

For renters, at least theoretically, the good news is the increased availability of newer and more energy efficient housing which may result in lower rents and lower utility bills.

"The rent rates just follow the basic rule of economics," said Vern Osborne, of Osborne Enterprises, 523 S. 17th St. "The more units available, the lower the price."

But not every real estate developer agrees with that assessment.

Tim Trubey, vice president of McCullough Development, 2700 Amherst Ave., said the current land and construction prices of new apartments result in "little effect on rental rates. In fact, they have probably increased some."

Trubey said he believes "financial constraints in building" make it difficult for landlords to accept lower rents. As a result, he said some individuals pay lower rents by sharing single-bedroom apartments or by dividing a two-bedroom apartment among four people. Thus, rent is lower per person.

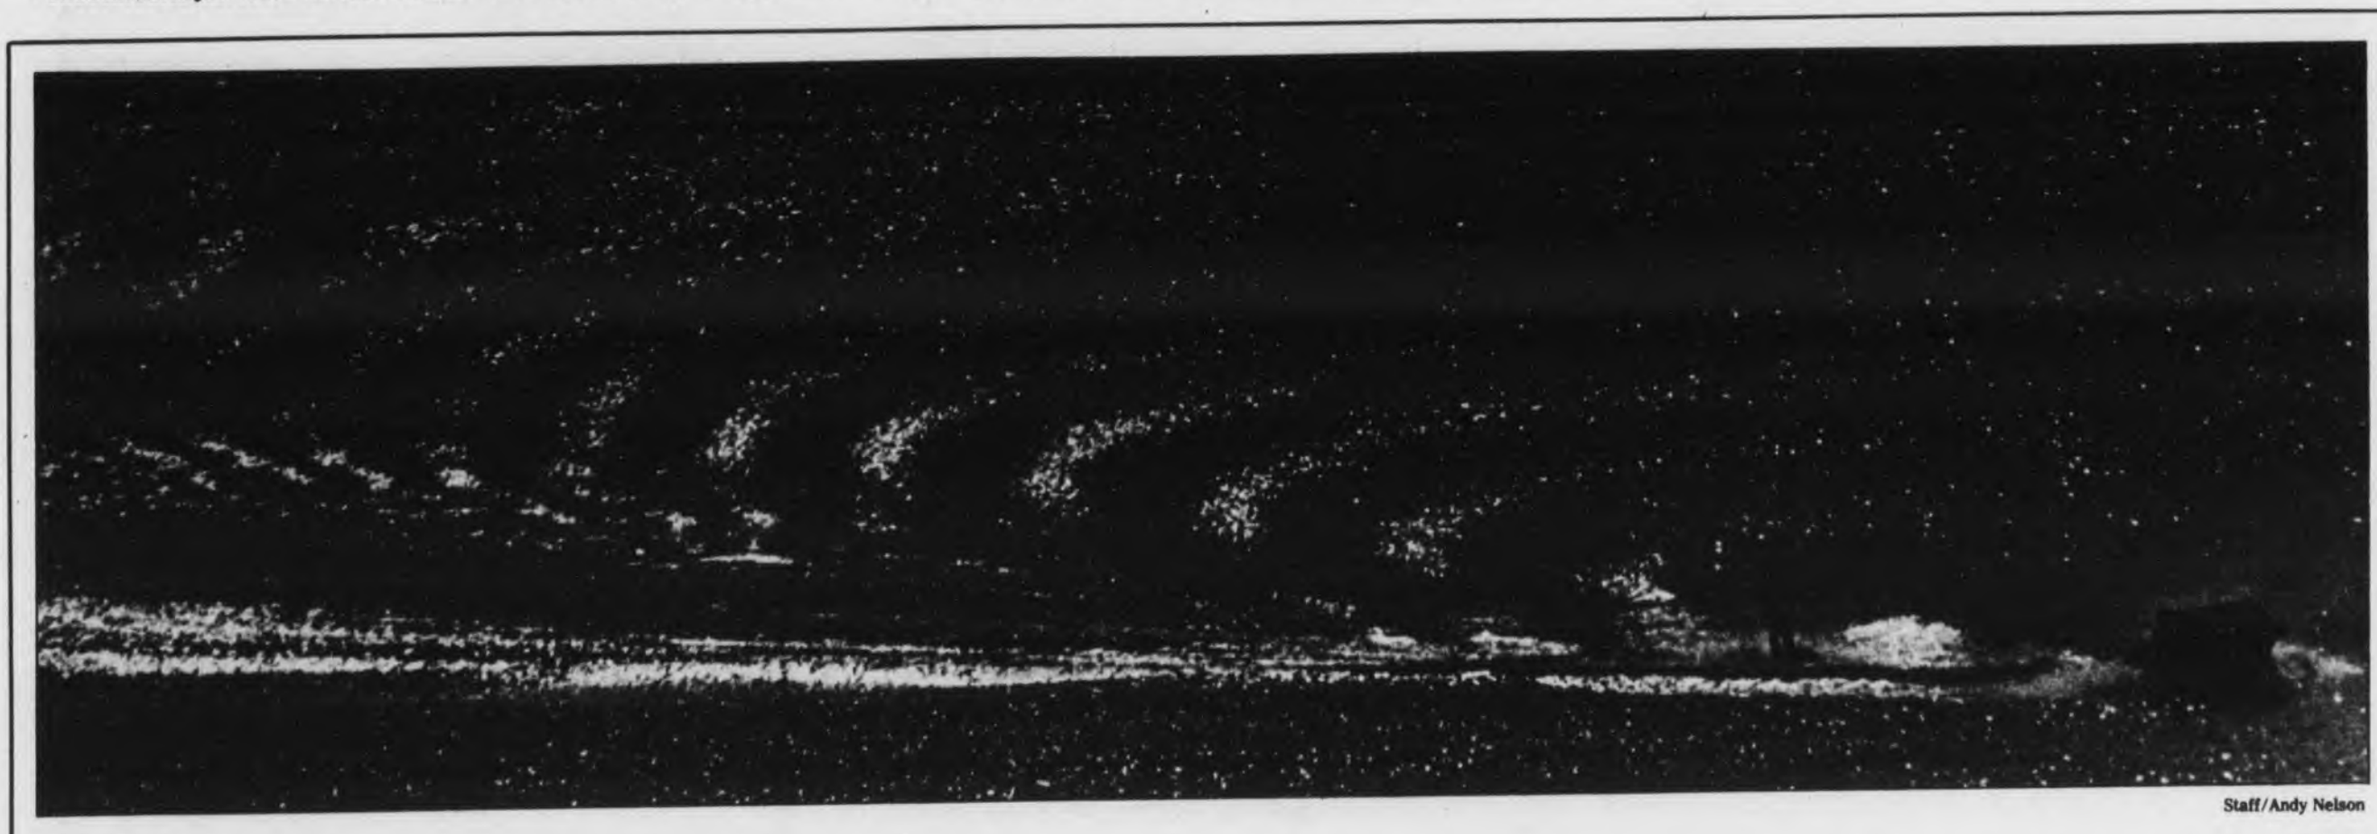
"They're just cramping together more...just splitting the rent more," Trubey said.

The increase in housing units is evident by the number of permits issued for multiple-dwelling units. These buildings contain eight or more separate apartments.

In 1980, only three multiple-dwelling permits were issued allowing for construction of 24 units. In 1981, four permits were issued for multiple-dwellings. Although the increase in permits is only one, it creates nearly twice the number of units, 46.

With the issuance of 11 permits in 1982, the rise in both permits and apartments became noticeable, with 83 separate apartments resulting from those permits.

The peak year in this decade for permit increases, with 25 permits issued (328 units) is 1983. In 1984, a smaller increase in permits issued may have been the first indicator of a slowdown, with 27 permits (275 units) at a valuation of $7,208,300.



Osborne said apartment units in the $400 and above price range are now having vacancy rates of 20 percent. A 3 percent to 5 percent vacancy rate is considered normal.

"I'd look at those (vacancy) numbers real closely," Osborne said. "Most developers are just making it with full (occupancy)," he said, adding that losses caused by the higher vacancy rates would have to be covered out of the owner's pockets.

"In the long-run perspective, construction and prices are a case of supply and demand," Trubey said.

He said multiple-dwelling unit construction in the past two to three years has been "faster than those units can be absorbed," resulting in vacancies for smaller units runn-

Thousands join in protest; riot police kill 3 black men

By The Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — More than 2,000 people of all races tried to march on Pollsmoor Prison in a mass protest against apartheid Wednesday, but police and soldiers broke up the procession and fought a series of running battles with protesters throughout the city.

Police said three blacks were shot to death in a riot in Cape Town's black township of Guguleto.

Witnesses reported that hundreds of blacks swarmed into the township's streets after police blocked their attempts to participate in the march on Pollsmoor Prison where black nationalist Nelson Mandela is serving a life term.

At least 27 people were arrested and dozens more were injured, choked by tear gas or beaten by police who met the marchers with truncheons and whips in the city's streets.

Hundreds of riot police were supported by soldiers. They sealed off Guguletu, where the blacks were shot to death, and the black township of Nyanga. They also fought with protesters in Cape Town's mixed-race district of Athlone.

It was the largest multiracial outpouring in a year of rage against apartheid, the policy that guarantees supremacy to 5 million whites, denies rights to 24 million blacks and restricts the privileges of nearly 4 million Asians and people of mixed race.

Police gave no details of the fatal shootings in Guguletu. The deaths brought to at least 625 the number of people killed this year, all but of a few of them black.

It was from the Athlone stadium that the Rev. Allan Boesak, a Student costs continue climb

Fees remain beneath average

By CONRAD EASTERDAY

The price of higher education is increasing, but the total cost of attending K-State isn't going up as fast as the total cost at other four-year colleges across the nation.

The $625.50 in fees paid by full-time undergraduate students this fall is 5.9 percent higher than a year ago, but it is still less than the average four-year public institution in the Midwest. Fees average $687 in the Midwest and $621 nationally.

Fees include tuition, student health and services support, retirement of bonds for the K-State Union, Fred Bramlage Coliseum, Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex, and the student activities fee.

The total cost of attending the University jumped less than 5 percent for the 1985-86 school year, while the national average rose 7 percent, said officials from the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

The reason for the increase in the cost of a K-State education, which has gone up 62 percent since 1979, involves hikes in fees, housing and other living costs.

Statistics from the financial assistance office showed fee increases this fall at the University were less than the 9 percent national average for public four-year institutions.

The biggest factor in the fee increase was an $85 hike in the incidental fee assessed by the Kansas Board of Regents. The incidental fee is the basic fee paid by students and covers expenses not covered by other specific fees.

Students also are paying $4.25 more toward retirement of bonds for construction of the coliseum, but fees assessed for student health, activities and recreational building bonds did not change.

Declining enrollment was one reason the Board of Regents raised fees, said Steve Hall, assistant director of the Office of the Registrar. Declining college enrollment is a national trend, he said.

The College Board, a national board which monitors higher education, stated administrators of Kansas colleges and universities said the

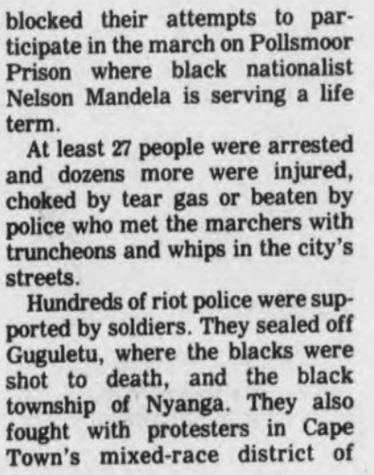
Knopp to pursue attorney general post

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Government Editor

Joseph A. Knopp, Manhattan attorney and 67th District representative, is making plans for the future — a future he hopes will include becoming attorney general for Kansas in 1986.

Knopp, who is serving his third term in the Kansas House of Representatives, said he began to think about running for attorney general after the legislative session ended.



"Several people approached me during the legislature last year and asked me to run," Knopp said. "I didn't at the time consider it seriously. After the session, I started thinking about it."

Knopp said there were several reasons why he chose to run for the office.

"As an attorney, I have a great deal of personal interest in being the chief lawyer for the state of Kansas," Knopp said. "I also believe that through my legislative experience I know what the state's interests are in public policy and I will carry out the will of the Legislature and the governor."

Knopp said he plans to set an aggressive posture in pursuing cases in which the state of Kansas is involved.

As attorney general, Knopp said, his goal would be to attempt to consolidate the various legislative counsel positions spread throughout the state.

Joe Knopp

"I believe strongly in a more centralized legislative staff," Knopp said. "I believe the process is now inefficient."

Knopp said he thinks the attorney general should set a tone for strong law enforcement.

"I intend to use my skills to help local, city and county attorneys in Kansas vigorously prosecute cases," Knopp said.

Integrity is what he is offering Kansas voters, he said.

"I intend to be fair in the prosecution of cases the attorney general handles," he said. "I intend to be a conscientious lawyer for the state."

Knopp said he is not running for attorney general as a means of seeking higher political office.

"I am running for attorney general to be attorney general, not to be a congressman or something else. I would not use that as a launching pad," Knopp said. "I'd be happy to say I was attorney general for Kansas and then come back to Manhattan to practice law."

His judgment would also be an asset to the office, he said.

"I approach every issue from a well-reasoned, well-thought-out position," Knopp said. "I'm not a shoot-from-the-hip kind of person."

He said he believes the position of attorney general would be a test of his capabilities as an attorney.

"It will be a test of my judgment and my ability to surround myself with capable people," he said.

Knopp's wife, Nancy, and his children, Katie, 5, and Andrew, 3, are supportive of his decision to run for office.

"Nancy and I are willing to commit ourselves to an aggressive campaign," Knopp said. "Nancy's supportive and will be an important part of the campaign. She's been active in my campaigns for the state Legislature."

Knopp said he is not sure yet how he intends to conduct his campaign.

"Nothing's certain until we know who is running and the kind of support we'll be getting from the people of Kansas," Knopp said.

Microscopic probes assist cancer research

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Doctors have found they can accurately pinpoint the origin and type of cancerous blood cells, improving diagnosis and treatment, by using microscopic probes that delve into the genes of renegade cells.

The work might lead to a treatment that could zero in on cancerous blood cells and not harm healthy ones.

The technique is a practical outgrowth of significant advances over the last two years in understanding the basic biology of a key variety of disease-fighting white blood cells known as T lymphocytes.

By analyzing the genes that guide these cells' response to disease, doctors can now determine whether these cells are the culprits in blood cancers known as leukemia and lymphoma.

The newly developed test looks for tell-tale rearrangements in the nucleic acids or DNA that make up the blood cells' genes. If many blood cells contain the same genetic reshuffling, then doctors assume they are cancerous and all descendants of the same cell.

"What you can now do is analyze a tumor cell down to the very level of its nucleic acid, and you can look for differences that are unique to the tumor cell," said Dr. Ilan Kirsch of the National Cancer Institute-Navy Medical Oncology Branch at the Naval Hospital in Bethesda, Md.

Three reports on the use of the new tool were published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Stuntman pleads guilty, pays fine

NIAGARA FALLS, Ontario — An aspiring stuntman who went over Niagara Falls in a barrel last month pleaded guilty today to performing an illegal stunt and paid a fine.

Steven T. Trotter, 22, of Barrington, R.I., said before his appearance in Ontario Provincial Court that he performed the stunt Aug. 18 to launch his career, but he hasn't received many offers from filmmakers and was practically broke.

"People think you make a killing. You make nothing," he said.

He was fined $503, or $369.45 in U.S. currency, by Justice of the Peace Jack Irwin.

Trotter made a 176-foot plunge over the Horseshoe Falls portion in a device made from two barrels placed end-to-end and surrounded by giant inner tubes. He escaped with just a cut on the arm.

At the courthouse, Trotter shook hands with John D. Munday, a Canadian diesel shop owner who had attempted to go over the falls in a barrel three weeks earlier. Munday's barrel was trapped by in a hydroelectric pool above the falls.

Munday, 48, of Caistor Center, Ontario, was charged with attempting an illegal stunt and also fined $503 Canadian. Munday was placed on two years' probation and told not to attempt the stunt again.

Trotter was the seventh person known to survive such a feat.

Israel forces sweep through village

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli soldiers led by tanks and helicopter gunships stormed Shiite Moslem villages in southern Lebanon today. U.N. and police officials said the sweep was the biggest since Israeli forces withdrew from Lebanon in June.

The military command in Tel Aviv said the raids were carried out to arrest villagers suspected of anti-Israeli guerrilla attacks.

Katyusha rockets, grenades and bombs were confiscated during the raids on the villages of Qabrikha, Majd al-Salim and Chaqra, five miles west of the Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmona, the Israeli announcement said.

Two Israeli soldiers were killed in the area on Aug. 5.

Senior Lebanese police sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said seven tanks, 20 armored personnel carriers, two gunships and other military vehicles were involved in the raid on Qabrikha.

Jagger becomes father of baby boy

NEW YORK — Mick Jagger's girlfriend, model Jerry Hall, gave birth to their second child Wednesday, a 7-pound, blond boy who is the couple's first son.

Jagger, 42, and Miss Hall, 29, have one daughter, 17-month-old Scarlet. Jagger has two other daughters: Jade, 12, from his marriage to Bianca Perez Morena de Macias, and Karis, 13, by actress Marsha Hunt.

Borg becomes tourism ambassador

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Former tennis star Bjorn Borg will become a traveling tourism ambassador for his native Sweden, the country whose high taxes drove him to Monaco, the Sweden Tourist Board announced Wednesday.

Borg, 29, said he would start the new job when he moves back to Sweden at the beginning of next year.

"I have always represented Sweden abroad and I have a lot of contacts," he said.

Borg's Swedish fiance Jannike Bjorling, 18, who is expected to give birth soon to their first child, stood beside him at the Stockholm news conference.

Lennon's car object of controversy

LONDON — John Lennon's white Mercedes limousine has been withdrawn from an auction of rock memorabilia because Supremes singer Mary Wilson claims it belongs to her, a London newspaper reported Wednesday.

Susu Robinson, a spokesperson for Sotheby's auction house, said the white custom-built stretch limousine was to have been auctioned Thursday and was expected to bring in $210,000.

"The problem is a question of ownership," she said, but declined to say who was offering it for sale or any details of the dispute.

The Daily Express said the dispute is between Wilson and an American businessman, Nicholas Miranda, and that the 37-year-old singer has been granted custody until the matter is resolved.

Lennon, who was shot to death in New York in December 1980, used the car in London for five years.

The auction was also to include a white 1965 Aston Martin DB5 coupe delivered to George Harrison in 1965 and a 1949 French Delahaye Type 175 coupe once owned by Elton John.

7 soldiers perish in air accident

MARYSVILLE, Calif. — Seven men in an Air Force KC-135 air tanker practicing landings and takeoffs at Beale Air Force Base were killed when the plane crashed, officials said.

Capt. Joseph Saxon said the four-engine jet plane crashed at about 12:30 p.m. Tuesday. He said the names of those killed would not be released until relatives had been notified.

There were no reports of injuries to anyone on the ground, but the crash started a brush fire on the base, about 50 miles north of Sacramento near Marysville.

The KC-135 is the military version of the civilian Boeing 707 passenger jet. The Air Force has taken delivery of about 600 of them since 1957. Saxon said the one that crashed was equipped to refuel other aircraft during flight.

The aircraft was based at Castle Air Force Base near Merced and was practicing "touch-and-go" landings when it crashed about two miles from the end of the runway.

Tech. Sgt. Daryl Green of the base public information office said he visited the site and saw an area about 1,000 yards long of burned grass.

"The aircraft itself was pretty much scattered," he said.

Saxon said the cause of the crash was not immediately known. A board of officers will investigate, the Air Force said.

Diplomat to attend girl's funeral

AUGUSTA, Maine — The State Department granted a Soviet diplomat special permission to travel to Augusta today for a memorial service for 13-year-old peace advocate Samantha Smith, who was killed with her father in a plane crash.

A pair of white doves adorned a wreath of red and white carnations that the Soviet Embassy sent to St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church for the service in Augusta, a few miles from Samantha's home in Manchester.

Samantha attracted international attention when she wrote to then-Soviet leader Yuri Andropov about her fear of nuclear war and accepted a tour of the Soviet Union as Andropov's guest in July 1983.

In remarks prepared for the service, Maine Gov. Joseph E. Brennan called Samantha "a very special young girl who provided inspiration and hope not just for the very young, like herself, but for all of us."

Meanwhile, investigators continued to look for the cause of the crash of the Beechcraft 99 that went down less than a half-mile from Auburn-Lewiston airport, killing all eight aboard, including Samantha's father, Arthur.

Bar owner pleads for woman's life

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The last thing Jack LaBruzzo did before two gunmen shot him to death before robbing his tavern Tuesday was plead that they spare a customer's life, the patron said Wednesday.

Eileen Cunningham, a regular patron at the Wheel Tavern in the city's commercial trucking district, said two men ran into the bar about 10:30 p.m.

"They were very arrogant," she said. "One of them had his arm straight and his gun pointed and said, 'Hit the deck — I mean hit the deck or I'll kill you all.'"

Cunningham said LaBruzzo, a 56-year-old Independence man, pleaded for her life before he was shot twice in the head.

"Jack said, 'Don't shoot her.' It was the last thing he said," Cunningham said.

The men stepped over LaBruzzo's body to grab money from behind the bar, Cunningham said.

Kansas City Police Sgt. Ronald Smith said the two men ordered all patrons to either lie face-own on the floor or put their heads on the bar.

Kansas farmers tally record crops

Farmers produced 444.6 million bushels of wheat in 1985 making the harvest the third largest on record, the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Wednesday.

It was the sixth time in history that production has exceeded 400 million bushels even though the average yield per acre was 38 bushels — down half a bushel from last year and 3½ bushels off the 1983 record harvest of 41.5 bushels per acre.

The 444.6 million bushels of wheat were harvested from 11.7 million acreas of ground — about 92 percent of which was planted in the fall of 1984. The 11.7 million acres represented a 4 percent increase in the amount of harvested acreage from 1984, according to the reporting service.

A lack of soil moisture caused fall seeding to lag behind its normal pace and emergence of the crop was slow entering winter. However, a sufficient amount of rainfall and snowcover during the winter prevented wind erosion and the absence of extremely cold temperatures for extended periods of time kept winter losses to a minimum.

Lobbyists report corporate tax elusion

Study describes four-year avoidance

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nearly half of 275 large, profitable corporations paid no taxes in at least one of the last four years, including 40 companies which paid no taxes on more than $10 billion in profits last year, a lobbying group said Wednesday.

Many of the companies actually paid less than no tax — they took advantage of federal tax laws allowing them to gain tax refunds, according to the study by Citizens for Tax Justice.

Five major defense contractors were among the companies that paid no federal income tax at all or received refunds during the 1981 through 1984 period, the study said.

Those contractors are General Dynamics, General Electric, Lockheed, and Boeing and Grumman, the study said. Another three — McDonnell-Douglass, Martin Marietta, and Westinghouse Electric — had effective tax rates of less than 1 percent, the group added.

Citizens for Tax Justice is a liberal research and lobbying group supported by labor unions, churches, public interest groups and other organizations. Its report on the taxes of major U.S. corporations was released as a follow-up to a similar study conducted last year.

"With the addition of the 1984 data, we now have for the first time the complete picture of corporate tax avoidance during President Reagan's first term in office," Robert S. McIntyre, director of federal tax policy for the group, said in releasing the study.

The report said 129 of the 275 profit-making companies surveyed paid no federal income tax or received tax rebates in at least one of the four years in the period. These 129 companies had $66.5 billion in pre-tax domestic profits during those years and received a total $6.4 billion in tax rebates, for a negative tax rate of 9.6 percent, the report said.

It said 50 of the 275 companies paid an overall total of nothing in federal income taxes over the entire four-year period, despite more than $56 billion in pre-tax domestic profits. They received net tax rebates totaling $2.4 billion.

Federal law taxes corporate income above $100,000 at a 46 percent rate. But like individuals, businesses are able to cut their taxes with deductions and credits. The biggest tax break for corporations is depreciation, recovering the cost of new equipment and buildings through the tax system.

McIntyre said the tax cut recommended by Reagan and enacted by Congress in 1981 was in part responsible for the ability of companies to reduce tax liability. That cut accelerated the system of depreciation, expanded investment tax credits and liberalized leasing rules.

The report called Boeing Co. "the leading corporate tax avoider" between 1981 and 1984 for receiving $285 million in tax refunds on profits of more than $2 billion. It listed six other companies as receiving net refunds of more than $100 million over the four-year period: Dow Chemical, ITT, Tenneco, Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp., Pepsico and General Dynamics.

Harold Carr, Boeing's chief spokesman, said, "It is true that we paid no tax during that four-year period, although the number used by that organization is excessively high." He refused to say how high or give a more specific figure but asserted, "Everything is done within the tax code and is legal."

Carr said the tax laws were written to place incentives on trade, research and development, so Boeing tried to utilize each one.

As for the description of Boeing as "the leading corporate tax avoider," he said, "I don't think it's fair to take the tax question by itself."

The report said that while the statutory corporate tax rate is 46 percent, the average effective rate paid by all 275 companies surveyed during the 1981-84 period was 15 percent.

If all the companies had paid at the 46 percent tax rate on their $400.6 billion in profits during the period, their taxes would have totaled $184.3 billion, or $124 billion more than actually paid to the U.S. treasury, the study concluded.

New sorority begins recruiting members

By The Collegian Staff

Panhellenic Council is introducing its newest member to campus this week — Alpha Gamma Delta.

Last spring, four sororities were invited to make presentations to become established at K-State, said Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs. Alpha Gam was chosen by Panhellenic Council to start a chapter.

The sorority plans to have a house ready for occupancy by fall 1987, Robel said.

The process of colonization (establishing a new house) will begin with a sign-up for an open house party. Rush activities will kick off at the party, which will be from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday in Union 212.

Interested college women may register from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. today at the Alpha Gam table in the Union or at the Office of Greek Affairs in Holton Hall. Registration will continue on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

"This is not just for freshmen and sophomores, but even up to seniors are welcome to come," Sutton said.

"At the open house, there will be information about Alpha Gam. The girls can then register to attend a conference session on Thursday or Friday," Sutton said.

Sutton said these conferences will be conducted by international Alpha Gam officers to answer questions about Alpha Gam and meet the interested women.

Members from Alpha Gam chapters at the University of Kansas and William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., will be helping with the theme and preference parties, Sutton said.

Sutton was an Alpha Gam member at Fort Hays State University.

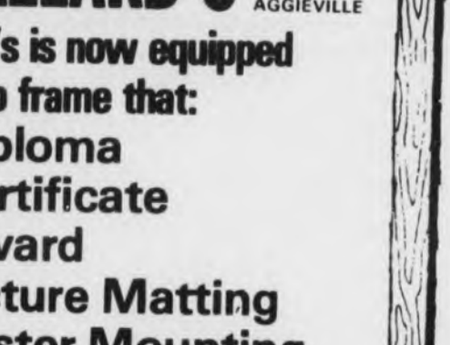
ing at 10 percent to 12 percent, "three times that of five years ago."

"We (McCullough Developers) are looking more closely at the financial ramifications" for new constructions, Trubey said. "You have to be relatively assured of its financial base."

Osborne said although he believes the difference between the number of renters and number of available units is cyclical, and will rebound, he added, "If student population keeps going down, it could be a bad situation."



After a peak enrollment of 19,982 in 1981, enrollment has declined by nearly 1,900, between the fall semesters of 1981 through 1984, which had a fall enrollment of 18,092. The fall enrollments for 1982 and 1983 were 19,497 and 18,470, respectively.

For the city, the Bureau of Census estimated the July 1, 1982, population at 33,124, up from the April 1, 1980, estimation of 32,482, an increase of 642 for that time period. A spokeswoman for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce said their most recent information put the total at approximately 33,900, but is unsure of the date of that estimation.

TV violence detrimental

Children are great imitators. They learn to return the smile of a beaming grandma, comfort a wounded Raggedy Ann. Then someone props them in front of a television.

Research findings indicate that children who watch a steady diet of violent programs display more aggressive behavior than those who view pro-social programs. Children who view pro-social programs show more caring and cooperation with peers and their teacher.

Violence holds children's attention. Attention equals ratings. Ratings attract advertising. Advertising generates revenue. Everyone's demand is met, so there is no incentive to stop producing violent programming.

There is an incentive to stop watching it. By settling for the violence-action genre we are preventing the production of quality educational programming for our children. Most educational programs are underwritten by corporations, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and affiliated public broadcasting stations, primarily because advertising won't support their airing on commercial television.

There is a definite shortage of educational, socially relevant programming. To provide our children and ourselves with such entertaining programs we must discourage all viewing of violent programs, and increase public awareness of its detrimental effects on our children.

Carlin not good candidate

It didn't take long for Gov. John Carlin to toss his hat into the ring of possible replacements for K-State President Duane Acker.

While the governor's expressed interest in the job does not represent a formal application, there are some questions that should be examined by the presidential search committee which may make Carlin's ambitions short-lived.

There is the question of Carlin's educational preparation. Although a doctoral degree may not be a necessity for the position, an advanced degree as well as related experience in the educational field, are typically required of a major university president.

Also the relationship between Carlin and members of the Kansas Board of Regents, positions filled by governor's appointees, should be examined. How many "bosses" would be comfortable working for their past appointees?

According to authors of the 1986 edition of The Almanac of American Politics, "Kansas' current governor...seems to violate all the rules...But he has had plenty of political luck."

K-State needs an experienced, proven professional in the educational field. Some former governors may meet that requirement, but John Carlin does not.

South Africans live with evolving society

TIM FITZGERALD
Collegian Columnist

I recently spent a late night watching television.

After flipping through the channels a number of times searching the foul selection of black and white B-movies and failing to tolerate the vacant zeal of other early-morning fanfare, I decided to listen to a speech by Democratic Atlanta mayor Andrew Young as he addressed a Blacks in Government convention.

I had not heard the former United States ambassador to the United Nations speak for years, and after the 45-minute speech, I still wanted to hear more of the man's political philosophies.

It might, I pondered, be healthy for me to check in to see how those further to the left were currently thinking. After all, even in the Republican world where there are clear distinctions between "right" and wrong ("left"), one must on occasion hear what those dang liberals are saying.

What was different about the Andrew Young I heard this night as opposed to the Andrew Young I had heard years ago is that he had quit the games of federal politicking.

Young has turned in his U.N. credentials for the less visible but more fulfilling job of being the mayor of one of the fastest growing U.S. cities.

Among the many topics on which Young spoke was a significant address concerning the state of unrest in South Africa. His approach to the issue was inventive — the type of inventiveness which can come only from having nothing political to win or lose by commenting on such a volatile issue as South Africa.

Young led into his theories on South Africa by telling stories from his younger years in the South.

On a late-night trip he took some 30 years ago through Atlanta, Young said, he made sure that he filled up his car in South Carolina so he wouldn't have to stop to fill up in Georgia because as Young put it, "Back then a rat had more rights in Georgia than a nigger."

Stories of such blatant racism in the United States never fail to shock me. I never will understand racism, and to me it will never be justified. I've grown up in such a radically different society than that of Andrew Young that it still seems impossible that during my lifetime there were cities in the United States where blacks were not allowed to vote.

Young's theories on South Africa and comparison to the United States of his younger years was simple. "South Africa will be OK. Whites will kill blacks and blacks will kill whites and eventually there will be a little less of everyone, but they will still have to learn to live with each other."

Essentially what Young was saying is that South Africa is experiencing a societal evolution. Nothing our nation can do will help speed up this evolution.

Our nation is scared of South Africa — it reminds us too much of a painful past. Like the older brother telling his 12- year-old sibling not to break glass when he himself tossed stones at windows until he was 18, America's words fall on inattentive ears.

The primitive shall evolve and the ignorant shall learn, but they must evolve and learn on their own. A child won't believe that fire burns until he can feel the heat on his own.

Pain comes from wounds and wounds cause scars and scars will always remind one of the past pain. All South Africa needs is a scar running across the face of its society. A scar to remind them of what they are doing to their own people.

Sanctions and rhetorical reprisals from our shores are necessary, but they really only stand as ethical symbols. South Africa's evolution will take place on its own scale, not the scale by which we would like them to measure their society. Every lesson is much more effective if it is experienced and not simply taught.

South Africa hurts us all because it reminds us of our own growing pains. It took a Georgian Democrat for me to realize that America can not always dictate to the world the way they should run their society. Young made me realize that despite the turmoil of the day, "South Africa will be OK." It just needs to grow up.

Helpful suggestions for first-year students

WAYNE LONG
Collegian Columnist

Here it is freshmen, the first thing for you to clip out and attach to your new bulletin boards. Wayne Long's very own tips for freshmen:

— Your student ID number is your Social Security number. No one cares what your name is since computers cannot spell.

— Don't wear your high school letter jacket on campus. No one is really interested in the fact that you won 72 track medals during your high school career. You will probably have more people in some of your larger lecture classes than you did in your entire high school conference or league.

— Carrying around a map of the campus is a sure give away that you are a freshman student. Therefore, I recommend skipping your first week of classes until you become fully orientated with all of the campus buildings.

The next several tips have to do with the Union — K-State's campus host — or do they simply generate the most revenue of any business enterprise on campus?

The information desk in the Union disguises itself by selling candy and sweets. These people are really helpful, but the amount of assistance they provide is directly related to the amount of candy you purchase.

In the men's restroom, located across from the check-cashing counter, don't be surprised when the urinal automatically flushes. Here at K-State some students believe in nothing less than state-of-the-art equipment — just ask the people studying radio and television.

Yes, the women working in the check-cashing facility are the sweetest ladies on campus.

When you walk into the Catskeller, on the ground floor of the Union, pretend you do not notice everyone staring at you, and walk on through since there are rarely any study tables available.

Do not worry about all that money you spent on textbooks in the Union bookstore. During the final weeks of the fall semester bookstore employees will gladly purchase your old textbooks at a fair price.

In most cases, do not believe everything an upperclassman says.

The next several tips should be read by freshmen males only:

— When trying to pick up on girls at parties, don't mention the fact that you are a freshman and always begin the conversation by saying your dad is a doctor.

— Pledges, when a sorority girl seems interested in you, she may be actually trying to set herself up with actives in your house. Don't be her stepping stone.

— Just for fun, estimate the weight of three girls you know. Then do it again next year.

Sorry ladies, I tried to warn you, but just to be fair the next three tips are exclusively for freshman women:

— The Hawaiian shorts you see all these guys wearing are actually status symbols. The uglier the shorts the more of a jerk the guy is.

— Men in Aggieville only care about one thing, and there are not many of you who look like a pitcher of beer.

To find out the actual amount of beer a guy has drunk, divide the amount he told you by two and subtract one beer if he can still say his first name. Add one if he does not know how he is going to get home.

Here are a few reminders help students have a more successful year in the classroom:

— Don't leave Prof. Herbert Moser's chemistry classes early.

— Be kind to your teacher, even if he or she can't speak English.

A teacher's office hours tell when he or she is somewhere on campus, not necessarily in the office.

Luckily, the designer of Bluemont Hall included a small catacomb in the basement for students who get lost while trying to find the office of education. You can be assured of a proper burial.

When trying to find materials in Farrell Library, be sure to give yourself enough time. A good rule of thumb is two hours per novel, two days per current magazine.

If you plan on driving to class and parking on campus, plan on being late to class. At K-State administrators believe parking a vehicle is a privilege, not a right.

No, blackening all the ovals on your computer card will not give you a perfect score.

Remember, grades don't accurately reflect your knowledge on a subject, and we can all be glad for that.

ANYONE MAY submit a guest column offering an opinion on a topic of public interest. Columns should be about three double-spaced typewritten pages. Persons submitting columns will be asked to show identification and have a picture taken. The Collegian reserves the right to reject any material or edit it for space.

Intelligence scandal leads to chief's firing

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — Chancellor Helmut Kohl dismissed his intelligence chief in the spreading scandal over the defection of a top counterspy to East Germany last week.

Four alleged East German spies were arrested in Britain and Switzerland. At least two were reported to be connected with the Bonn espionage scandal that has shaken Kohl's government.

Federal Intelligence Service chief Heribert Hellenbroich acknowledged in an interview Wednesday with West German television that he had been dismissed. Official announcement was not expected until Thursday.

"The decision has been taken. As a civil servant, I have to accept it," Hellenbroich, 48, said in the interview.

Government sources said Chancellor Helmut Kohl decided to fire Hellenbroich because he had protected Hans-Joachim Tiedge, who ran the counter-espionage section dealing with East German spies. Tiedge defected to the communist East last Friday, and at least three other suspects have fled.

Several of Tiedge's colleagues had recommended he be dismissed on grounds that his heavy drinking and mounting debts made him a security risk, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hellenbroich is the first official to lose his job in the scandal, which is the latest of many espionage cases since Germany was divided on ideological lines at the end of World War II.

The defection raised concern that Western agents operating in East Germany might be exposed and that NATO intelligence operations might have been compromised.

Crisis undercuts bedrock of agriculture

By BRUCE NEY
Staff Writer

The agricultural crisis of the '80s has finally hit the foundation of agriculture — land.

As of April 1, the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service reported the average value of all Kansas farm land has fallen 20 percent, to $466 per acre. This represents a drop of $117 per acre from April 1, 1984, when the average value was $583 per acre.

The current value of farm land in the state represents a 25.7 percent decrease from a high of $628 per acre in 1982.

"We have seen a definite decline in farm land values since 1982," said Moe Johnson, statistician with the reporting service. In 1983 the average land value fell to $601 per acre.

"The main cause for the decline is the low prices for farm crops," Johnson said. "That is the primary cause, as well as higher interest rates and reduced inflation. We had higher land values through the '70s because we had higher inflation and lower interest rates."

Value of Kansas farm land plummets

Johnson said the current average value is the lowest since 1982 and is the lowest average value during the '80s.

"To be fairly subjective, I do not see anything yet that will turn the current decline around. But, I do not expect it to decline faster than the current rate of decline. We are not at the bottom yet," he added.

Don Pretzer, extension agricultural economist, said he agrees with Johnson that softening of farm land values in the state could continue for several more years.

He said he does not believe the decline will be as large as this past year, but it could continue at a rate of approximately 5 percent to 10 percent, possibly bringing the average land value to under $400 per acre.

"There are some things people are waiting on for it to turn around. One is commodity prices, second is the interest rate, and third is their own expectations," Pretzer said.

When people's expectations say the low has finally come for land prices, farmers and other people will again start to buy and invest in farm land, regardless of commodity prices or interest rates.

"As the word starts rolling that it has hit the low, demand will begin to push prices, and we will see them zoom back up again," Pretzer said. "But, nobody knows when that will be.

"Prices will depend on what the inflation rate is after the turnaround. With 7 percent inflation, the price of land would double in 10 years. It could be 10 to 15 years before land prices get back to the 1981 level," Pretzer said.

He said the key to the current problem is the low commodity prices being received for wheat and feed grains. A lowering of interest rates would also add to a quicker turnaround for land prices, Pretzer said.

"Some of the decline is an adjustment to our expectations for agriculture in the '70s, and some is an adjustment to the over-pricing of land at that time," he said. "Part is also an adjustment to agriculture currently."

Pretzer said there is more farm land on the market at the current time than there are buyers for it.

Chapter aids retention

Golden Key earns top honor

By BECKY WILEY
Features Editor

K-State's Golden Key National Honor Society chapter won the top key chapter award at Golden Key's national convention Aug. 10 in Atlanta.

Five major universities were chosen as key chapters, but K-State received the highest award, said Russell Rausch, senior in accounting and chapter president.

K-State has the top chapter out of the 70 chapters at universities throughout the nation, he said.

"We applied for a key chapter award, listing the activities and programs we had during the year. The chapters then receive points based on what has been done," Rausch said. "K-State's chapter had the most points."

He said other chapters receiving key chapter awards were West Virginia University, Pennsylvania State University, the University of Illinois and Southwest Texas State University.

Willard Nelson, director of the Pre-Education Advisement Center and Golden Key's faculty adviser, said winning the top chapter award is encouraging to the members.

"It shows that top awards are reachable. It (winning the key chapter award) is a reward, recognition and an inspiration to move ahead," Nelson said.

Golden Key is a student organization which recognizes those who display academic excellence — juniors and seniors in the top 15 percent of their class, Rausch said. The honor society was founded in 1977 at Georgia State University and K-State received its charter in 1981.

He added that the chapter really didn't take off until last year, but since then has developed a program which Golden Key could call its own.

"Blue Key always does Homecoming and Mortar Board does the K-State Christmas program. Golden Key wanted its own program so we developed a Big Brother/Sister-type program for the freshman scholarship students.

"There was a retention problem with the top scholar freshmen; they weren't getting any attention. So, Golden Key members volunteer to keep in touch and get them affiliated with something or someone," Rausch said.

Nelson also said the honor society was now moving into the realm of career placement and guidance, noting 13 major corporations interviewed students at the national convention.

Ahearn adult program to stress fitness

By JILL HUMMELS
Staff Writer

K-State could make fitness guru Jack Lalanne jump for joy.

The Ahearn Adult Fitness Program within the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies, is offering classes and clinics to help people become physically fit or to help them maintain their fitness.

The classes are devised and scheduled to provide a comprehensive workout, said Mari Hemmert, director of adult fitness. A comprehensive approach to fitness stresses the health-related areas of fitness which are cardiovascular development, flexibility, muscular strength and endurance and weight control.

The six classes, which begin Sept. 3 and 4, can accommodate about 25 people at any level of fitness. One class titled "Beginners Only" is designed for just that; people who have decided to begin a fitness program after a long period of nonactivity. The activities in class are set to music and are designed to introduce participants to working out slowly so they are not stressed beyond their abilities.

Because the classes are group participation classes and there will be people with various levels of fitness in the class, participants can be assigned their own "fitness prescription," she said. The prescription allows participants to work out with the rest of the class but at a level he or she is comfortable with. The personalized fitness prescription will also take into account specific areas of fitness a person needs to improve or maintain.

Those who want a fitness prescription may get one by undergoing fitness tests to determine their level of cardiovascular fitness, flexibility, strength and endurance and body composition, Hemmert said. The tests are not a prerequisite for attending the classes, but are necessary for a fitness prescription.

All of the classes are based on guidelines set by the American College of Sports Medicine, a governing body for bringing exercise physiologists and physicians together. The college also accredits physical education teachers.

The program will also offer a class in hydrorobics, where people exercise in the water thereby reducing stress on joints; and "Mommies To Be," designed to help pregnant women and new mothers keep in shape.

To participate in any of the classes a person must purchase an Ahearn Field House facility use card under the all-structured exercise program option. Fees are $10.50 per semester for an individual or $16 a semester for a married couple. The fees are used to cover the basic costs of offering the classes, Hemmert said.

In addition to the classes, clinics will be offered through the adult fitness program.

On Sept. 5, Dave Laurie, assistant professor in physical education, dance and leisure studies, is scheduled to give a presentation on the principles of weight training. The free, one-night-only clinic will cover how to set up a program, and demonstrate proper technique on the weight machines.

Lentil farmer unsure of Letterman humor

By The Associated Press

FARMINGTON, Wash. — If you're out to persuade the American public to eat more lentils, you take all the exposure you can get, even if David Letterman makes fun of your product.

That's what lentil farmer Bruce Nelson did when producers of NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman" called Monday to say they wanted to feature him in a 45-second spot on the show. But when he saw the show early Tuesday morning, Nelson wasn't sure how to react.

"The first time I heard it," he said, "I thought maybe it made too much of a joke out of it."

During the spot, Letterman read from a magazine article in which Nelson complained that the lentil industry could not afford a promotional campaign.

As Letterman spoke, viewers were treated to a montage of still photos, progressing from a bowl of lentil soup, to a family, to an American flag displayed next to a copy of the Declaration of Independence — all accompanied by soaring patriotic music.

Cancer

Cancers of the white blood cells, or lymphocytes, begin with a single cell that escapes the ordinary cycle of life and death and divides again and again, eventually producing many copies of itself.

In healthy people, these cells are an essential line of defense against disease. One variety, called B cells, produce antibodies that neutralize bacteria and other germs. Another type, the T cells, helps regulate antibody production and attacks cancers and invaders directly.

The new test uses scraps of DNA called gene probes. When mixed with a blood sample, they will reveal the presence of cancerous T cells with identical combinations of genes.

Similar tests already exist to pick out multiple copies of B cells.

Tuition

recessionary period of the late 1970s caused necessary improvements to be ignored at institutions and more money is needed now for modern facilities.

Another marked increase in estimates was a 7.9 percent rise in the cost of room and board charged by the Department of Housing. Student Financial Assistance made no revisions in estimates of personal expenses and transportation and only a small increase in the cost of books.

Fees for out-of-state graduate and veterinary medicine students have increased at about the same rate as undergraduate students at the University. This semester the fees are $1,527.50 for non-resident undergraduates, $685.50 for graduate residents, $1,587.50 for non-resident graduates, $842.50 for resident veterinary medicine students and $2,266.50 for non-resident veterinary medicine students.

Bands clash in regional competition

By JESSICA GARD

Dogs? compete for best of show

After winning two of three rounds in July at the Cotillion Ballroom, the Wichita-based band is in the final round. The final battle will be Sept. 29 at the Cotillion.

Winner of the battle of the bands will receive $10,000 worth of equipment and a video provided by High Fidelity Recording Inc. The video will be entered in the MTV basement tapes competition.

The battle of the bands is sponsored by KKRD-FM, Uhlik Music and MTV. Twelve of 36 bands were selected for the battle from demo tapes.

Dogs? was to compete with two bands in the first round. One of the two bands was disqualified because it changed members, and the other, Apostle, was judged inferior.

Members of Dogs? are Jerry Sumner, lead vocals; Conrad Stolze, guitar and vocals; Barry Dirks, bass and vocals; Joe McWhorter, keyboards and vocals; and Stan Hartman, drums and vocals.

"The judging is 50 percent ticket ballot and 50 percent by audience judging, so we need to get a lot of people out (at the Cotillion in September)," Dirks said.

"Supposedly, there is to be an MTV VJ (video jockey) there for the finals," said McWhorter.

Dogs? played 10 original songs for the first round.

"The only thing we're worried about being original is our music, anything else we just try and have a good time," Sumner said.

Dogs? released its first album in March. All of the songs on the album were written by band members. Stolze writes most of the band's music, although Sumner and McWhorter contribute.

"We're getting ready to make a 45 rpm (single) with "Sister, Sister" and "Who's in Your Heart?," Sumner said.

"The band's been in existence for four years with various members. Conrad and McWhorter are the only original members," Dirks said. "We all came from different bands around Wichita."

Sumner joined the band in October 1984, and is the newest member of Dogs?. Previously, he was a member of the Kansas City-based band, the Clocks.

"We just keep playing our songs, because they're our songs," Sumner said. "We just wait 'til one good one comes on the radio and we learn it and play it for awhile until we get real burnt-out on it. Our own stuff, we just keep hitting it until it's right," Sumner said.

The band plays in Missouri as well as Kansas. Last summer, they also performed in Canada.

"We're not a competitive band," Stolze said. "We don't worry about competition. We just try and do what's right for us. We don't pay too much attention to what everyone else is doing."

clergyman of mixed race and a staunch foe of apartheid, had planned to lead 20,000 people to Pollsmoor. He was arrested Tuesday.

Police using truncheons drove back about 300 protesters who got near the stadium Wednesday morning.

Among those arrested were a dozen clergymen of all races who, leading a crowd of about 2,000, locked arms and refused police orders to disperse. They had managed to march only about half a mile from the Hewat teachers' college in Athlone toward Pollsmoor, seven miles away.

Police fired tear gas cannisters and charged the crowd, sweeping into the college auditorium to dislodge 600 demonstrators who had taken refuge there.

One protest ended peacefully. About 3,500 students, most of them white, set out from the wealthy white suburb of Rondebosch for the official residence of President P.W. Botha. They stopped near the campus on orders from police.

In Pretoria, the administrative capital, the government announced that it had banned the black Congress of South African Students (COSAS), which has chapters in most high schools.

The student group is a leading organizer of class boycotts and black township demonstrations against apartheid. Hundreds of its members are among the more than 2,200 people detained without charge since the white government imposed a state of emergency July 21.

Banning means that COSAS is not allowed to operate and its leaders may not be quoted. Members told The Associated Press their leaders were meeting secretly in black townships to decide whether to defy the banning order, and would issue a statement Thursday.

The Reagan administration condemned the banning and the use of repression.

"Banning...is one of the most odious practices of the South African government," State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said. "It offends the democratic values of free speech and assembly and accentuates the anger and frustration felt by all the opponents of apartheid."

Police headquarters would not say how many people were arrested and wounded in Cape Town.

Six journalists were reported arrested, including a three-man television crew filming for CBS. Colleagues in Johannesburg said they were charged with "disobeying the police."

Mandela was convicted of plotting sabotage and has been in prison since 1964.

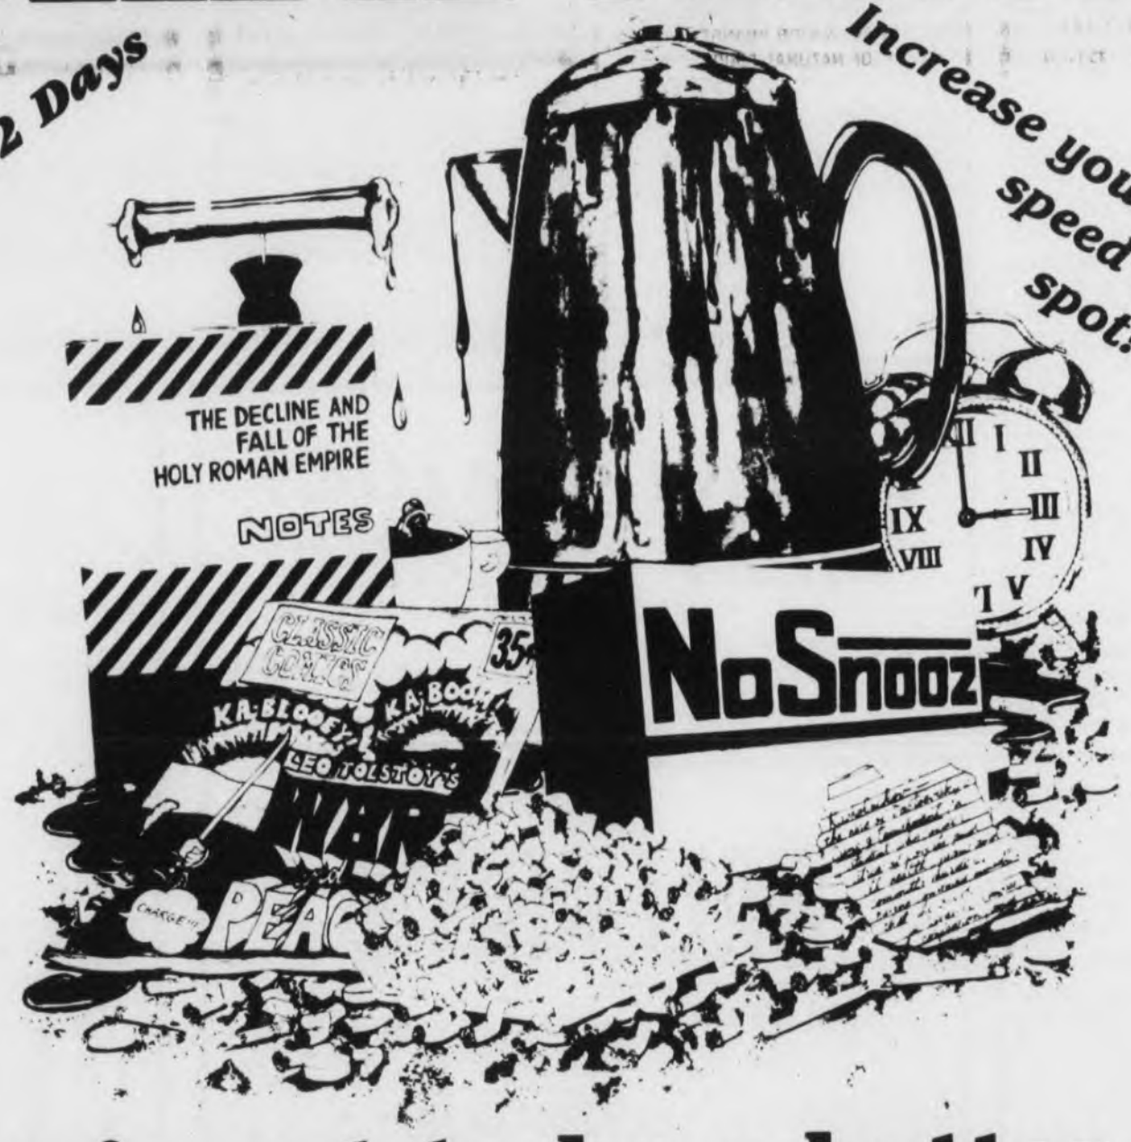
ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Decisions about the requirement of health fees are made by Admission and Records. (See General Catalog under Fees).
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students should be furnished ahead of time when possible.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen).
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.



NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Poll on economic sanctions opposes Reagan standpoint

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A new poll showing that a lopsided majority of South Africa's urban black population favors economic sanctions threatens to erode President Reagan's argument that sanctions shouldn't be imposed because blacks would be hurt by them.

Reagan is clearly leaning to vetoing sanctions, although he won't say for sure. He apparently first wants to be certain lawmakers wouldn't vote to override his veto.

Congress is expected to send him a sanctions bill soon after returning from its recess in September.

The bill already has been approved by the House and is awaiting Senate approval, which is seen as certain. It would put curbs on sales of nuclear equipment and computers, ban imports of South African gold coins and bar new loans to the South African government.

In an interview last weekend, Reagan said sanctions would increase unemployment and cause "setbacks in gains that have been made by labor and by the blacks in South Africa."

The administration argues — and there is evidence to back its claim — that U.S. economic ties provide a vehicle for encouraging fair employment practices for blacks.

But a poll conducted by the Sunday Times of London found that 77 percent of urban blacks in the survey favored economic sanctions anyway as a way of putting pressure on the regime of President P.W. Botha to dismantle apartheid.

Many who were polled acknowledged they personally would suffer under sanctions.

Urban blacks often are better off than those outside the cities. They number about 9 million, less than half of the total black population of 24 million, but they are the ones who work in the nation's factories, including U.S.-owned industries, and would be first to suffer if sanctions did hurt South Africa's economy.

The newspaper said its poll marked a reversal of previous polls showing "a slim black majority against sanctions."

The newspaper said the poll was conducted of 400 blacks in a string of South African cities by Markinor, a Gallup-affiliated organization.

The newspaper said the survey, done by interviews, was made last week and had a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.

Assuming it fairly reflects the views of urban blacks, the poll is not good news for Reagan.

Reagan might also put into effect — through an executive order — some features of the bill he considers acceptable, such as requiring American employers to engage in fair employment practices.

Supporters say the sanctions now being contemplated would have only minor impact on South Africa's economy, but that they would be important in signaling American impatience with apartheid.

Apartheid is the result of the South African government's official policy of "separate but equal development."

Shoe trade calls for quotas

Reagan refuses tariff request

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan on Wednesday turned down demands of the U.S. shoe industry for quotas or increased tariffs against low-cost imports, saying such protectionist measures would be "a crippling 'cure', far more dangerous than any economic illness."

The president assured domestic manufacturers, however, that he has ordered an investigation by the White House trade office under a law permitting a wide range of actions that he said could "root out any unfair trade practices that may be harming U.S. interests."

In Washington, D.C., administration trade representative Clayton Yeutter said his office would announce details of the investigative actions in a few days.

Reagan's action was immediately attacked by representatives of the footwear industry and shoe-producing states. Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, said Reagan's action was "grossly insensitive to the needs of the 200,000 shoe workers throughout the country."

George Langstaff, president of Footwear Industries of America Inc., which represents domestic shoe manufacturers and suppliers, said, "Congress must now recognize that the preservation of America's industrial base...(is) a major and urgent congressional priority."

But spokesmen for shoe retailers praised Reagan's decision.

"This is a great victory for the American consumer, who will continue to enjoy the widest choice of footwear at the lowest and most affordable prices available anywhere in the world," said Peter T. Mangione, president of Footwear Retailers of America Inc.

Taiwan and South Korea are the principal importers of shoes to the United States, followed by Brazil, Italy and Spain. About 120,000 Americans now work in the shoe industry, down from 215,000 in 1970. About 100 U.S. shoe factories were closed in 1984 alone.

Carbide asks for halt in trading of its stock

By The Associated Press

DANBURY, Conn. — Union Carbide Corp., plagued by a series of poison gas leaks and a hostile takeover bid, announced Wednesday a major reoganization that will include cutting 4,000 white-collar employees and making safety improvements while saving about $300 million.

The workforce reductions, which amount to about 15 percent of Carbide's salaried employees, will be completed by early 1986 and involve reductions by voluntary severance plans and early retirement.

Tom Failla, a company spokesman, said he did not know if any of the reductions would involve layoffs.

Carbide's workforce numbers more than 95,000 employees around the world, including 48,400 employees domestically, but Failla said the plants affected by the job cuts have not yet been designated.

Dick Henderson, a company spokesman in Institute, W.Va., characterized the moves as part of a "major plan to reorganize."

Carbide chairman Warren Anderson said the company will take $990 million from its 1985 earnings and use money from its employee pension fund to buy back as many as 10 million outstanding shares of stock.

"Obviously, these are very defensive moves," said James M. Arenson, an analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. "They've been done partly to avert a takeover.

GAF Corp. has been buying Carbide stock since an Aug. 11 gas leak at Carbide's Institute plant that injured 135 people. The leak initially depressed Carbide's stock price, but the move by GAF has caused it to rebound.

K-State freshman Kelly Herold, an All-State player from Bishop-Miege High School in Kansas City, dives for the ball during practice Wednesday in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcat volleyball team will open the 1985 season with the Ninth Annual KSU Invitational Sept. 13-14 in Manhattan.

Travis begins process of promoting athletics to regain fan support

DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

K-State's athletic successes of late have been few and far between. In fact, one probably could count on one hand the number of exciting things that have happened recently involving Wildcat athletes or teams.

Change was definitely in order Dec. 10, 1984 when K-State President Duane Acker fired Athletic Director Dick Towers, but what kind of man would it take to put the word "excitement" back into K-State's athletic vocabulary?

What kind of man would it take to tackle the challenge of turning around an athletic program strapped with the lowest budget of any school in the Big Eight Conference? What kind of man would it take to bring success to both men's major revunue-producing sports — football and basketball?

Travis came to K-State Feb. 6, after a successful stint as assistant athletic director at Georgia Tech University. While at the Atlanta school, Travis was responsible for supervising all men's sports programs and was the liaison to the school's alumni booster club.

He was also instrumental in the implementation of Tech's "Total Person" concept which is now being adapted here under the direction of Assistant Athletic Director Steve Miller.

The "Total Person" concept, which attempts to prepare collegiate athletes for life beyond the playing field or court, is but one of many ideas Travis has as to how he can begin to restructure the athletic program at K-State.

"We've really gone on quite a media blitz the last few weeks," Travis said last week. "We've run over 450 radio spots and 20 to 30 TV spots around the state in an attempt to bring the fans back out to support our program.

"And we've done a lot of other little things — like painting up the stadium — that we hope will make the whole experience of coming to a ball game more enjoyable."

Those "little things" will include revamped halftime entertainment and giveaways for fans at four of the home games.

Basketball and baseball also will be affected by the increased emphasis on marketing and promotion.

"In regard to basketball, we're going to have half-court shots to win a car, slam-dunk contests and quite a bit more musical entertainment," Travis said.

"We plan on marketing and promoting our baseball team quite extensively in the spring," he said. "With the new lights at Frank Meyers Field, we hope to make Friday night games in the spring a time where students can come out and have fun while watching some good college baseball."

Marketing and promotion will be keys in drawing fans to games initially, Travis said, but it will be the product on the field or court that will have to keep them coming back.

"Our athletes have to work hard and show the kind of effort on the field that fans will pay to see. We (the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics) expect total commitment from our players and coaches, and the fans have the right to expect it too," he said.

Change, however, will not come overnight, Travis said. It will take time and patience on the part of the fans.

"We're not going to turn this thing around overnight. It's going to take hard work. Our department is going to have to work that much harder than anyone else just to get us to where we want to be in five years," he said.

"Once we get to where we want to be, we'll have to work to stay there and improve even more. I was on the phone just the other day with the people at Georgia Tech. They haven't sold nearly as many season tickets this year as they have in the past," he said. "Even where you're winning, the effort can't end when you appear to be on the upswing."

The thing Travis is working hardest toward developing at K-State is consistency and stability in his department.

"You have to have a great degree of stability to succeed. Just look at my job. There have been five people at this desk in the past nine years. You have to have consistent leadership to be successful," he said.

Travis just may be the kind of man it takes to get the job done. K-State fans can only hope he is. I have a feeling their hopes are in the hands of the right man.

Sports money boom coming to an end

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: The sports money boom is coming to an end. This last of a three-part series looks at the financial future.

More is giving way to less in a new, emerging economy aimed at restoring stability to sports.

Less competition from rival leagues. Less in salary increases and other costs. Less reliance on television for money and fan support.

Partly by design and partly by natural progression, the change is already under way:

—Salaries are leveling off, and while superstars like basketball's Pat Ewing will still get the big contracts, owners and players predict that overall increases will continue to decline.

—The United States Football League, after a two-year salary war with the National Football League, has dropped out of the bidding for most college stars, easing pressure on the NFL.

—The National Basketball Association operates under a salary cap limiting team payrolls. The immediate result last season: While 10 teams still lost money, that was seven fewer than the year before.

—Baseball's new collective bargaining agreement calls for revenue sharing to help struggling teams, and owners estimate they will save $400,000 a year per team, starting in 1987, from salary arbitration changes.

It is a gradual transformation deemed necessary after unparalleled growth led to unparalleled spending over the last decade.

That doesn't mean sports will go broke, only that it won't get much richer.

"Maybe this latest golden age of sports is coming to an end," said former baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, "but it's not turning to lead."

Players really made it big because of competition for their services from rival leagues in football, basketball and hockey, and from free agency in baseball. And, like water, sports now is seeking its own level.

"I've lived through the demise of the World Hockey Association, the World Football League, the American Basketball Association," sports agent Bob Woolf said. "I've represented a lot of players who had wonderful contracts that weren't fulfilled. There's no sense having a great contract if you've got no place to play."

Negotiating the superstar contracts could be more difficult in baseball under a new requirement for up-front financing of all long-term contracts. If a player is to be paid for years after he leaves the game, the money has to be put in escrow; teams may no longer mortgage — or bankrupt — their future.

Just as television was pivotal in the money boom, it will be a key to the retrenchment.

The proliferation of money led to a proliferation of sports on the air. Will there be less sports on the air in the future?

"What's necessary," said Bob Igiel, a senior vice president and director of programming at the N.W. Ayer advertising agency, "is to reduce the number of games to make them more meaningful and then to reduce the number of events telecast, to make those more important, too. That's why the NFL ranks so highly — because it's still a relatively short season and every game means a lot."

Quarterbacks expected to dominate in Midwest

By The Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the final part of a four-part article previewing the 1985 college football season.

This is the year of the quarterback in the Midwest.

Nine starting quarterbacks return in the Big Ten and Steve Beuerlein will be back at Notre Dame. Illinois, Iowa and Ohio State have been tabbed the Big Ten's preseason favorites, but Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler warns, "Don't count us out." The Wolverines were an unaccustomed 6-6 last year.

"It'll be fun to watch," Illinois Coach Mike White says of the Big Ten's change from three yards and a cloud of dust to wide-open football. "There are more offensive skills and talented individuals in quarterbacks, receivers and running backs than you will see anywhere. The offenses will be explosive."

Among the better quarterbacks are Iowa's Chuck Long, Illinois' Jack Trudeau and Purdue's Jim Everett. Trudeau will throw to All-American wide receiver David Williams, who caught 101 passes last season. Besides Long, Iowa gets running back Ronnie Harmon back from a leg injury.

Only Ohio State lost its quarterback, but the Buckeyes have backup Jim Karsatos to replace starter Mike Tomczak. And tailback Keith Byars was the nation's leading rusher in 1984. The Buckeyes also return eight defensive starters.

Coach Gerry Faust enters his fifth year at Notre Dame still seeking that elusive outstanding season. The Irish will field a veteran offensive unit led by tailback Allen Pinkett.

The Southwest Conference had its tightest race in 70 years last season and six teams are given a legitimate shot at the title. Only Texas Tech and Rice are not considered contenders, while SMU, hammered by the harshest probation in NCAA history, is not eligible.

Houston, which represented the conference in the Cotton Bowl, returns exciting veer quarterback Gerald Landry, and tackle T.J. Turner will anchor a respectable defensive unit.

Texas was No. 1 in the rankings last year until its defense could no longer offset the lack of offense. The Longhorns could be pesky if Coach Fred Akers can solve his inconsistent quarterbacking.

Royals down Brewers, 8-2

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Darryl Motley hit a three-run home run, and Steve Balboni added a two-run shot to power the Kansas City Royals to an 8-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Wednesday night.

Royals right-hander Mark Gubicza, 10-7, allowed six hits while walking one and striking out three in eight innings, and Dan Quisenberry finished up.

Police storm South African school

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Rioting swept through Cape Town's black and mixed-race townships Thursday and police in armored cars battled mobs and stormed a school.

At least 16 people were reported killed throughout South Africa since Wednesday, when riot police charged with whips, clubs and tear gas into an interracial crowd of protesters trying to march to the prison where black leader Nelson Mandela is serving a life term.

Most of the killing occurred around Cape Town, where the march to Pollsmoor Prison was planned.

Police sealed off the largest black township. Witnesses said others besieged at least three mixed-race schools and stormed a third, smashing windows as children ran shrieking from the building.

Riot squads in armored vehicles raced around Cape Town's sprawling "colored" — or mixed race — townships of Bellville South, Mitchells Plains and Mannenberg, throwing tear gas and firing rubber bullets. Gangs of youths responded with rocks, put up makeshift road blocks and burned tires in the streets.

About 100 students gathered at the overwhelmingly white University of Cape Town campus to protest the apartheid system that denies rights to the black majority. At nightfall, police hurled 15 tear gas canisters onto the campus and moved into the leafy grounds behind two armored-personnel carriers to disperse the demonstrators. About 40 of the students were white.

Guguletu, Cape Town's biggest black township, was sealed off for a second day. Police barred journalists from the area Thursday morning, after announcing that two more blacks had been shot dead there.

A 3-year-old boy burned to death when a gasoline bomb was heaved into his home, the South African Broadcasting Corp. reported.

That brought the number of victims in the Cape town area to at least 13 for the two days of riots, most of them killed by police. Nearly 650 people have been killed in a year of rage against white rule, nearly all of them black.

More than 60 people, including 12 policemen, were wounded in the violence that gripped this southwestern port area after police thwarted the planned marches. Blacks, people of mixed race — called coloreds — and several thousand white Univer-

Homeowners associations oppose new multi-plexes

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

Although renters may benefit in the areas of better living facilities or reduced rental rates by the increase in multi-plex housing construction, these complexes may have undesirable impacts on residential neighborhoods.

In newly developed neighborhoods, such as the Westchester Park apartments at Kimball and Seth Child's avenues, the areas can be designed specifically for high-density housing, which may reduce the impact on nearby single-family neighborhoods. These areas can be planned with allowances for adequate parking, landscaping and recreational needs when annexation or rezoning requirements are being addressed.

In older, established neighborhoods, such as those east of campus, when an owner-occupied, or single-family rental house is located between multi-story apartment units, the outcome may be unsatisfactory.

In an effort to reduce negative impacts, neighborhood groups, such as the Older

Jury indicts district judge for perjury

By The Associated Press

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — A special federal grand jury investigating corruption among public officials in Mississippi Thursday indicted U.S. District Judge Walter Nixon on one count of accepting an illegal gift and three counts of perjury.

Nixon is the sixth person indicted since the grand jury began its investigation 13 months ago. He is only the third sitting federal judge ever indicted.

There were no details on when Nixon would be arraigned.

Nixon, 56, is the chief federal judge for the Southern District of Mississippi and has been on the federal bench since July 26, 1968.

Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal Judge Charles Clark of Jackson said he had been advised that "this was expected" and he would have an announcement on Nixon's court status "once my office is officially notified."

The grand jury previously met about two weeks ago but has not returned any indictments since March.

There have been reports for several months that the grand jury is about to finish its investigation with several indictments. However, all federal employees, including prosecutors in the Justice Department's Division of Public Integrity, are pro-

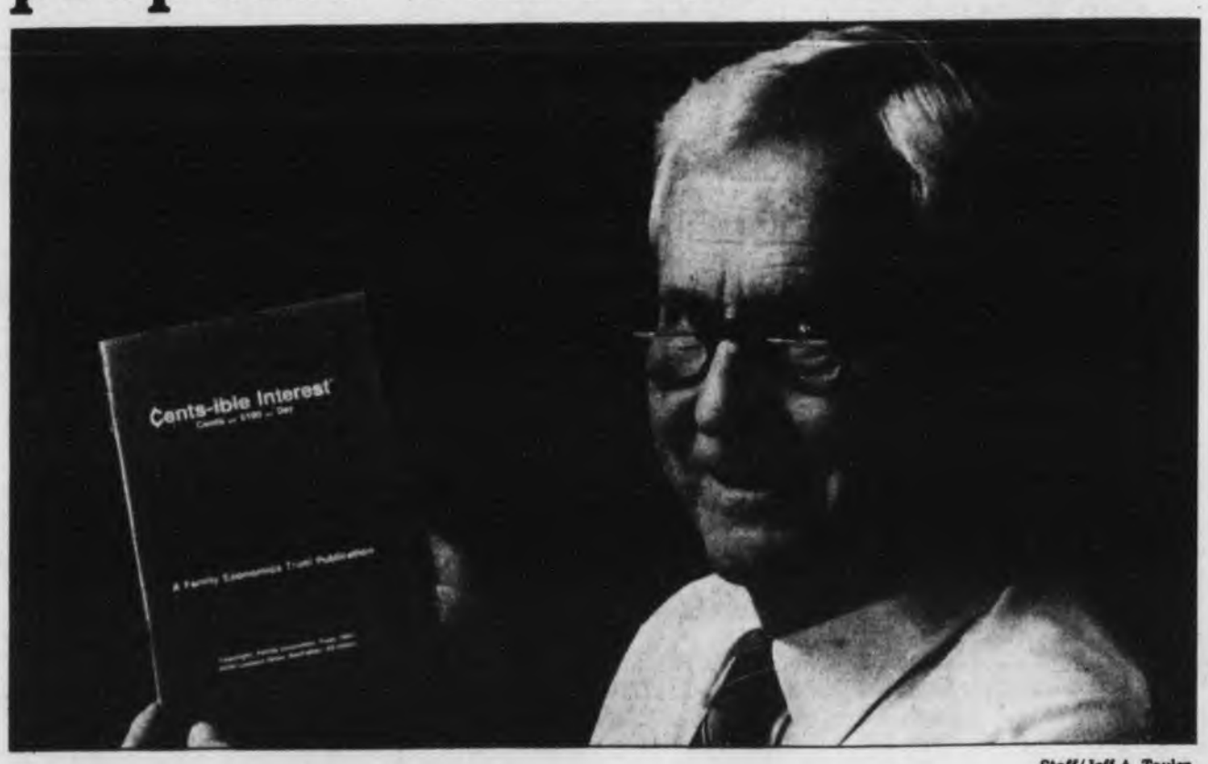
Professor proposes 'cents-ible interest'

Kansas House to consider banking law

By SUE DAWSON
Staff Writer



A University professor is patiently awaiting the outcome of a bill in the Kansas Legislature that would change the way interest is determined at financial institutions.

Richard Morse, professor of family economics, has more than a mere passing concern with the bill. His concern stems from the fact that he devised the meat of the bill. Morse developed a solution to simplify the confusing mass of percentage rates and interest calculation methods. He calls it "cents-ible interest."

The bill came close in the Kansas Senate last year, but the final vote ended in a tie.

House Bill 2380 states the legislation's purpose is "to reduce costs and improve communications by standardizing the language used for computing and disclosing fully all terms and conditions pertaining to" banking procedures.

Morse's plan reduces the banking system to one unit of measurement, pennies per $100 per day, and avoids the use of percentages. To further simplify the idea, interest is compounded on a daily basis.

Staff/Jeff A. Taylor

Richard L. Morse, professor of family economics, has written a book titled the "Cents-ible Interest," that explains how to simplify percentage rates and interest calculation methods.

"It makes sense," Morse said. "That's why I call it 'cents-ible interest.'"

There are 7.8 million ways to compute interest, Morse said.

There is no difference in the amount of interest an account gets with Morse's plan; banks would only have to change their marketing strategies to fit the new format.

"We lead our lives day to day, so it is a human way" to compute interest, Morse said.

"It will not require expensive re-education," to inform the public of his system, Morse said. "All I need to know is when the money went in (to the bank), when it was withdrawn and the number of days in between," Morse said. "Then, with a $15 calculator, I can tell you precisely

Kohl picks diplomat as intelligence chief

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — West Germany named a new chief for its shaken foreign spy network on Thursday, and later announced that a high-ranking diplomat had defected from East Germany.

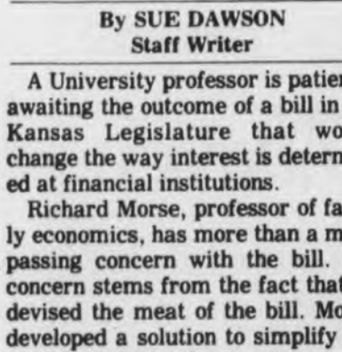
Bonn officials also confirmed they detained a West German counter-espionage agent Thursday on suspicion he was an undercover agent, but said he was released later because of insufficient evidence.

The spreading spy scandal has wracked Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government for more than a week. A secretary in the president's office was arrested last weekend.

Kohl moved Thursday to reorganize Bonn's spy services. He named Hans-Georg Wieck, 57, a veteran diplomat with an extensive security background, as foreign intelligence chief. Wieck, who has been serving as ambassador to NATO, replaces Heribert Hellenbroich who was dismissed as head of the Federal Intelligence Service.

Government spokesman Juergen Sudhoff identified the defecting diplomat as Martin Winkler, who he said was No. 2 man in the East German Embassy in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and said Winkler had been in West Germany since Sunday.

He said Winkler was "a man of considerable importance in the East German Foreign Office" who held many major posts in Latin America, including Cuba.



Sudhoff, in an interview with West German television, rejected newspaper reports of a connection between the defection and the spy scandal, calling such suggestions "fairy tales."

The Argentine government news agency Telam said the East German Embassy in Buenos Aires informed the Foreign Ministry of Winkler's defection.

An East German Embassy official reached by telephone in the Argentine capital denied any knowledge of Winkler.

Liebetanz, 48, is a section chief in the Constitutional Protection Office, the agency whose duties include counter-espionage against East Germany.

Late in the afternoon, Alexander Prechtel, spokesman for the chief federal prosecutor's office, said Liebetanz had been released.

FBI identify patrolman's kidnapper

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The FBI said Thursday that a fingerprint found in a mobile home used to kidnap a Kansas Highway Patrol trooper matches that of a man on the agency's Ten Most-Wanted list who is charged with escaping a Tennessee prison and robbing two banks.

The FBI is now positive Lohman Ray Mays Jr. was one of three people who kidnapped Sgt. Dan Gifford on Saturday, said FBI spokesman Tony Triplett.

Mays, 42, escaped a Tennessee state prison at Only in July 1984 and was put on the most-wanted list in January.

The FBI believes a woman who helped in the kidnapping is Mays' girlfriend, 28-year-old Patricia Anne Barrett. Another man involved in the abduction has not been identified.

Gifford was kidnapped after he stopped a mobile home along Interstate 70 in central Kansas to warn its occupants that a piece of luggage has become loose on a rack atop the vehicle. He was taken to a farm house near Sterling where he was tied up with three members of the family who lived there. Gifford and the others managed to free themselves after a short time and were not injured.

FBI officials said they did not know where the three suspects were.

Stephan makes open records ruling

TOPEKA — No one has an absolute right to inspect every record or document maintained by a public agency which bears his name or social security number, according to Attorney General Robert T. Stephan.

In a legal opinion issued Thursday, Stephan told Rep. Clint Acheson, R-Topeka, ruled that parents do not have the right to see welfare reports concerning abuse or neglect of their children.

"Kansas has not enacted a 'privacy act' but has enacted an 'open records' law," Stephan explained. "Under that law, any person may inspect and copy certain records maintained by any public agency.

"However, a person may properly be denied access to a record bearing his or her name or social security number where that record falls within certain listed exceptions to the general rule requiring disclosure."

Stephan explained that under the open records law, the secretary of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services has discretion to allow or deny a parent access to records and reports concerning abuse or neglect of that person's child. Only a court order can force disclosure.

"In conclusion, a person has no absolute right to inspect every record bearing his or her name or social security number which is maintained by a public agency," Stephan said. "Nor does a parent, solely by virtue of his or her parentage, have an absolute right to inspect records and reports maintained by SRS concerning abuse or neglect of his or her child."

Publisher buys estate in New York

STAATSBURG, N.Y. — Robert Guccione, publisher of Penthouse magazine, has purchased a 62-acre estate for $2.5 million, and plans to spend another $2.5 million remodeling the 16-room riverfront mansion, his spokesperson said.

The spokesperson, Leslie Jay, said the estate has 2,900 feet of Hudson River frontage.

Kathy Lowin, the sales agent, would not confirm the deal Wednesday.

"The present owners on the property don't want me to say anything, and I can't comment," Lowin said.

The buyer of the estate will be responsible for $22,000 in real estate taxes, according to town records.

Since 1983, the estate has been owned by a partnership including Lee Balter of Garrison and Haddasah Brooks and Carol Rifkind, both of New York.

Military removes curfew in Nigeria

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — Nigeria's new military rulers lifted a dusk-to-dawn curfew Thursday, freed 25 political prisoners and set up a committee to screen several hundred more for possible release, Nigeria radio reported.

It said the indications were that many more prisoners would released soon. The radio, monitored here, also announced formation of a new Armed Forces Ruling Council.

The curfew was imposed when the coup took place Tuesday. The radio quoted a spokesman for the new government as saying it was being ended "because calm now prevails all over the country."

In reporting the review of prisoners' cases, the radio said: "A committee has been set up by the president, Maj. Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, with a view to releasing those unduly detained."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher sent what her office in London called "a good-will message" to the new regime. Foreign Minister Sir Geoffrey Howe said he was ready to go ahead with earlier plans to visit Lagos next month if it suited the Nigerian authorities.

The radio said airports and seaports had been reopened and regular flights had resumed. International telex links and leased lines also were restored Thursday afternoon, but phone service appeared still suspended.

Moslem militias battle each other

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Rival Moslem militias turned on each other Thursday, fighting for control of west Beirut. Christian and Moslem gunners dueled across Beirut's Green Line and in South Lebanon.

Six people were killed and 15 wounded in the battles, police said.

Christian and Moslem militias swapped 22 kidnap victims, including a Lebanese-born Canadian, who were abducted in a recent spree of sectarian kidnapping, police said.

Police officials said Jean Ghanem, the Christian Lebanese Forces militia representative, handed over 11 Moslems to Shiite militia leader Ahmed Baalbaki in the 30-minute swap in return for an equal number of Christians held by Moslems.

They said the exchange was arranged by a security committee representing the Lebanese Army and the three main militias. The swap took place at the Kafaat crossing on the Green Line that separates the capital's Christian and Moslem sectors, the officials said.

By police count, at least 40 civilians had been kidnapped in the last week by rival militias as they tried to cross the Green Line or drove to Beirut airport.

There was no word on the fate of the remaining kidnap victims.

Three Mile Island may use reactor

Harrisburg, Pa. — The continuation of the stay, signed by Judge Collins Seitz of the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, came amid signs that Three Mile Island was getting ready to start up the Unit 1 reactor, which was undamaged in the March 1979 accident that crippled its sister reactor.

A three-judge panel from the circuit court had seemed to pave the way to reopening the plant when it affirmed Tuesday a Nuclear Regulatory Commission order allowing restart.

But the state of Pennsylvania, which has fought the immediate restart of the plant, Thursday petitioned the appeals court to reaffirm its June 7 order temporarily halting TMI's reopening.

The state sought quick action on its request. According to court documents filed by the state, the NRC intended to issue a letter at 4 p.m. Thursday to authorize the plant to immediately restart its Unit 1 reactor.

In its Thursday order, the court said the stay will remain in effect pending appeals of Tuesday's ruling.

Faculty research grants hit new high

By GREG PROSKE
Staff Writer

Total increase exceeds $3 million

Faculty involved in research projects set a record in fiscal year 1985 for money received for competitive research grants and sponsored programs.

Most University colleges show an increase in competitive research grants received for fiscal 1985 over fiscal 1984, said Robert P. Lowman, assistant dean of the Graduate School. The University fiscal year runs from June 30 through July 1.

Competitive research grants are obtained by faculty members through the private sector for research ideas, or to sustain existing research projects, Lowman said.

The University total for competitive research grants for 1985 was $17,887,589. This is a $3,146,444 increase over the 1984 figure of $14,741,145.

"It is a tribute to our faculty that they got these increases," he said.

The largest dollar amounts were received by the College of Agriculture, $7,459,395; the College of Arts and Sciences, $6,524,988; and the College of Engineering, $1,734,077.

Other college and university programs received amounts ranging from $757,522 to $38,410: $757,522 for the College of Education; $417,151 for the College of Veterinary Medicine; $58,466 for the College of Architecture and Design; $46,633 for the College of Business Administration; $38,410 for the College of Home Economics; $320,162 for the Center for Student Development; $204,734 for Continuing Education; $283,684 for the Graduate School; and $42,367 for Farrell Library.

The College of Arts and Sciences is the only college to have a steady trend of increases in competitive research grants over a four-year period and may overtake the College of Agriculture in research dollars received, Lowman said.

He said the College of Arts and Sciences' success in gaining research money is mainly due to the programs' success and research in the Department of Physics, the Division of Biology and the Department of Chemistry.

"I see a real potential for growth (in grants received) in engineering and veterinary medicine. The dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine is really pushing for research," he said.

Lowman said he expects continued growth for most of the colleges in competitive grants for 1986.

One reason these competitive research grants are important, as opposed to other grants, is because "we can compare ourselves (the University) with our peers by what we get in competitive research dollars," he said.

"We are very competitive for what resources we have available to us," he said.

Gannett takes control of media association

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Directors of the Evening News Association, owners of The Detroit News, agreed Thursday to sell the company for $717 million to Gannett Co. Inc., publisher of USA Thursday and 85 other daily newspapers.

Gannett Chairman Allen Neuharth and ENA Chairman Peter Clark said in a statement that directors of both companies had unanimously approved the transaction, with Gannett agreeing to pay $1,583 a share for ENA.

The deal ends 112 years of Scripps family ownership for the newspaper.

Besides The Detroit News, the Evening News Association publishes four daily newspapers and owns five television stations, including WDVM in Washington, D.C., the nation's ninth largest broadcast market.

Gannett owns six television stations and 16 radio stations, as well as the Gannett Outdoor Advertising Group, which leases billboard space.

The News is the nation's ninth-largest newspaper with more than 647,000 copies sold daily, according to the 1985 Editor & Publisher Yearbook.

ENA began circulating its financial information among other potential buyers after two television producers, Norman Lear and A. Jerrold Perenchio, offered $453 million, or $1,000 per share, for the family-owned company. ENA stock a year earlier had sold for between $150 and $200 a share.

Directors of ENA rejected the July 28 offer, and L.P. Media later raised its offer to $1,250 per share, or $566 million. Sima Nahum, a spokeswoman for L.P. Media, said the company had no immediate comment on the announcement by ENA.

ENA stock is not publicly traded, and the company has no legal obligation to disclose its financial results. A lawsuit filed by an ENA employee who was fired during a court battle over the LP. Media takeover bid stated that The Detroit News lost $8.5 million last year, but that the broadcast of ENA earned $29 million in profits.

Besides The Detroit News, the ENA also owns the Indio (Calif.) Daily News; Palm Springs (Calif.) Desert Sun; Milville (N.J.) Daily; Vineland (N.J.) Times-Journal, and four weekly newspapers.

Soviet use of spy dust 'highly possible'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The State Department believes it is "highly probable" the chemical powder allegedly used by the Soviet Union to trace the movements of U.S. diplomats in Moscow may have been used at least once by Soviet agents in the United States, a congressman said Thursday.

"There are indications it has been used outside Moscow, in the United States," said Rep. Dan Mica, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs international operations subcommittee. "I have been told there is one highly possible use in the United States."

But Mica told a news conference that the State Department did not give him any details of where and when the tracking chemical, nitrophenylpentadienal or NPPD, may have been used in the United States and for what purpose. He said there is no evidence any U.S. agency has ever used it.

Mica also said preliminary medical findings are that the use of the yellowish-orange powder may have placed Soviet agents at greater health risk than the Americans who were their targets.

And he said the only reason the United States discovered this spring that the Soviets had begun to use the tracking substance heavily in Moscow was that the Soviets "made a mistake" and applied so much of the chemical at an unidentified site that the powder became visible.

Mica said he was told by Dr. Charles Brodine, the State Department's chief medical adviser, there is a "very low probability" the health of any U.S. personnel in Moscow has been adversely affected by ingesting or inhaling the substance or by absorbing it through the skin.

Mica said the United States plans a short-term test of the health effects of the substance on laboratory animals, including mice.

He said a long-term test, which would take at least two years to complete, might be ordered, depending on the results of the preliminary testing.

Mica said a crash program has been ordered to find out how to get rid of the substance from automobiles, desks, typewriters, clothing and other places where it might have been sprayed.

"What it is put on it tends to stick on," he said. "The problem is that this substance sticks very well."

Americans in Moscow were told earlier Thursday that attempts will be made to see if the powder can be removed completely either by vaccuming or through the use of detergents.

But Dr. Ernest McConnell, the head of a team of American experts sent to brief U.S. personnel in Moscow, said there is a good chance the Soviets already have removed the chemical from surfaces to which it had been applied.

Mica said his subcommittee will continue to look into the situation and try to learn why U.S. personnel were not told about the eight earlier occasions between 1976 and 1985 when U.S. agents found small traces of the chemical.

The Soviets have strongly denied using the "spy dust," but Mica said there is little doubt that they did so.

RECOMMEND AMERICA'S LARGEST MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM.

Regardless of what your students plan to major in at college, you can still help them get the management and leadership training they'll need to become an Army officer.

In Army ROTC, your students will receive training in managing money, people, and resources. Training they can use to build a rewarding career in their chosen major.

And they'll get this training by doing. Which will develop their self-confidence. And their decision-making abilities.

Army ROTC will also help them pay for the high cost of getting a higher education. With financial assistance. Up to $1,000 a year for their last two years of ROTC.

So recommend a management program that lets your students graduate with a degree in their chosen major and a commission in today's Army — which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard. Recommend Army ROTC.

Summers off: a habit for college students

KATHERINE HERMAN
Collegian Columnist

As a standard, yet quite honest, reply to a fellow staff member's recent inquiry, I commented that although I had a pleasant summer, it always seems to take too long in arriving and is too short in duration.

In reply to this sentiment, he cited the fact that there will probably come a day when I, as a member of the working/social community rather than the university/academic setting, would no longer experience summertime as I perceive it now.

Three months of deviation, whether it be in the form of blissful relaxation or merely slight schedule changes, would no longer be an option. My student's educational responsibility (mainly to myself) will be put into practice and the career person will emerge, tied to the responsibilities of a job encompassing the entire year.

The thought of no summer vacation was startling. Subconsciously I refused to accept it at the time. However, as I studied the suggestion, especially during this first week of the semester, with its organization and adaptation to new schedules, it hit me that this would indeed occur.

Summertime could be considered a habit which unfortunately must be broken as one switches from the student lifestyle to that of the career person.

For the university student, this habit is imbedded deeply, as more time is contributed to the process, and the cycle of nine months/three months is repeated more often.

I'm not referring to going to school for nine months and then vegetating for the remainder of the year. (Of course, I will be the first to admit to long spans of time spent in front of the television eating junk food during the summer — simply because it's summer. One is not required to use much energy.)

I am referring to the situation which allows for a change of activities. Being busy while doing constructive things during the summer months still possesses an aura of change.

How does one survive the same job all year long with only one vacation? The thought seems unfathomable to a student of 15 years. With the exception of some teaching jobs, most careers do not allow employees to completely change their schedules and responsibilities for a quarter of the year.

It is hard to imagine the year as one unit rather than summer separated from school year. Summer just naturally holds special implications for the student.

During grade school it means a break from the drudgery of classwork and early bedtimes. It is a time for adventure.

High-school students often deal with the changes the summer brings through the infamous summer job. While the changes become less pronounced as the student engages in the hectic university lifestyle, the excitement experienced at the end of the spring semester still remains.

Having attended summer school this year, I made somewhat of an adaptation to this traumatic approaching change. But let's face it — going to school during the summer is just not the same thing as practicing your chosen vocation all summer long.

First of all, the summer term will invariably end, and schedules change once again as the fall semester begins.

Second, summer school has a different atmosphere. Maybe this is simply due to lower enrollment, or perhaps summer students realize that attending this term is one of the first steps to losing summertime as an entity.

Also, education differs from spending summer in the workplace because of the variation in topics to be studied, and the mere fact that summer school is a personal choice rather than a responsibility maintains the summertime spirit.

Perhaps one's changing perception of summertime is a result not only of the conditions of employment but also of the more developed sense felt by the maturing person of needing to use time wisely.

People rarely choose to sit idle for a quarter of the year when opportunity awaits and the struggle to achieve goes on. The pleasurable aspect of summer vacation is buried under diligence and a need for continuity. One's desire to vacate is reduced to a matter of weeks and is considered a benefit of the job.

Of course, even when summer loses its significance as a time of change and relaxation, it still offers its uniqueness to all. The warmth of the sunshine, trips to the lake, still summer evenings: these pleasures will be preserved and enjoyed long after lifestyles change the student's experience of summer.

Child-care co-op helpful

Parents on campus may no longer need to worry about where to take their children now that the KSU Child Care Cooperative is in operation.

The child care center is innovative in that it is a cooperative among students, faculty and staff. Parents become members of the center by paying a $25 fee, giving them voting rights and the opportunity to voice opinions concerning the center's development.

Members of the cooperative will be asked to help out 10 hours per year or pay a $50 fee, to be used to maintain the facilities or cover business costs at the center.

Fees will be collected for enrollment of children, but comparatively, the program will provide inexpensive and personal child care. With its Jardine Terrace location, the proximity of the cooperative to campus will allow parents to see their children during the day, which is vital to maintaining family bonds and communication.

The cooperative provides parents the opportunity to ensure their children's well-being through their personal involvement in the program. Along with three full-time teachers, students on work study and three part-time aides will supervise the children.

The cooperative should be commended not only for its personal approach, but also for its flexibility. An interval child care program is available from 7:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m., a schedule which should correlate with the schedules of students and faculty. Parents can spend the maximum amount of time with their children as the program can be used for as little as two hours per week or as many as 20 hours per week.

For parents who have long class schedules, the cooperative provides a full-day program in which children may be left at 7:45 a.m. and picked up as late as 5:15 p.m.

Parents who are interested in the program should join now to ensure that the program expands adequately to provide for everyone. All parents are encouraged to consider the cooperative as a viable alternative for child care and to support an important service which concerned students and faculty have made available.

Kansas must have lottery

14-17-22-23-30-47.

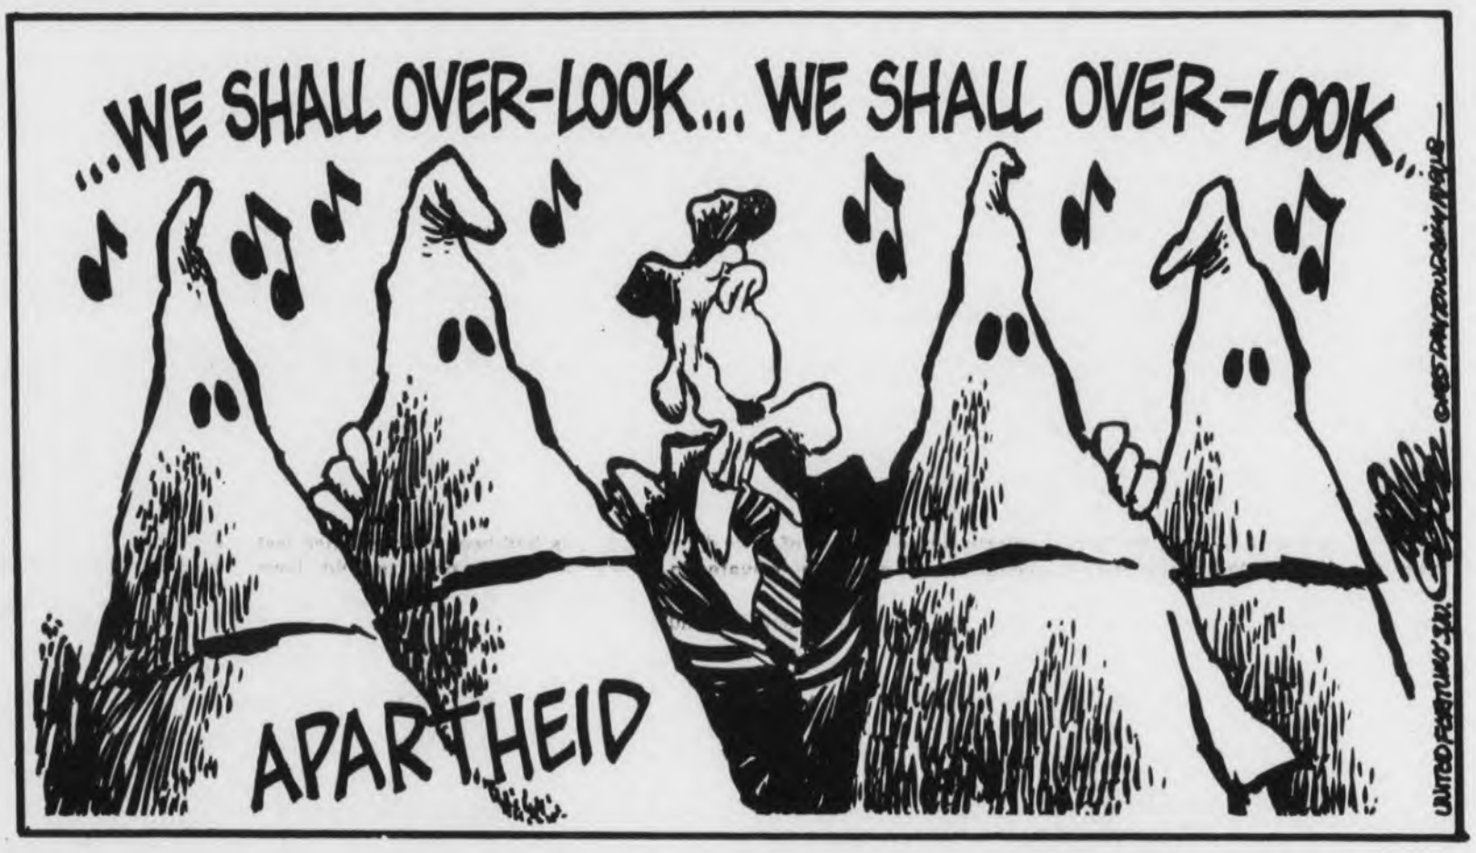
To most people these six numbers do not mean much. But to 23 residents of New York state they mean a lot. They are the six winning numbers in the Aug. 21 New York state lottery.

A large portion of the $41 million jackpot — the largest in the United States to date — will be split among the 23 lucky persons who selected the six correct numbers.

The jackpot winners will each net more than $20,000 for the next 20 years. But others will share the treasure.

Along with the jackpot winners, 578 betters selecting five winning numbers will earn $2,600 each. More than 48,000 individuals selecting four of the six correct numbers will receive $80 and 65,000 bettors able to select three right numbers will take home $23.

Gamblers if Kansas could experience the luckiest day of their lives and become instantly wealthy if a state-run lottery is established. Tickets for a Kansas lottery could be placed on sale in January 1987 if the Kansas Legislature, Gov. John Carlin and voters approve of the idea.



Twenty-two states are operating or are authorized to operate lotteries. Another 21 state legislatures, including Kansas', are working on legislation that would enable them to establish lotteries. Only seven states in the United States have not officially began campaigns to introduce the revenue-generating lottery system.

Considering the state of Kansas' rural agricultural and business economy, and the budget constraints of state and local governments, it is prudent to support the creation of a lottery.

While it is true individuals participate in lotteries for their personal gain, it follows all Kansans would benefit from increases in state tax revenue. Liberal estimates place the figure at $80 million in revenue per year.

The funds could go a long way towards improving the state's educational system or slowing the rate of tax increase during the next few years. It is time for Kansans to act — bet on it.

Religious differences don't justify atheism

WALT DEBACKER
Guest Columnist

At the risk of violating the wise principle, "turn the other cheek," I would like to respond to Daniel Grubb's column in the Aug. 27 Collegian.

Grubb wrote that religion is at best a "fairy tale." Using the example of the militant fundamentalism seen in the Middle East — especially in the Iran-Iraq war — Grubb said that religion is harmful.

But the Iran-Iraq war is not the only "holy" war. Since December 1979, a holy war has been fought in Afghanistan — a war that shows many of the fallacies of Grubb's pro-atheism arguments.

In Afghanistan, the jihad are not the aggressors — the atheistic Soviets are. It is not the religious "fanatics" who are murdering innocent civilians.

In Afghanistan, the atheists have not brought any good to the religious people. They have brought only guns, nerve gas and death.

According to Grubb, religion is also harmful because it adversely affects intellectualism.

Supposedly, religious people will want to suppress ideas and information that do not agree with their religious beliefs. Atheists, the argument goes, have no reason to fear new thoughts.

But recent events do not show this to be the case. About six months ago, the Soviet government rewrote several definitions in the version of the Oxford English Dictionary that is approved for sale in the Soviet Union. This month, the Chinese government rewrote its official version of the history of World War II.

I doubt that many people would look at these acts of atheistic governments and declare that they were for the good of academia. The simple fact is that academia, and thought itself, is most stringently controlled in atheistic nations — not in religious nations.

I am not claiming that any atheistic nation is doomed to become a land of evil. I am saying that religions do not cause militantism — people do. Religions do not cause ethnocentrism, prejudice or the stifling of thought. People cause those evils, and those evils would continue without religion. In fact, recent events show that without religion, those evils would grow.

One of Grubb's major arguments for his belief that religions are fairy tales is the fact that there are so many different and conflicting religions.

Well, there are also many different and conflicting theories as to why the galaxy is the way it is. But that doesn't mean we should declare astronomy to be a fairy tale and scrap the whole science.

If all the evidence in the world pointed to the same conclusions, life's decisions would be easy. People have to look over conflicting evidence and try to decide which evidence best represents the truth.

Astonomers disagree on what is at the center of the Milky Way, doctors disagree on the cause of cancer, and theologians disagree on what is the best religion.

To demand otherwise is to be naive.

Understanding the 'parentspeak' language

RICH HARRIS
Collegian Columnist

Do you always say what you mean? Does the same word or phrase always mean the same thing for you in different contexts? Probably not.

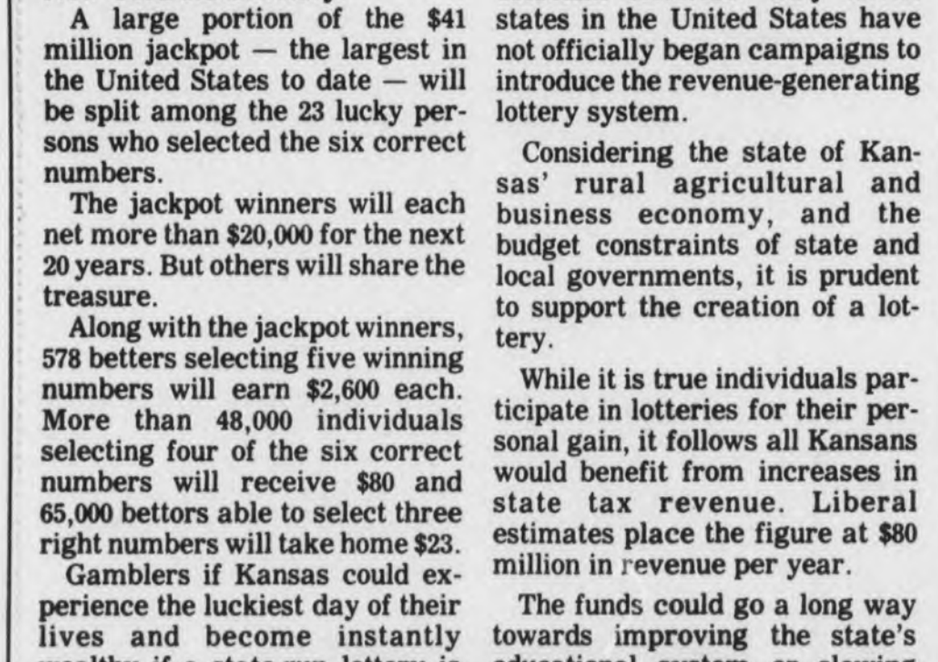
In the next few columns I'll discuss the different "languages" people use when they are talking to each other — greekspeak, barspeak, parentspeak, lovespeak, sexspeak, jobspeak and madspeak.

Parentspeak is an easy one. Several words and phrases mean entirely different things when used in parentspeak. "It's going to hurt me a lot worse than it will hurt you" is an excellent example. Garbage. Dad isn't the one getting his situpon tanned courtesy of the J.C. Penney men's belts section. The only thing in the whole house that's going to suffer as much as you is the belt.

Or what about "It's for your own good," which is an open-ended excuse for everything from brussels sprouts to no Saturday nights out after 10. As any kid with lips will tell you, anything that's "for your own good" is going to hurt, taste funny or smell bad. There's nothing good about it.

In parentspeak, the kids are treated as though they have a minimal knowledge of the English tongue (which is true in a lot of cases) and like they were severely limited in their logic facilities (which may also be true, but is beside the point).

Parentspeak operates under the assumption that kids are so gullible they'll buy any cock-and-bull story fed to them, provided they haven't the intestinal fortitude to find out if mom really will kill them if they play football with her Spode porcelain vase, "help daddy garden" with a homemade fertilizer of Drano and Clorox or pretend the washing machine is a one-man carnival ride.



Parentspeak is an acquired language. Children are not born with instinctive knowledge of parentspeak, despite the fact that some wags insist on calling it "the mother tongue." No, children learn parentspeak as their parents did — through experience.

When a child talks to his parents it is also considered parentspeak. When a child says "I love you" it translates roughly into "I want something." When kids tell parents "my teacher doesn't like me," the child is doing poorly in school. If "my teacher hates me," I'm failing the majority of my classes.

"I had an accident" is the parentspeak equivalent of "I knew exactly what I was doing and that it was unjustifiably risky, but sometimes you just have to say 'what the hell.'" "I hate you" means I hate you.

Despite appearances, parentspeak isn't always the language of manipulation and punishment. Parentspeak is also like a cousin of lovespeak. Parents and their kids alike often find it hard to communicate without the aid of some 'speak or another. In parentspeak, they can be saying they really do love each other without all the mushy stuff that often makes kids (and parents too) uncomfortable.

However imperfect parentspeak may be, it's all we have. It's been the standard for years. NEXT TIME: BARSPEAK.

Reagan freezes 2 million workers' pay

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — President Reagan froze the salaries of approximately 2 million federal white-collar workers Thursday, rejecting an increase that the White House said would have added more than $20 billion to the budget deficit.

The president's decision is in line with the pay freeze adopted by Congress in work on budget provisions as a compromise between a 5 percent pay cut proposed by Reagan and a 19.15 percent increase suggested by his federal pay agent unit.

Reagan acted after reviewing the reports of the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay, which had recommended a 4.7 percent increase, and of his pay agent unit. The Office of Personnel Management said the pay agent unit is composed of the OPM director, the secretary of labor, and the director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The pay agent unit said the increase was needed to bring federal salaries up to the level of those doing comparable work in private industry. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said it would have added $20.6 billion to the deficit for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

The president's decision affects most federal civilian white-collar employees. It does not apply to postal employees, who are under a separate pay system.

The president announced his decision in favor of a freeze in a message to Congress. Speakes said the president's determination could be changed only if it were overridden by both houses of Congress.

Administration and congressional officials had been talking since last year about the need to hold down federal pay to help cut the deficit, and the president's action freezing salaries had been expected.

The action came as the president prepared to wind up a three-week vacation at his 688-acre ranch near here and begin a two-month speaking campaign on behalf of his plan to overhaul federal tax laws.

Reagan will fly back to Washington, D.C., Monday.

Manhattan drinking guidelines unique

Police say ordinances hard to enforce

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Government Editor

Most students are now aware of the change made this summer in the state's drinking laws dealing primarily with the legal age of 3.2 beer consumption. However, consumers of cereal malt beverages in Manhattan should also be aware of laws unique to the city.

Changes in the city ordinances, which took effect Aug. 20, still allow 18-year-olds to enter an establishment where cereal malt beverages are sold. However, no 18-year-old may legally consume or dispense cereal malt beverages. After 8 p.m., the 18-year-old must leave the premises unless accompanied by a parent or guardian. This curfew does not apply to employees 18 years old.

Businesses selling cereal malt beverages must display a notice provided by the city clerk regarding the 18-year-old clause. This requirement does not apply if the business has registered an affidavit, or a written statement made under oath, with the city clerk stating that less than 35 percent of the total sales of the business are derived from the sale of cereal malt beverages. Such an affidavit would be renewable on an annual basis.

Captain Nick Edvy of the Riley County Police Department said he sees problems in enforcing the 18-year-old clause.

"The new law, quite frankly, is an enforcement nightmare," Edvy said.

"Once an 18- or 19-year-old is in a tavern, and it's packed, who is to say whether the beer in front of him is his? Who's responsible to make sure he doesn't drink? The only answer is the person who holds the license.

Another amendment to local ordinances concerns the hours cereal malt beverages may be served was instituted by the city Feb. 19. This amendment prohibits licensees, their agents and employees from selling, providing or otherwise dispensing cereal malt beverages on their premises between midnight and 1 a.m.

Previously the law stated that patrons in such establishments must be off the premises at midnight.

Robert Pottroff, Manhattan city prosecutor, said this was done to prevent the release of large groups of students in Aggieville at the same time.

"The new law should provide for students leaving in an orderly fashion, rather than leaving all at once at midnight," Pottroff said. "This also makes it easier for enforcement for the police."

Consumers of 3.2 beer are also restricted by the amendment. Patrons may neither consume, nor have in their possession, any cereal malt beverage while in that place of business between 1 a.m. and 6 a.m.

Another restriction is that customers may not linger in businesses where 3.2 beer is served. Patrons in such an establishment must, to comply with the city's amendment, leave the premises before 1 a.m. and may not enter again until 6 a.m. Only the licensee of the establishment or employees may be on the premises during those hours.

The amendment also limits (to 12 ounces) the amount of cereal malt beverage consumers may have in their possession after midnight. In addition, the amendment states that the 12 ounces must be contained in "paper cups, plastic cups or other unbreakable, light-weight, disposable containers."

"This prevents someone from loading up their table before midnight, then going out and hopping in their car," Pottroff said.

Previously patrons could purchase amounts of 3.2 beer in excess of 12 ounces.

The amendment does not apply to legally licensed private clubs where cereal malt beverages are served.

More frequent and heavier checks on these establishments will be conducted in the future, Edvy said, and owners need to be more aware of who's coming and going in their tavern.

The problem in enforcement will come more from private parties in residential areas than from public drinking establishments, Edvy said. The host of such parties will be held responsible for the conduct of guests and their consumption of 3.2 beer.

Police enforcement procedures will change little, Edvy said.

Man gets new heart at AU medical clinic

By The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — University Medical Center surgeons Thursday began an operation to implant a Jarvik-7 artificial heart in a 25-year-old Phoenix man, a University of Arizona spokeswoman said.

The hospital received U.S. Food and Drug Administration authorization on Aug. 21 to use the device.

Spokeswoman Nina Trasoff identified the patient as Michael Drummond, but said no information was immediately available on his medical history.

"Obviously he's got heart disease, but I can't give you any more," she said.

The surgical team was led by Dr. Jack Copeland, head of UMC's transplant team, Trasoff said.

Copeland had said when the FDA authorization was announced that he planned to use the Jarvik-7 as a "bridge" to sustain patients until human donors were found.

The first permanent recipient of an artificial heart was Barney Clark, who received a Jarvik-7 heart at the University of Utah on Dec. 2, 1982 and lived 112 days.

The second was William Schroeder, who received the Jarvik-7 heart on Nov. 25 at Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville and has become the world's longest-living recipient.

sity of Cape Town students were among those demanding the release of Mandela, who has been in prison since 1964 after being convicted of plotting sabotage.

Charles Redman, the deputy State Department spokesman, said in Washington that Wednesday's events "indicated how quickly confrontation between police and demonstrators can lead to brutality and bloodshed. We appeal to all sides to avoid such confrontations. We also reiterate our call to the South African government to ensure that its police force respects the rights of all South Africans."

Police invaded a black high school in Soweto where they suspected an illegal meeting was being held by the black Congress of South African Students, and arrested eight students, witnesses said.

UPC presents fall recreation, entertainment

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Union Program Council's fall activities combine some past favorites with a few new events.

UPC's eight committees offer students a chance to try a new sport, enjoy live entertainment and see movies that they might not usually see. These old favorites, as well as the new ones, are planned by student volunteers and program advisers.

Issues and Ideas Committee will still feature its "Let's Talk About It" series and major lecture program. In addition it will offer the Evening Lecture Program.

"The Evening Lecture Program is similar to 'Let's Talk About It,' because we rely on local experts," said Sylvia Scott, program director for UPC. "But the evening lectures are more spontaneous and major."

"We hope to bring in experts from the surrounding area like Wolf Creek and Menninger's," Susan Bender, program adviser, said.

Katherine Brady, lecturer and author of "Father's Day," will speak at 8 p.m. Oct. 22 in the Union Forum Hall. Brady's topic will be incest.

Eclectic Entertainment has replaced Coffeehouse. However, Nooners — a program of students entertaining students — will still be held at noon Tuesdays.

"Nooners are valuable to the audience and performers," Bender said. "We encourage the students to get out and do something real."

Equipment, lighting and sound are provided, Bender said.

Comedian Tim Cavanagh will perform at 8 p.m. Sept. 20 in the Union Catskeller. Admission charge is $2.

"He's different than a lot of comedians," Bender said. "He appeals to a college crowd because he's so incredibly up-beat."

A Caribbean dinner showcase starring reggae artist John Bayley is planned for 6:30 p.m. Oct. 24 in the Union Ballroom. Tickets will be sold in advance.

"Two years ago we had people dancing in the Catskeller to him, so this year we put the show in the Ballroom," Bender said.

Smith and Mayer, more traditional folk musicians, are scheduled to perform at 8 p.m. Nov. 15 in the Catskeller. Cost is $2.

"If anyone has never experienced folk or high-energy mountain music, they ought to try it," Bender said. "To hear this kind of talent perform is nothing like anything you can hear recorded."

The Arts Committee highlights a variety of people — from a painter to a pianist to a potter.

A combination drawing and painting exhibition is currently at the Union Gallery. The exhibition features the works of John Thein, professor at Creighton University, Omaha, Neb.

The Arts Committee also sponsors Midday Arts programs, which include art demonstrations or performing arts performances.

"Midday accomplishes a couple of purposes," Marilyn Woodward, program adviser, said. "Hopefully people come in the gallery, become familiar with it and come back. It's an alternative."

Pianist Don Livingston is scheduled to perform from noon to 1 p.m. Sept. 12 in the gallery.

Later, on September 26, Angelo Garzio, professor of art, will give a pottery throwing demonstration in the Union Courtyard.

Over the years the Arts Committee has collected a few hundred prints they rent to students, faculty or staff for a few dollars a semester. Interested persons can rent up to three pieces, Woodward said.

Prints and some laser-craft prints will be offered for sale Oct. 7 to 11 in the Union.

Hand-crafted arts and crafts can be purchased December 5 and 6 in the Union Ballroom at the annual arts and crafts sale. Items range from 50 cents to $40. Examples of items for sale are Christmas ornaments, hand-made jewelry, hand-painted china, stained glass, wheat-weavings, and hand-crocheted sweaters, hats and gloves.

"There are about 42 vendors from the area and the Midwest," Woodward said. "We get a nice variety."

Recent renovation — a new sound system and projectors — has "incredibly improved" the Little Theater, Woodward said. The film committees are putting the improvements to use.

The Kalidescope Film Committee is bringing in the "scratch 'n' sniff" movie "Polyester," Woodward said. "You get the smell of what's going on in the movie. I think it sounds like a lot of fun."

During September, the Kaleidoscope and Arts committees will co-sponsor a night of experimental films, showing such works as "Boiled Egg" and "Ghosts Before Breakfast."

The Kaleidoscope and Feature Films committees alternate presenting midnight movies and matinees. Recently another feature was added. Starting Sept. 7, a "Flash Gordon" series will be shown every Saturday and Sunday before the matinees.

The Special Events Committee will sponsor its annual Activities Carnival from 5 to 8 p.m. Sept. 8 in the Union.

Something new that Special Events is trying is an All-Campus Dance from 9 p.m. to midnight Sept. 13 in the Union Catskeller. It will be a disc jockey format, said Janice Kiser, program adviser.

On Oct. 20 a special Beatles-tribute act — "1964 — Live on Stage" — is scheduled at 6:30 p.m. in Forum Hall. Tickets will be sold in advance.

"Two of the members are formerly of Beatlemania, and they look, act and sound like the Beatles did during that period," Kiser said.

The Travel Committee has skiing trips to Colorado and sunning trips to Florida on tap for the spring semester, Kiser said.

A shopping trip to the Plaza and Crown Center in Kansas City, Mo., has also been scheduled for Dec. 7.

Another committee, Outdoor Recreation, is sponoring various rappelling, biking, caving and backpacking trips throughout the fall semester.

A Sept. 15 mini-rappelling trip with a course instructor will prepare participants for a major rappelling trip Oct. 26 and 27 to Columbia, Mo. This is one of the most popular trips, Kiser said.

A backpacking trip is scheduled for Sept. 28 and 29 at Indian Cave State Park in eastern Nebraska.

"There's 20 miles of wilderness trails for hiking," Kiser said.

Two trips are planned for October and November. The October trip will be biking through the Flint Hills the weekend of Oct. 12. The November trip, the last one of the semester, will be a caving trip to Missouri Nov. 9 and 10.

"They explore caves that haven't been explored before," Kiser said, "or at least ones that don't have lights hung up.

"They have a great time."

'Crystal Season' commences with realm of performances

By LISA BOOTHE
Staff Writer

A is for acrobatics, B is for ballet, C is for comedy, D is for drama, and Z is for a zowie of a show.

McCain Auditorium is celebrating its 15th — or crystal — anniversary and is promoting a lineup of 15 programs under the title, "The Crystal Season."

"There's something for everyone," said Richard Diehl, director of McCain. "It's a well-rounded season for variety."

Diehl came to K-State last year from the University of Cincinnati. He said he is impressed the Midwest can boast of a facility the caliber of McCain.

"This is one of the finest facilities in this area. The quality of the professional entertainment is remarkable," Diehl said. "More people, particularly students, should be aware of the opportunities here. Don't be afraid of us."

The seating capacity of McCain is 1,815, and it has a showpiece movable ceiling, designed to convert the theater into a smaller auditorium when necessary. Since a new sound system was installed in April, the acoustics are nearly perfect, and can be tuned to accommodate the three possible configurations of the auditorium, Diehl said.

The first performance in McCain will be Sept. 26, with Cleo Laine, world-renowned jazz singer and actress. Laine is the only singer ever to be nominated in the popular female, classical and jazz categories for the American Grammy awards. She is best known for her starring role in Jerome Kern's "Showboat."

On Oct. 25, The Missouri Repertory Theatre will perform the musical, "Side by Side by Sondheim," which includes melodies by Stephen Sondheim. Sondheim wrote the musical scores for "West Side Story" and "Gypsy," and has won more Tony awards for Best Musical than anyone in the history of theater.

Comedian Robert Klein, who often appears on "Saturday Night Live" and "The Johnny Carson Show," will perform Nov. 1. Klein is also an accomplished pianist and is expected to include a musical performance during his appearance.

The New York City Opera's "Faust" will open on Nov. 7. It is based on the novel by Goethe describing a philosopher's metaphysical experience with death.

On Nov. 15, Trio Cassatt will perform chamber music, and the 100-piece Hungarian State Symphony will open on Nov. 24.

Perhaps the highlight of the season will be on Dec. 12 and 13 when sugar plum fairies help to dance away the old semester in the Tulsa Ballet's "The Nutcracker."

The rest of the Crystal Season will be completed in the spring semester with a performance of Charles Dickens' classic, "Great Expectations," music by jazz duo Mitchell-Ruff and the Los Angeles Piano Quartet, and The Peking Acrobats from China.

Mid-March brings the Broadway musical, "Brigadoon," with the remaining three performances featuring The Dresden Chamber Orchestra, Buddy Rich and the Houston Ballet performance of "Giselle."

Past performers at McCain include such stars as Henry Fonda, Marcel Marceau, Pat Carroll, Hal Holbrook, Victor Borge and Vincent Price, as well as many of the major theater, dance, opera and orchestra companies.

Students wishing to see the productions may be interested in becoming an usher. These volunteers, numbering between 35 and 45, receive a free ticket for every two shows they work.

Other discounts on tickets include a special student rate where students may choose any five programs they wish to see and receive an additional 15 percent off the already reduced student ticket price. This offer expires Sept. 20.

Colorist exhibits paintings

Artist works from memory

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Works of painter and sketch artist Marilyn Thompson are on display today in the lobby of McCain Auditorium. Thompson's works include watercolor and acrylic paintings and brush and ink sketches.

Cool colors of nature — greens and blues — cover her acrylic and watercolor paintings. Splashes of yellows and reds emphasize her interest in vibrant color.

"The two elements of art that intrigue me most are color and line," Thompson said. "I work a lot with complementary colors.

Color is treated as the most expressive and prominent element in her art, she said.

"Color gives you a different statement," Thompson said. "It creates a different mood.

"Van Gogh was a colorful and powerful painter," she said. "I get into fairly bright colors and push color.

"I don't even have a tube of brown. I work with complementary colors and together they make brown.

"It's all up in the head," Thompson said. "A lot of my work comes from observation."

In addition to her watercolor and acrylic paintings of gardens, lilies and streams, four brush-and-ink landscape sketches are displayed. These sketches illustrate Thompson's use of "loose lines."

Thompson said that studying the works of artist Josef Albers has influenced her understanding of line. She considers herself a colorist and therefore identifies with him.

"Some of my sketches I simply make up from my imagination," Thompson said. "I draw a quick gesture line and use it as far as I can push the drawing. It's a preliminary tool.

"Other times I look at the landscape, see certain lines, draw a quick thumbnail sketch and draw detail later," Thompson said.

Thompson received her master's degree in painting from Emporia State University in 1982 and is currently enrolled in independent studies at the University. Hours for viewing the exhibition are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Cheap Trick joins electronic music with pop-music's traditional guitar

By BEN PEASE
Collegian Reviewer

With the increased popularity of computer music (disco lives!), it's always refreshing to hear that pop-beat being played on something other than just synthesizers. That's not to say that the pop music scene has abandoned the guitar for the digital music generator.

Music Review

I'm always glad to listen to popular music with some good ol' distorted guitar in it. That is what Cheap Trick is all about. And that is what the listener gets on their new album, "Standing On the Edge."

Robin Zander and the boys give listeners an album with multiple personalities.

For those who were Cheap Trick fans in the late '70s, the band maintains its Beatles-like sound of that period, with songs such as "Love Comes" and "This Time Around." In fact, the latter — with the exception of the break section — reminds one so much of the Fab Four that Paul McCartney would be envious of its sappy teen-age innocence.

As reminiscent as some of the tunes are, the first three songs on side one prove that Cheap Trick is not completely frozen in the past. "Little Sister," "She's Got Motion" and their recently released single "Tonight It's You," (the video can be seen on MTV), are produced with the '80s sound.

Much like the songs on their last two albums, in the tunes "One On One" and "Next Position Please," the band enlists the use of synthesizers along with some extra studio tricks to achieve a lighter, cleaner sound. The sound is both appealing and in character.

"Standing On the Edge" also gives listeners another look at the band. Classified as Heavy Metal by some, because of the no-effects sound guitarist reputation in which Rick Nielson prides himself, Cheap Trick rarely produces tunes that could be considered along the same lines as The Scorpions or Kiss. However, "Rock All Night" boasts a hard-driving beat with overly simplistic lyrics — a song more suited for the witless exploits of Twisted Sister.

No matter how simple and non-thought-provoking "Standing On the Edge" is, its music is generally satisfying. It is well produced and those who purchase it can look forward to an afternoon of simplistic songs about adolescent love and strife.

The Cheap Trick fan, along with those looking for a viable alternative to the techno-pop invasion, can't go wrong with this album.

Bill Cosby pledges support to anti-apartheid protestor

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Actor Bill Cosby, moved by television reports over the arrest of anti-apartheid leader Rev. Allan Boesak, called the clergyman's family in South Africa to offer his support and love.

Cosby, star of NBC-TV's "The Cosby Show," said Wednesday's call was to let Dorothy Boesak "know we would really pray for him and her and the children and the people in South Africa," according to Joanne Alfano, a network spokeswoman.

She said Cosby told her that Dorothy Boesak said "the last laugh" her husband enjoyed before his arrest Tuesday was watching Cosby's program on South African television.

Cosby also spoke with the mixed-race clergyman's son, 7-year-old Allan Jr., a conversation the actor said "stopped me in my tracks."

"I was in the middle of my clowning, doing a typical Cosby Jell-O pudding kind of thing. And he said flat out to me in that small 7-year-old voice, 'Mr. Cosby, I love you, and I love your show. You make me feel very good,'" she quoted Cosby as saying. "And that stopped me in my tracks."

Boesak, who had planned to lead Wednesday's march on a South African prison where black leader Nelson Mandela is imprisoned, was arrested Tuesday night.

Home sales up in July; West spurs on increase with 10.7 percent rise

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Housing sales rose 1.4 percent in July, hitting their highest level in almost two years, the government said Thursday.

New single-family homes were sold in July at an annual rate of 704,000 units, the highest annual sales pace since December 1983, according to a report by the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

In addition, the government revised upward its sales figures from April through June to show more strength than originally reported. The June sales, which last month were reported to have dropped 0.1 percent, actually rose a strong 2.2 percent, following an even better 4.6 percent May increase.

Economists had been puzzled last month when the government reported new home sales had dropped in June even though mortgage rates had continued falling to their lowest levels in five years.

Commerce Department analyst Matthew Grinberg said the upward revisions stemmed from stronger sales data included in later sampling reports.

Private economists noted that the increase in new home sales paralleled figures released earlier this week showing that sales of existing homes rose 1.6 percent in July to an annual rate of 3.11 million units, the highest pace for existing home sales in almost five years.

Credit for the gains was given to falling interest rates, which have dropped to around 12.25 percent for fixed-rate mortgages, about three percentage points lower than they were a year ago.

The Reagan administration, counting on strong housing activity, is calling for the economy to rebound to annual growth of 4.9 percent in the second half of the year, up sharply from the sluggish 1.1 percent rate in the first six months.

Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association, predicted that mortgage rates may drop slightly in coming months because of the sluggish economy.

James Christian, chief economist for the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, said falling mortgage rates, moderation in home prices and personal income gains had combined to produce the most affordable housing market conditions since 1979.

The average price of a new home climbed sharply in July to $101,900, up $3,300 from the June level. However, the median price of a new home fell by $3,500 to $82,100.

Analysts said the median price, which is the point where half the homes sell for more and half for less, provides a better picture of what housing prices are doing. They said the decline in the median price probably reflected a larger number of sales of smaller homes to first-time buyers.

The July gain in sales came from a strong 10.7 percent increase in the West and a 3.8 percent gain in the Midwest.

Wellness Week centers around health

By MARY BEGGS
Staff Writer

Beauty may only be skin deep, but good health goes straight to the bone.

From Sept. 9-14, Lafene Student Health Center and the University will be sponsoring Wellness Week, a program designed to help students and the community take a look at how various lifestyles affect health and fitness, said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene.

"College students are at the prime age to make health changes. These changes can lead to a healthier life," Burke said.

Wellness Week is geared toward informing and encouraging students to use the health and fitness resources available on campus.

Burke has been planning Wellness Week since February. Although Lafene usually sponsors a health fair in the spring, this is the first time the health fair idea has been expanded into an entire week of activities.

Wellness Week activities will include presentations by University faculty and staff members. Topics to be discussed include self-hypnosis, dieting, stress management, premenstrual syndrome and other health issues.

To increase student involvement, faculty members have been encouraged to let students attend Wellness Week when the events are scheduled during class time.

Wellness Week activities will take place in the Union Courtyard and in Union 212. Some of the discussions, such as rape prevention and stress management, will be held in the residence hall living areas during the evening hours.

During Wellness Week, the healthiest male and female bodies on the campus will be selected. Bodies will be judged on overall fitness including weight and muscle tone. Any student is eligible to enter the Healthiest Body Contest.

The Healthiest Body competition will be a way to increase student interest and participation in Wellness Week, Burke said. As of the entry deadline Tuesday, 20 women and 25 men were entered in the contest.

"We will be judging bodies, not faces, in this contest," Burke said. "Photos will be taken of the contestants by Tom Hawk (of University Photography)."

During the judging, judges will look at photos of the contestants in swimming suits. Faces of the contestants will be blacked out to ensure participants are judged on body and not on looks, Burke said.

All activities are free and open to all K-State students and Manhattan residents.

hibited from discussing the work of the grand jury by a gag order issued last year by U.S. District Judge John V. Parker.

The grand jury has heard testimony concerning Nixon's financial dealings with Hattiesburg construction executive Wiley Fairchild and several cases, including a 1980 drug case involving Fairchild's son.

Five people previously had been indicted by the grand jury. Wiley Fairchild was charged on Sept. 6, 1984, with perjury and giving Nixon an illegal gratuity.

Scientists make strides against deadly disease

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Researchers reported Thursday that they have taken a major stride toward identifying the genetic defect that causes the most common form of muscular dystrophy, a deadly, incurable disease.

The work may help lead to development of a treatment for muscular dystrophy, the researchers said.

It will also provide a better test for finding carriers of the defect that causes Duchenne muscular dystrophy and for performing prenatal diagnosis, other experts said.

Some 50,000 to 100,000 boys and young men in the United States are afflicted with the disease, which causes progressive destruction of the skeletal muscles. It usually kills by the time the victim reaches his late 20s.

The disease is caused by a defect on the X chromosome, which carries genes, the basic units of heredity that give bodily cells their marching orders. The disease can arise if a key gene is defective or missing.

The new research, reported in the British journal Nature by a team at Children's Hospital in Boston, greatly advances the search for the defective gene by narrowing the area on the X chromosome to look for it. The gene may be found within a year, he said Thursday.

McEnroe, Becker win in U.S. Open

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Defending champion John McEnroe and Wimbledon sensation Boris Becker of West Germany on Thursday continued their march toward an expected quarterfinal showdown as they captured their second-round matches in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

McEnroe, who barely survived the first round, eliminated Martin Wostenholme of Canada 6-0, 7-6, 6-1, while the 17-year-old Becker crushed Huub van Boeckel of the Netherlands 6-3, 6-0, 6-2.

Advancing into the third round of the women's singles on the hardcourts at the National Tennis Center were third-seeded Hana Mandlikova and No. 7 Helena Sukova, both of Czechoslovakia, and No. 14 Bonnie Gadusek.

Among others joining Becker and McEnroe in the third round were No. 6 Anders Jarryd and No. 10 Joakim Nystrom, both of Sweden.

McEnroe said he was impressed with Becker, who in July became the youngest, the first German and the first non-seeded player to capture the Wimbledon men's singles title.

"What impresses me is that he doesn't look or act 17, and he hits the ball so hard," McEnroe said of the blond right-hander. "I saw him play a little bit against (Sweden's Mats) Wilander. I think he's copied from a good person. He's learning from the right guy."

McEnroe breezed past Wostenholme, a 22-year-old from Oakville, Ontario, in the opening set. But he had done the same against Israel's Shlomo Glickstein, who then forced the No. 1 seed to a fifth-set tiebreaker.

And, like Glickstein, Wostenholme came back in the second set.

McEnroe won the second-set tiebreaker 7-3.

Becker continued to display the form that has given him three Nabisco Grand Prix titles this year, including the ATP Championships last week when he stopped Wilander in the final.

Against van Boeckel, the West German slammed eight aces and in one stretch won nine straight games.

His ground game was almost flawless as he made only 13 unforced errors, compared to 24 by van Boeckel.

Royals to pass up Angels in September race for pennant

TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

Three of the four divisional races in Major League Baseball are going down to the wire entering the month of September with seven teams in the race for division titles.

Unlike some years in the past, when the playoff participants have been all but determined by Sept. 1, this year holds three hotly contested division title races.

Both races in the American League could go down to the wire. The Toronto Blue Jays are trying to hold off a challenge from the surging New York Yankees in the East, while in the West the Kansas City Royals have been at the heels of the California Angels for the past month.

If you talk about teams that have been on a roller coaster ride all season, Kansas City comes to mind right away. After falling as much as 7½ games out of the West lead, the Royals have come within 1½ games in recent days. Kansas City has stayed alive with pitching and it should carry the Royals to a second-consecutive West title.

How California has stayed atop the West for so long is a mystery. The Angels and other Gene Mauch-managed teams have been known for their September skids. With seven games remaining against the Royals, this year should be no exception.

Granted, the Angels have good pitching, but they don't have a true ace pitcher like the Royals' Bret Saberhagen and Charlie Leibrandt.

As for hitting, California is second to last in the AL team standings. Brian Downing and Reggie Jackson both have had good years, but none of the other Angels have produced much offense. Many of the Angels are getting up in years, too.

Kansas City, on the other hand, is young and ready to take control. The pitching staff is the youngest in the league and possibly the best. Saberhagen, at 16-5, is a legitimate Cy Young candidate, given to the top pitcher in the American League. The rest of the five-man starting rotation, with the exception of Bud Black, has been strong. Dan Quisenberry, as usual, leads the league in saves.

After an extensive off-season conditioning program, George Brett has had the great season that many predicted and has a shot of winning his third batting crown. Brett has been hitting over .350 for several weeks now and his home run and RBI statistics are strong. If Willie Wilson and Lonnie Smith could really take off, Brett and the Royals could benefit even more.

Toronto has been very good all season with strong hitting and pitching. The average person may not have heard of too many players on the Blue Jays' roster — with the exception of pitcher Dave Stieb — but this team is definitely for real.

George Bell, with 27 homers and 87 RBIs leads a no-name outfield that may be the best in baseball. While Toronto has been most widely noted for its consistent hitting, the pitching staff has quietly risen to the top of the league.

Stieb, with a 2.34 ERA, heads a pitching staff that also includes the underpublicized likes of Jimmy Key, reliever Gary Lavelle and undefeated Dennis Lamp.

People may not have heard of many Toronto players now, but come playoff time, they will.

The Yankees are a top-notch team as well. Don Mattingly is having a great year. So are Rickey Henderson and Dave Winfield. Ron Guidry is a strong candidate for the Cy Young Award.

New York has lacked consistency, though. The Yankees have been either way up or way down all year. After almost catching Toronto last week, the Yankees hit a skid that put them five games back of the Blue Jays, who just seem to keep up their consistent play.

The St. Louis Cardinals have surprised nearly everyone by taking a three-game lead in the National League East. At the close of spring training in March, one publication predicted Cardinal Manager Whitey Herzog would be fired by midseason.

Herzog not only has kept his job but may even get Manager of the Year. After losing reliever Bruce Sutter to free agency and the Atlanta Braves, Herzog commented that he was "45 games dummer" than last season, referring to Sutter's 45 saves in 1984. As things have turned out, Herzog may turn out looking even smarter than he did in 1982 when St. Louis won the World Series.

Willie McGee, Tommy Herr and Jack Clark are having career-best seasons in hitting, which has helped give the Cardinals the highest team batting average in the NL at .263. Pitching has been great, too, with Joaquin Andujar already a 20-game winner and John Tudor doing his share after a disasterous start with 15 wins.

Before the Cardinals start talking World Series again, though, they have the task of holding off the New York Mets. The Mets have been on St. Louis' tail all summer and even edged ahead of the Cardinals at one point in early August.

New York has established stars like Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez, both of whom are having good seasons, but the Mets' hitting has been inconsistent. Pitcher Dwight Gooden has had an incredible season,

Chiefs sign McKinney; release veteran Rourke

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs on Thursday claimed eight-year National Football League defensive back Odis McKinney on waivers from the Los Angeles Raiders.

McKinney, who was the nickel back for the Raiders, was expected to join Kansas City on Thursday and be available to play Saturday in the last preseason game with the St. Louis Cardinals.

McKinney, a second-round draft choice of the New York Giants in 1978, had played in 73 consecutive regular-season games and 10 postseason games for the Raiders. He has 10 career interceptions, including one last season.

Rourke, who had played every offensive line position for Kansas City in his career, was signed as a free agent out of Boston College in 1980.

Tryouts set for golf, soccer

Tryouts for K-State's golf teams and the K-State Soccer Club will be held in the next couple of weeks.

The soccer club will hold a tryout from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday in Memorial Stadium. In case of rain, the location will be moved to Griffith Field, south of 11th and Yuma.

The club is open to undergraduates, graduates, faculty and staff. For more information, call Clay Ross at 539-8284.

The men's golf team will have tryouts Sept. 10-12 at the Manhattan Country Club, Coach Ray Wauthier said. Those interested may play practice rounds at MCC Tuesday through Friday next week after 2 p.m.

Wauthier said there will be no spring tryouts, so the fall tryouts are the only opportunity to make the squad. For more information, call Wauthier at 532-6765.

Tryouts for the women's golf team have been scheduled for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next week at MCC. Coach Robert Sedorcek, who was on the men's squad the last four years, said practice rounds will be at MCC after 2 p.m. through Tuesday. More information can be obtained by calling Sedorcek at 532-6960.

leading the NL in both wins and earned run average. The rest of the Mets' starting rotation has performed admirably as well. However, New York doesn't have a true stopper in the bullpen.

Give St. Louis the edge in a race that will go down to the wire.

Los Angeles' standout pitching staff has led the Dodgers to a 7½-game lead in the NL West over defending league champion San Diego Padres.

San Diego went into an early summer slump and never was quite able to recover. Meanwhile, Los Angeles pitchers were devastating NL competition, compiling an incredible team ERA of 2.91. Fernando Valenzuela and Orel Hershiser have led the way with 15 wins and 13 wins, respectively.

Hitting hasn't been a problem for the Dodgers either. Los Angeles' team average is currently third in the league. Pedro Guerrero is a solid candidate for the league's Most Valuable Player honor with a .321 batting average to go along with 30 home runs and 77 RBIs.

Royals game rained out

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — After a 1-hour, 44-minute rain delay, Thursday's American League baseball game between the Kansas City Royals and Milwaukee Brewers was postponed. The game was called with two outs in the bottom of the fourth with Kansas City ahead 3-2.

There was no announcement of a makeup date.

Shockers sign Yugoslavian

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Sasha Radunovich, a 6-foot-9, 225-pound freshman from Pitograd, Yugoslavia, has joined the Wichita State basketball team, Shockers Coach Gene Smithson said Thursday.

Smithson said Radunovich, the 15th player on this year's team and the third Yugoslav to play for the Shockers, could make an immediate contribution to the team.

Radunovich will have three years of eligibility, Smithson said.

Housing

Manhattan Neighborhood Association and the Concerned East-Side Neighborhood Association, have been formed to provide a "watchdog" service over neighborhood development.

Stormy Kennedy, 1029 Bertrand St., one of the CESNA founders, said their complaint wasn't with students specifically, but that the introduction of high-density housing units in the neighborhood "changes your entire lifestyle."

"You no longer have a nice, quiet residential area...the close-knit feeling of a neighborhood as before," Kennedy said.

Kennedy said she believes the biggest problems are with noise, trash and lack of adequate parking.

Forty to 48 people in a 12-plex can become "more of a big, happy dormitory. We want the kids to come and have a good time, but at 3 a.m., it's just too much," she said.

Although Kennedy's neighborhood established the first permit-parking system in Manhattan for public streets, which has since spread to other neighborhoods near Manhattan High School, problems still exist.

Current zoning requires two off-street parking spaces per housing unit. "When you have four people living in a unit, two vehicles end up on a street," reducing spaces for residents in single-family structures, Kennedy said.

"We're not against the students...we try to make an effort to say 'hello,' and sometimes become good friends," Kennedy said. "But (sometimes) they don't realize that they are neighbors, not in just their building, but in that residential area.

"They don't realize that they aren't being good neighbors — we just want them to be responsible," she said.

Before the house at 524 N. 14th St. is moved, concrete worker Steve Heitsman, Salina, puts the finishing touches on the concrete floor of the apartment complex that will replace the house.

CESNA and OMNA efforts have received the attention of the Manhattan City Commission, which this summer passed an ordinance establishing a new zoning district, M-3 — a medium-density zone.

This zone was established to provide a buffer between single-family and high-density housing districts by allowing construction of four-plex dwellings on lots with a minimum 60-foot width.

Although enactment did not alter any current zonings, representatives of the Manhattan Board of Realtors and individual real estate businesspersons opposed the ordinance's passing during meetings of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board and during the ordinance's first reading before the city commission's May 21 meeting.

Their opposition was based on the fact Manhattan uses a 50-foot-lot width for zoning, and a developer would have to purchase two lots to comply with the medium-density ordinance.

Sources have quoted prices for lots east of campus at $12,000 to $20,000.

Assistant City Planner Eric Cattell said another zoning change enacted last summer was designed to lessen the impact on low-density neighborhoods.

One of the changes is the requirement that new units, with three or more living units, have at least 75 percent of the front yard landscaped, and no vehicles may be parked in front of the building or the property line area. Cattell said new construction affected by the changes require parking behind the building, in an effort to retain a residential character to the neighborhood.

Interest

how much money you get."

Morse has been working on the idea of simplifying interest calculation since 1968. He began with the idea that banks should disclose all information to the public.

In 1979, Morse developed a test to find out if the consumer could better understand the new system or the old. More than 2,000 people in 20 states were given the quiz, and most understood the basis of the "cents-ible interest" plan, he said.

He has met opposition from many organizations on his plan, including the Kansas League of Savings Institutions, the Kansas Bankers Association, the Kansas Credit Union League and the Kansas Association of Broadcasters.

"They (the banks) take the usual dodge that it will be too confusing for the consumer," Morse said. "You wonder what the fight is about."

The idea is revolutionary, but works, Morse said.

New York and Massachusetts have adopted modified plans called truth-in-savings. The New York State Banking Department adopted its truth-in-savings law in 1980, which requires banks to disclose all of the facts the consumer needs to compare savings, Morse said.

With the standard system, Morse found the consumer would have to compare interest rates compounded at different times, from daily to quarterly to annually. Morse said he decided these different numbers overwhelm the consumer. He revised his plan, creating the "cents-ible interest" system.

Massachusetts enacted its truth-in-savings law in January 1985. The law does not mandate the "cents-ible interest" plan, but it does provide some sample solutions for institutions to consider.

Morse keeps in contact with both New York and Massachusetts. Reports from both areas have been favorable, he said.

Morse said he hopes the plan will rise to the federal level, so that interest rates will be standardized nationally.

NATO begins exercise; Soviets follow closely

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Nearly 200 battleships, submarines and aircraft carriers from 10 countries joined forces Thursday off Boston Harbor, pretending the world was at the brink of war and rushing supplies to Allied forces across the Atlantic in NATO's largest-ever peacetime exercise.

As part of the exercise known as "Ocean Safari 85," the convoy will speed to Iceland and then Europe, harassed and "attacked" by 41 ships, submarines and aircraft along the way.

Although the exercise is for practice, the Balzan, one of the Soviet Union's largest and most sophisticated spy ships, has been shadowing the group, officials said.

The 300-man, 4,000-ton armed surveillance ship, began trailing the first ships of the convoy as they left Norfolk, Va., earlier this week, and continued to follow them Thursday, said Navy Lt. Cmdr. C.R. Quigley, an Atlantic fleet spokesman.

"This is the largest and most ambitious excercise we've done to date," said U.S. Coast Guard Lt. Russ Greer. "We try to make these as realistic as possible. It helps us evaluate our plans.

"The primary purpose is to supply Europe in the time of war," said Greer. "That is the key mission. We have to know how to do that."

Ships, planes and submarines from Belgium, Canada, Denmark, West Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Great Britain and the United States are taking part in the excercise. France will also participate in a limited role, Greer said.

"Ocean Safari 85" began Thursday as five North Atlantic Treaty Organization warships — frigates of Britain, Canada, Holland, West Germany and the United States — raced from Boston Harbor to guide a small convoy of chartered cargo ships to the rendesvous 100 miles offshore with the larger fleet.

For the past week, Navy and Coast Guard ships and units have been clearing the Boston shipping channel of "mines" and quietly fighting each other at night as "terrorists" try to infiltrate military installations around the harbor. Those exercises involved 1,000 people, 25 ships and five aircraft.

Reagan visits Missouri; calls for tax reform

By A. SCHARNHORST
Managing Editor

During his first major public appearance since undergoing cancer surgery in July, Ronald Reagan Monday initiated a campaign to boost his tax-reform policy which he said would cut from five to 18 percent off the taxes of a family of four.

In a 15-minute Labor Day speech delivered as part of the Santa-Cali-Gon Days celebration in Independence, Mo., Reagan heralded the American worker and called for "a long-overdue change in our tax laws."

The president called the current tax structure "anti-family," "anti-growth" and "unfair," citing a Treasury Department study which found that 900 persons with an income of more than $1 million a year paid no taxes in 1983.

"Treasury added it all up," Reagan said. "They found that 17,000 taxpayers whose income was anywhere from a quarter of a million dollars a year to millions of dollars a year paid taxes of less than $6,272 a piece.

"Now, it so happens $6,272 is just about the tax paid by a family of four with two workers and an income of $45,000 a year," he said.

Under the proposal, the first $29,000 of income would be taxed 15 percent, income between $29,000 and $70,000 would be taxed 20 percent and income beyond $70,000 would be taxed 35 percent, barring exemptions.

"The highest percentage of tax cut goes to those who earn $20,000 a year or less," Reagan said. "They get a cut of 18 percent. The next biggest cut goes to those who earn $20,000 to $50,000. They get a tax cut of 7 percent. The lowest tax cut goes to those who make $50,000 or more — they get a cut of just less than 6 percent," he said.

The reform plan will aid families through additional deductions for dependents, Reagan said.

"Under our plan the middle-class earners will be helped by an increase in the personal exemption from the present $1,040 a year to a more reasonable $2,000," he said.

"Take a family of four, (and) that means $8,000 is untaxed because of exemptions and another $4,000 is untaxed because of the standard deduction....So in all, that family of four will find the the first $12,000 of earnings won't be taxed one penny," Reagan said amid cheers from some onlookers.

The president made no reference to the national deficit, or in what way his tax plan would affect the deficit.

Reagan blamed the lack of previous tax reform on several factors: skepticism, opposition on behalf of special-interest groups and complacency.

"It's hard for us to get worked up about

Bond finances allow release of $700,000

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Government Editor

An extra $700,000 has been appropriated for students' use this semester due to a new Internal Revenue Service regulation and state legislation, said Mark Jones, senior in management and Student Senate chairman.

IRS regulations allow the University, after approval from the Kansas Board of Regents, to refinance approximately $4.5 million in outstanding student-financed bonds from Union Annex I and II, KSU Stadium and Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

The procedure allows the University to purchase government securities with the $4.5 million and retire the outstanding fee-supported bonds. Government securities will be placed in an escrow account and the bond payments will be made through proceeds of the maturing securities.

The major intent of the refinancing is to reduce the amount of money students contribute to the temporarily delayed, 16,000-seat Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

The administration has cancelled the Sept. 7 ground-breaking ceremony for the coliseum because construction bids for the project opened Aug. 20 ranged from $3.4 million to $8.2 million above the estimated base construction cost of $14.5 million. The administration had pegged the total cost of the coliseum at $16.1 million, however, several contractors have suggested the total cost may exceed $20 million.

Administration officials originally planned to have students contribute

500,000 Southerners flee hurricane

By The Associated Press

BILOXI, Miss. — Hurricane Elena finally howled ashore along the Mississippi coast Monday with wind up to 100 mph, ripping off roofs, uprooting trees, flooding highways and knocking out power to 100,000 people.

Despite the damage, no serious injuries were reported as the season's fourth hurricane made landfall after zigzagging around the Gulf of Mexico for four days. Earlier, the storm contributed to three deaths in Florida, including one heart attack.

More than half a million people had evacuated in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana after Elena reversed course off the coast of Florida on Sunday and headed northwest with winds of 125 mph. The storm's highest sustained winds began dropping after it hit land and by midday were down to about 75 mph.

By early afternoon all hurricane warnings were discontinued along the coast.

In the Pascagoula area, Jackson County officials said there was extensive damage to vehicles when the sudden drop in air pressure blew windows out, and cars parked at the courthouse were crushed by falling trees.

Parts of U.S. 90 along the coast were blocked by water that surged over seawalls.

Gov. Bill Allain asked President Reagan to declare the coastal counties a disaster area. He said authorities would begin damage assessments immediately, but Public Safety Commissioner James Roberts said major roads to the Gulf Coast were closed by high water.

Gulfport got 4.25 inches of rain from the storm by midmorning.

By LEANNE STOWE
Staff Writer

While K-State's enrollment continues to show a downward trend, the University of Kansas announced a record high Wednesday.

The first-day enrollment figure for KU — 24,660, an increase of 102 students from last fall — came just two days after President Duane Acker announced K-State's first-day enrollment figures were down from a year ago. The current enrollment for the University, 14,384, is down 608 students from the fall 1984 first-day figure of 14,992.

Acker said Aug. 26 it appeared enrollment would continue to fall along with the state economy and national drop in college-age population.

The enrollment figure at both universities is incomplete, however, because the enrollment process continues through Sept. 23, the 20th day of class, said Steve Hall, assistant registrar.

The initial figures are based primarily on pre-enrolled students, Hall said. Graduate students, among others, often don't enroll until after classes have started, he said. Last year, the 20th-day count increased by more than 3,000 — from 14,992 to 18,089 — from the first-day figures.

Robin Eversole, director of university relations at KU, said the 1985 total was the highest ever reported by her office although the reporting system has changed over the years. She said the first-day figures this year

Brown announces nominees

48 apply to selection committee

By J. SCOTT HOLT
Collegian Reporter

The field of student nominees for the presidential selection committee was narrowed from 48 to four applicants Friday.

Names of the student nominees will be given to Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents. On Thursday, the regents will choose two students — one graduate and one undergraduate — to be on the committee to select candidates for the next University president.

The nominees for the two positions are Mark Jones, senior in management; Tami Barham, senior in social sciences; Adrienne Hyle, graduate in education, secondary administration; and Jill Hummels, graduate in journalism and mass communications.

Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and student body president, will serve on the committee as the third student representative. Other members of the committee, whose names will be released at a later date, will include three faculty, three alumni and one University administrator.

Thirty-seven undergraduates and 11 graduates applied for the committee membership. This was an unusually large response to a committee appointment, said Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities and Student Governing Association adviser.

When contacted Friday, Koplik expressed satisfaction when told of the large number of applicants.

"We need student input with this important decision," Koplik said.

Routson said the large response indicates strong student interest in choosing a new president and concern about the future of the University. Routson worked with Brown on the selection of nominees.

"We wanted the selection to be as fair as possible to pick nominees. Steve (Brown) and I had worked together in previous selec-

Campus publication wins national honor for fiction

By ERIN EICHER

For the second consecutive year, Kansas Quarterly, edited and published on campus, has been named by Writer's Digest as the top magazine in the nation in the non-paying fiction market.

"It was one of only three literary magazines that even made the top-10 list both years," said Harold Schneider, assistant professor of English, and one of the publication's five editors.

Kansas Quarterly is in its 17th year of existence since it replaced Kansas Magazine, a yearly publication which began in Topeka in 1872.

Because of its longevity and reputation for printing only quality work, writers from all over the world send in fiction and

Zoo fires Siberian security guards

AUCKLAND, New Zealand — A New Zealand safari park intent on protecting its cash receipts says it will no longer dare would-be thieves to venture, literally, into the tigers' den.

The park near Auckland has been using four Siberian tigers as security guards for its daily takings, storing the estimated $25,000 each night in the tigers' den.

But it is now scrapping the system, to the relief of local bank staff who complained they had to spray the money with deodorant before counting it.

Park manager Chris Cambridge said the change was not purely because of the stink it had caused in the bank.

He said too many people had gotten wind of the ploy and officials were worried that someone might harm the big cats during a break-in.

Group raids press offices in Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile — Armed left-wing guerrillas entered the offices of The Associated Press and the British news agency Reuters on Monday and declared their rejection of any political agreement with Chile's military government.

No one was injured in the simultaneous raids on the two offices located six blocks apart in downtown Santiago.

Four men and one woman with submachine guns and pistols entered The AP office at 6 p.m. and said they were members of the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front.

They said no one would be harmed but "a small bomb" would be exploded to express their rejection of the so-called National Agreement proposed by centrist political parties to restore democracy.

The guerrillas ordered the three AP staffers in the office into a bathroom, told them to remain there for 10 minutes, and then fled.

They left behind behind a box that they said contained a bomb. Police examined the box and found it was empty.

The raid was similar at Reuters.

Nixon meets with Japanese leader

TOKYO — Former President Richard Nixon met with Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone Monday and briefly discussed trade issues between the two countries, an official of the Prime Minister's Office said.

Japanese officials declined to provide further details, saying Nixon was on a private visit.

Japan's Kyodo News Service said Nixon told Nakasone that Japan should implement measures proposed to open its markets to foreign goods in order to reduce friction stemming from Japan's huge trade surplus with the United States.

Gun accident kills 2-year-old boy

SCHERERVILLE, Ind. — A 2-year-old boy died after he apparently shot himself in the head with his father's .357-caliber Magnum handgun at his family's home, police said.

Peter Subotic of Schererville died Sunday about 1 p.m. in Munster Community Hospital.

His 3-year-old sister was with him during the shooting, but other family members were in another room, said Schererville police Lt. Don Parker.

Parker said Monday the accident remained under investigation, but said there were no plans to file charges.

Fire forces 150 people to evacuate

PASSAIC, N.J. — A massive fire engulfed a four-block industrial complex Monday and spread to a warehouse filled with fuel and at least 15 apartment buildings and houses, forcing more than 150 residents to flee, officials said.

Plumes of thick black smoke could be seen 20 miles away as loud booming explosions and short pops rocked the air.

More than 150 firefighters fought the blaze, which had caused one minor injury to a firefighter, said fire battalion chief Frank Termyna.

"This very well could be the worst fire in the city's history," said Fire Chief Kenneth Petersen.

The fire, which was reported at 12:30 p.m., spread to three-story apartment buildings and single-family homes along the six-story brick complex that houses about 100 small businesses, said Termyna.

It then spread to a block-long warehouse where 16,000 gallons of kerosene and diesel fuel were stored, feeding flames more than 100 feet high, said Passaic firefighter Edward Peterson.

"These (the nearby buildings) are gonna go," he said as the fire burned out of control. "There's nothing we can do about it."

The blaze continued to burn out of control seven hours later.

Groups clash in protest marches

DALLAS — The Rev. Jerry Falwell led about 5,000 anti-pornography demonstrators Monday in a march on the headquarters of the parent company of 7-Eleven convenience stores.

"We don't thank heaven for 7-Eleven," the Moral Majority leader told the demonstrators, who had marched despite 100-degree heat. The demonstrators selected Southland Corp.'s headquarters in an attempt to halt sales of adult magazines at its convenience stores.

About 50 anti-apartheid protesters held a rally across the street, chanting "Falwell is a phony. Free South Africa."

Falwell has upset anti-apartheid groups with statements he made after his recent trip to South Africa.

He called Bishop Desmond Tutu, a black South African leader, a phony, but later appologized for his choice of words. Falwell supports President Reagan's policy of constructive engagement with South Africa, and opposes trade sanctions with the white-minority-ruled government.

Former governor to seek post again

LEXINGTON, Ky. — When Phyllis George resigned as co-anchor of the "CBS Morning News," she gave her husband, former Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown Jr., "the green light" to run for governor again, he said.

"She made a hard decision and I'm proud of her," Brown said in a copyright story in the Lexington Herald-Leader on Monday. "She concluded that she needed to be with us."

Brown, a 51-year-old Democrat, said he's almost certain he'll run in 1987, although he does not plan a formal announcement until late next year.

Yankees' wives collect canned food

NEW YORK — The wives of the New York Yankees went to bat for the city's hungry during the Labor Day weekend, collecting 6,000 pounds of canned edibles from the team's fans, a spokesman said.

The food was taken in at Yankee Stadium during Sunday's game with the California Angels.

Collecting the food were Gari Meachem, wife of shortstop Bobby Meachem; Debbie Sample, wife of outfielder Billy Sample; Gretchen Randolph, married to second baseman Willie Randolph; Leslie Bordi, wife of pitcher Rich Bordi; Meg Bystrom, wife of pitcher Marty Bystrom; Yolanda Szala, married to bullpen catcher Dom Szala; and Susie Torborg, whose husband is Yankee coach Jeff Torborg.

Traffic accidents claim 7 lives

Traffic accidents over the extended Labor Day holiday weekend claimed the lives of seven people, including those of four who died Saturday in a head-on collision between a car and a tractor-trailer on U.S. 24-40 between Lawrence and Tonganoxie, authorities said.

Leavenworth County Sheriff Terry Campbell said the accident occurred at the top of a hill about a mile north of the highway's junction with Kansas 32.

The three people in the car were dead at the scene. Two were identified by the Highway Patrol as Daisy M. L. Russell, 35, of Lawrence and Charles L. Beebe, 39, of Baldwin City. Authorities Monday were withholding the name of the driver until a vacationing son could be located.

The patrol said Alice K. Hobbie, 77, died Sunday at an Osborne hospital after the car she was riding in collided with a stray bull on a Kansas 181 in Osborne County, about two miles south of Downs.

Juventino Carias, 28, of Kansas City, Mo., was killed Saturday night after being struck by a hit-and-run vehicle as he and a companion were pushing their disabled station wagon along a Kansas City, Kan., street.

Authorities were holding a suspect in the case pending the filing of formal charges.

A Fort Riley soldier was killed and another injured Sunday night in a one-car accident on the military base. Army officials on Monday had not released the name of the soldier who died, pending the notification of relatives. The injured soldier was listed in stable condition Monday, officials said.

Brown received a letter from Koplik Aug. 16 requesting the names of four student nominees. He was not given specific instructions or criteria for choosing the students.

The criteria Brown and Routson devised included involvement in a wide variety of activities on and off campus, experience working with the administration, knowledge of the University system of government, knowledge of the University educational system and time spent at the University.

The top five undergraduates and the top three graduate students were interviewed by Brown and Routson.

"We tried to emphasize the large amount of time required in this committee," Routson said.

The committee will meet throughout this semester and the majority of the spring term to select presidential candidates.

A LOT OF CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY STARTED OUT AS SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

How can you get the experience you need to succeed in business?

These top executives started out as Army officers. Right out of college, they were given the kind of responsibility most people in civilian life work years for.

If you begin your future as an Army officer, you could further your career plans.

How do you become an Army officer? A great way to get the training you need is in Army ROTC.

ROTC is a college program that will teach you leadership and management skills, and train you to handle real challenges.

If you want to prepare for a promising future in business, begin your future as an Army officer, with Army ROTC. You too might wind up a captain of industry!

Fire leaves student in critical condition

From Staff and Wire Reports

A K-State senior in landscape architecture was critically burned in a flash fire Friday morning while using gasoline to strip paint from an apartment wall, authorities said.

Paul A. Schanzmeyer, 24, of Jefferson City, Mo., was still listed in critical condition Sunday afternoon in the University of Kansas Burn Unit in Kansas City, Kan., with first- and second-degree burns over 90 percent of his body.

The multi-story building, at 1010 Fremont St., which contained six apartments, was destroyed. The insured value was listed as $85,000.

"I heard a big boom. It shook the whole upstairs," said Deneen Kimbrough, junior in art, who lived in one of the upstairs apartments in the house which had been converted into apartments. Kimbrough said she and another resident who lived upstairs were able to flee the burning building by climbing down a fire escape.

"There was a lot of screaming and shouting. I'm sure everyone was able to get out," Kimbrough said. She said the victim was able to leave the building.

Schanzmeyer reportedly was injured when a gas water heater or other appliance ignited the gasoline he was using to remove the paint. Officials reported the explosion caused a flash fire that rapidly spread through the building.

Fire officials said the blaze spread upstairs, then through the upstairs ceiling and roof of the building.

TWA crew members identify terrorist

Diver's killer recognized in photo

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The terrorist who killed Navy diver Robert Dean Stethem during the hijacking of TWA Flight 847 was identified in a photograph shown to crew members by FBI agents, the plane's co-pilot says.

First Officer Philip G. Maresca said he and two other crew members picked out a picture of the hijacker who shot and killed Stethem, 23, a passenger aboard the plane that was hijacked June 14 after takeoff from Athens, Greece.

Stethem was beaten and shot June 15 in the plane's cockpit, and his body was dumped on the tarmac at Beirut International Airport.

During a telephone interview last week from his home in Salt Lake City, Maresca said the terrorist's picture was on a sheet of six mug shots that FBI agents showed crew members following their release from 17 days of captivity.

"We were able to pick out one of the photographs," he said.

Maresca declined to identify the gunman by name, saying only that "He was very well groomed, you would never have guessed he would be a hijacker."

The two other crew members, Capt. John L. Testrake and Benjamin C. Zimmermann, the flight engineer, could not be reached for comment. Their home telephone numbers are unlisted.

FBI agents interrogated the 36 passengers and three crewmen after they were released July 1 by Shiite Amal militiamen and flown to a military hospital in Wiesbaden, West Germany.

The FBI is conducting an investigation in an attempt to gather enough evidence to obtain a federal grand jury indictment against the terrorists for the hijacking and the murder of Stethem, according to government sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Network videotapes from television coverage of the 17-day hijacking ordeal were subpoenaed by federal prosecutors along with photographs taken by The Associated Press. The news agency also furnished audio tapes of new coverage transmitted over the AP Radio network.

After the hijacked Boeing 727 was flown from Beirut to Rome last month, FBI agents poked through the badly damaged TWA jetliner, dusting it for fingerprints and taking photographs, the source said.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and a number of Reagan administration officials have said U.S. authorities believe they know the identities of the terrorists who hijacked the plane, which was carrying 145 passengers and eight crew members.

UMW president to seek AFL-CIO ties

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Richard Trumka, president of the United Mine Workers, will address the AFL-CIO's biennial convention next month in another step on the road toward affiliation between his union and the 13.7 million-member labor federation.

No mineworkers' president has ever addressed a convention of the AFL-CIO, which was created in 1955. The independent UMW has not been part of any labor federation for nearly four decades, since pulling out of the old American Federation of Labor.

But with precipitous membership declines in the mineworkers' union and throughout organized labor, the idea of unity is viewed by many in unions as a vital necessity.

Perhaps more important, relations are excellent between Trumka and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, who has directed the labor federation's headquarters staffers to treat the mineworkers union with the same cooperation given to full-fledged affiliates.

In an interview last week, Trumka confirmed that he will address the AFL-CIO convention in Anaheim, Calif., during the last week of October.

The UMW left the old AFL in 1947 amid much bitterness when the mineworkers' legendary president, John L. Lewis, angrily scrawled the words "We disaffiliate" on a white card sent to the labor federation's chief, William Green.

Kirkland addressed the UMW's most recent convention, in 1983 in Pittsburgh, marking the first time an AFL-CIO president had ever gone before the mineworkers.

Affiliation with the AFL-CIO could be done with a vote of the mineworkers' executive board, and would not necessarily involve a vote at a UMW convention.

Hurricane

"Roofs are flying all over," news director Ed Petro of WGCM radio in Gulfport said during the storm. "Shingles are goin' off what roofs are staying attached to the house."

Emergency shelters weren't immune to the storm, and at least three schools used as shelters in Gulfport lost roofs to the wind.

Early reports in Florida showed Elena washed away piers, eroded beaches and flooded homes.

Bob Chapman, a duty officer with the Emergency Management Agency, estimated that between 60,000 and 70,000 Mississippians had left their homes. Louisiana state police estimated around 400,000 people had fled, and an additional 175,000 were ordered to evacuate from the Alabama coast.

Ex-presidents big spenders

Talk about an allowance! Former Presidents Richard M. Nixon, Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter don't have to worry about pinching pennies; their arrangement with the federal government is quite cushy.

Taxpayers are supporting more than $26 million a year in expenses including office rent, phone service, travel, stamps and Secret Service protection according to a story reported Saturday in the National Journal. Add to that the $86,200 they each receive in annual pension.

We have three excessive ex-executives.

Taxpayers shouldn't be aghast over $258,600 in pensions. But they should feel wretched when they learn that every month Nixon's office costs more than $6,580; Ford's phone bill averages more than $2,500. Each of the three spends more than $750 a month on postage. It is projected that expenses for the three former presidents will be $30.8 million in 1986.

Presidential libraries are one of the biggest expenses, with an estimated operating cost of $20.5 million in fiscal 1986.

The House approved in June a bill by Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., that would require sponsors from the private sector to establish endowments which would help pay for the cost of running the libraries.

The Reagan administration is trying to make Reagan exempt from the limits on library spending; the rules would apply only to his successors.

An amendment to a Treasury appropriations bill by Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., was approved by the House in July. It would gradually reduce amounts received by former presidents for office expenses. During their first four years as private citizens they would receive $300,000, then $250,000 for the next four years, and $200,000 a year thereafter.

A reduction is not enough. These are not unemployable individuals. They are public figures, experts on some subjects, nice to have around during discussion on others, popular because they are a part of history.

It was reported in Barron's magazine that Ford makes more than $1 million a year delivering speeches (at $18,000 to $20,000 a shot) and sitting on corporate boards. He can certainly afford to pay his own help.

Such excess in government spending is unjustifiable. All we owe financially to our former presidents is a pension, Secret Service protection and library support. If they choose to continue as public figures, let them generate their own financial resources. The level of support they are likely to receive will be in proportion to the value of what they have to say.

Revolutionary tax reform

President Reagan began his reentry into the fast-paced world of politics with a whistle-stop speech Monday to a Labor Day crowd in Independence, Mo., the hometown of Harry S. Truman.

During his speech to drum up support for his tax plan, a package his public relations advisers are calling "America's Second Revolution," he said those "who have a vested interest in the status quo...just hate it when we talk about reform."

But Reagan's legion of tax warriors will likely face tough opponents when they begin their revolutionary attempt to "reform" the tax code.

If Congress adopts the Reagan tax plan the following will occur:

— State and local income, property and sales taxes will no longer be deductible.

— The deduction for two-earner married couples will be repealed.

— Current credits for child-care expenses will be limited to $2,400 for families with one dependent and $4,800 for families with two or more dependents.

— Exemptions for the elderly, blind and disabled will be combined; others eliminated.

— Income averaging, a plan which reduces the taxes recent college graduates pay when they jump from a low-income level to a higher one, will be eliminiated.

Of course, all of these alterations will not be enacted. The claims Reagan makes in his rhetorical speeches about "reform" and "simplification" serve no real purpose because it is Congress who ultimately writes tax codes — not the president — and it will be the same stingy Congress that rejects reforms that harm their constituents. No one hates reform, but revolutions are not easily won. A tax revolution will be no exception.

Student Senate to face $700,000 question

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

Practically everyone is wondering about the possible changes in the financing and/or construction of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum. Only a few, though, are curious about the fate of $700,000.

"What $700,000?" most students ask when the subject is introduced.

It's no wonder few have heard of the rather mysterious $700,000 refund that will result if the financing of the student contribution to the coliseum goes through as planned. Media coverage has been scarce since the story broke in late July. Only those who follow student government closely have been buzzing with the news.

According to the July/August K-Stater Alumni magazine, a new Internal Revenue Service regulation will allow student monies collected for the coliseum to be used in a much more profitable way. With the new regulation, George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, proposed to reduce the amount of time students will pay on the coliseum from 20 years to 10 years and net a balance of $700,000.

The Student Governing Association, in cooperation with the Office of the Vice President for Educational and Student Services, will recommend how the money will be spent.

The most obvious action to take is to refund the money to the students who paid it in the first place. While a direct refund by lowering the required coliseum student fees seems like a problem of simple mathematics, bureaucratic red tape is almost certain to make such a refund a Herculean feat.

The coliseum, it seems, could use the money, either directly for construction costs, or to purchase items still on the "want list" — such as parking lot lights and office furniture.

As always, the libraries could use the money or SGA could quickly finish the Holton Hall rennovation it began more than three years ago.

Some have suggested starting a scholarship fund for student leaders.

Handicapped access could be improved.

KSDB-FM, the campus radio station, which has been struggling for many years with limited funds, could be given the technical boost it needs to become a first-rate collegiate station.

The debate team, which Student Senate had been trying to wean off SGA funds, could be given a large endowment to carry it through the "weaning" process.

One person suggests the money be used in a strictly academic sense, by providing funds to lure prestigious professors to campus. To ensure fairness, the position would rotate through the eight colleges on a year by year basis.

The "no more parking lots" people would like to see a mass transit study and system funded.

The "more campus security" people, of whom Student Body President Steve Brown, junior pre-veterinary medicine, is a part, could use the money to pay a security official to walk through the campus during the night.

And, of course, the real idealists believe the most noble thing to do with the money is to invest it in irrigation research for famine-stricken countries such as Ethiopia.

The possibilities for the $700,000 are so numerous and so diverse that student senators will probably never discover all the options. Where the money will go will depend largely on those who speak up with proposals.

The biggest damper to all this free thinking is whether we will, in fact, get the $700,000. George Miller, Vice President for Administration and Finance said Friday that it is unlikely that the delay in bond sales will cause students to lose the $700,000 net income.

If the plan goes though, the $700,000 issue may quite quickly come to the forefront. Those with the best reasoned and saleable options have the best chance of success. Keep dreaming.

College education without classes, books

MIKE RILEY
Collegian Columnist

College — what a concept. Just think, you get to leave your parents in order to live in an environment consisting of thousands of your peers. And if that isn't enough, you are given the opportunity to educate yourself with knowledge that will help you later in life.

Now I'm not exactly talking about studying the War of 1812, reading about supply-side economics or giving a narrative speech. I'm talking about acquiring down-to-earth knowledge that you can put to use immediately.

For example, during my first weeks at college, I learned the valuable art of pouring beer at an angle to reduce the amount of foam in the glass. I consider myself a master at this, however, my mom doesn't know quite what to make of my habit of pouring milk in this manner.

Although pouring beer is a nice skill to acquire, I knew that there was more knowledge out there just waiting for me to obtain. For instance, I had to learn to be patient while waiting in lines. Especially after having flashbacks of the tragic Who concert in Cincinnati while buying my books and going through drop/add.

It wasn't long until I learned that sleep for students doesn't come often. After all, with talk show host/commedian David Letterman taking away most of my REM sleep, and since the best batch of Swannie's Yum Yums get out of the oven at 12:38, it's hard for a true K-State student to get enough sleep.

I didn't spend much time in the classroom before I realized the necessity of sleeping in class without detection. I have finally polished classroom sleeping down to a fine art. Yes, I call it an art because I've observed many sleepers in their apprentice stages doing headbobs, dropping pencils, or the most dreaded — frightening as it may seem — slobbering on their books.

Another skill I found valuable is the ability to make excuses to instructors and professors. This requires quite a bit of imagination. Students should avoid excuses that may have been used before.

I recently had a professor claim he had heard them all. After a little thinking I had come up with an origional excuse bound to work: "Professor Smith, I won't be able to take that test tomorrow because my mom was recently pinned under her car and fractured her skull while attempting to fix the car's transmission. It's really important that I go home. She's lives alone because my father is in Alaska working on the pipeline."

Another thing students will learn at school is the ability to procrastinate. Believe me, the only person who puts off more work until Friday than myself is Robinson Crusoe. If a person really becomes skilled at procrastination, he or she must eventually soon learn the finer points of pulling an all-nighter.

No one should begin an all-nighter without first acquiring the proper supplies. A true all-nighter requires snacks, gallons of caffeine sodas and a few friends to share in the joyous event.

In a "real" all-nighter not much studying is accomplished. Typically participants use the time to share gossip and run up the telephone bill begging friends for sympathy. Women often come away from an all-nighter with a new hairdo, or at the very least, newly painted fingernails.

College students soon learn to deal with their parents in a manner that would make union strike mediators envious. Dealing with parents requires tact because they aren't too excited about funding our education, they want their children out of school as soon as possible.

Most of the contact with parents will take place during telephone conversations which may be used to a student's advantage. "Yes Dad, I will add three more hours of classes if you, say, let me go skiing during the next school break."

A lot of what students learn depends upon on living arrangements. Some greek students will learn every line in National Lampoon's "Animal House" by Thanksgiving vacation. Residence hall members will become skilled at building beer-can pyramids in their windows and those students who live off campus may learn the exciting sports of Hacky Sac® and Frisbee® .

Of course, attending classes is crucial to your education, but if you ask me, crucial knowledge can be derived outside the classroom.

History, facts serve to establish Christian religions

Editor,

Re: Daniel Grubb's column, "Religion is a 'fairy tale' for believers," in the Aug. 27 Collegian:

I am amazed at your highly unintellectual evaluation of Christianity. I am appalled that a man of your learning appears to be ignorant of the basic truths of the gospel.

Have you honestly considered the overwhelming evidence concerning Jesus of Nazareth? Christianity is not a myth, or a fairy tale. Christianity is established upon positive historical facts.

Clifford Herbert Moore, for many years a professor at Harvard University, states, "Christianity knew its savior and redeemer not as some god whose history was contained in a mythical faith, with rude, primative and even offensive elements. The Christian faith is founded on positive, historical and acceptable facts."

A long list could be made of such outstanding scholars who are devout followers of Christ. For example, William Lyon Phelps, a Yale University professor for 40 years and distinguished professor of history, expressed his confidence in the historical evidence concerning the deity of Jesus Christ.

I'm sorry if your resentment has been based upon an unfortunate experience or the inconsistency of some Christians. I would hope you could put this aside long enough to take time to read the Bible and consider the historical facts concerning Jesus.

Honestly consider the person of Jesus Christ and his claim on your life. Who is Jesus of Nazareth to you? A myth? A mere man? Or the son of God?

Your life upon this earth and for all eternity is affected by your answer to this question.

Union workers demand wage increase

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The black miners' union, striking the nation's gold and coal mines, said thousands of workers stayed on the job Monday under threat of violence. The rand rallied strongly after government intervention, regaining value lost in last week's nosedive.

Police reported rioting in mixed-race townships, mostly around Cape Town. There were no immediate reports on casualties.

More than 650 people have been killed in a year of rioting against apartheid, the race laws that guarantee supremacy for South Africa's white minority. Nearly all the victims have been black.

"Hundreds of workers have been injured by rubber bullets and tear gas," said statement issued Monday night by the black National Union of Mineworkers. Management spokesmen said they knew of no violence, and police said they had not been called in.

The union, demanding higher pay, issued its strike call to 60,000 men and said by late Monday that 28,000 were out. Company officials said about 12,400 workers walked out at six gold and coal mines. Black miners earn about 350 rand a month, $157 in terms of a 45 cent rand. White miners are paid about 2,000 rand.

It was impossible to verify the extent of the strike at the mines, which are scattered along the Reef, a mile-high ridge running east and west near Johannesburg. Reporters were not allowed into the area and it is illegal for workers to picket outside the mine gates.

Union spokesman Howard Gabriels acknowledged that most miners went to work, but said private mine security guards told them they would be fired and sent home to their black homelands if they walked out. Management spokesmen denied the allegation.

Nearly all black miners live in dormitories and have contracts of up to 18 months. Foreign blacks work in the mines, but cannot belong to the union.

The General Mining Corp. said strikes affected five mines — Beatrix and Marievale gold mines and the Blinkpan, Transvaal Navigation and Matla coal pits.

Gold Fields of South Africa, which employs about 40,000 of the 60,000 men, said 3,500 of the 4,800 miners at its Deelkraal gold mine refused to work.

The 3-year-old union claims to represent 230,000 of more than 500,000 blacks employed in the mining industry.

Mine management unilaterally granted pay raises of 14 percent to 19 percent, but the union demanded 22 percent across the board.

The rand rallied with the aid of central bank intervention, regaining the value it lost last week, which caused the government to suspend trading on the currency and stock markets.

President P.W. Botha's government suspended trading on the foreign exchange and stock markets last Tuesday after the rand plunged 10 cents to a record low against the dollar of about 35 cents.

South Africa's reserve bank intervened when the currency market reopened Monday, selling dollars in support, and the rand closed at 44.95 cents.

U.S. and European banks have begun calling in loans, and the government announced Sunday that payment of principal on foreign debts will be suspended until at least Jan. 1, 1986. It said interest obligations would be met.

Community newest site for AIDS test

By JONIE R. TRUED
Collegian Reporter

The Riley County Manhattan Health Department is the newest testing site for acquired immune deficiency syndrome in Kansas.

Staff at the RCMHD, 2030 Tecumseh Road, took on the AIDS testing program as a result of educating themselves about the disease, said Traci Holsteen, nursing supervisor for the health department.

Programs for AIDS testing across the country are financially supported by the federal government, Holsteen said.

"The federal government calls AIDS the No. 1 health priority in America today," she said. "Our primary purpose is to screen blood.

"The government wants to have the AIDS testing sites in places where nurses understand sexually transmitted diseases."

Holsteen said the RCMHD is set up to handle both Manhattan residents and clients from other communites who want to remain anonymous.

"One problem in dealing with AIDS testing is the need for strict confidentiality and enforced anonymity," she said. "When clients come in for the test, I ask them to use a phony name."

Holsteen also said no notes are taken on clients by health department officials and it is up to the client to make contact with the department.

The test is not automatically given to everyone who requests it, Holsteen said.

"Every client who wants the AIDS test must agree to the pre-test and post-test counseling sessions," she said. "I want them to be sure they want the test and to be certain they know what they're getting into when they take it."

Holsteen said the testing program was set up to protect the public and to educate, reassure and refer.

"We want them to know exactly what test results mean," she said. "We also need to be able to refer clients who have a positive test result to physicians and therapists who will deal with the emotional problems that are incurred."

Holsteen said the location of an AIDS testing site in Manhattan is not an indication of it being a high-risk area.

"Kansas is not a high-risk area for blood donated by gays or bisexuals," she said. "Since all donated blood is tested now anyway, we have a virtually safe blood supply."

Wedding at race track

Couple enters demo derby

By The Associated Press

WESTBORO, Mass. — Some couples drink champagne or dance when they tie the knot. Frances McLain and Kevin Livesay celebrated by smashing up their cars.

The post-nuptials may have been unusual, but then so was the wedding. It took place before 4,000 fans at Westboro Speedway Sunday night, just before the Sterling couple and 10 others took part in a demolition derby, where drivers bang their cars into their opponents' until only one car can move.

"My vision of my wedding had been a garden ceremony and a quiet family reception," McLain said. "Of course, those plans jumped right out the window as soon as he proposed."

Livesay has been a regular demolition derby competitor on weekends for the past three years, but it was the bride's first competition, although she has been a fan for years.

While Speedway promoter Peter Falconi explained the ceremony to the fans over the loudspeaker, the demolition derby wedding party circled the track to the strains of "Here Comes the Bride."

The groom, a telephone technician in Framingham, drove a black car with a tuxedo painted on the hood. The bride drove a white sedan with a lace trim around the hood and a bridal veil hanging inside the back windshield. Both cars had gold rings painted on the left front tires.

The cars stopped in front of the announcer's booth and the couple climbed onto the announcer's deck, where they exchanged vows before John Foster II Lancaster, a justice of the peace. After a quick kiss, the couple got back into their cars and the derby commenced.

The groom got in the first blow, broadsiding the bride's car. But he failed to sideline his bride, and she eventually became the eighth driver to leave the track, outlasting her husband by 10 minutes.

U.S.-French group locates Titanic

By The Associated Press

PARIS — A U.S.-French expedition has located the wreck of the Titanic about 560 miles off Newfoundland, a French government institute announced Monday.

The British luxury liner struck an iceberg and sank in 1912 claiming 1,513 lives.

The Institute for Research and Exploitation of the Sea said the wreckage, found in 13,120 feet of water, was identified by the French-made SAR submarine sonar system and American-made ARGO underwater cameras.

The Titanic, which its owners billed as unsinkable, was bound for New York on its maiden voyage when it went down on the night of April 13-14, 1912.

In its announcement, the agency said the French and American institutes sponsoring the expedition agreed in advance not to make public statements on the results of the search "unless they were absolutely certain of the facts."

Sunday night, Canada's commercial television network CTV broadcast what it said was a ship-to-shore interview with Dr. Robert Ballard, an American member of the expedition, in which he said the team found found pieces of the wreck early Sunday about 360 miles south of Newfoundland.

According to the conversation broadcast by CTV, Ballard said from the U.S. Navy research ship Knorr: "We came on it early this morning. It was just bang, there it was right on top of it. Our initial reaction was excitement, then a coming down off that to realize that we had found the ship where 1,500 people had died."

Ballard is associated with the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Cape Cod, Mass. Shelley Lauzon, information manager for the institution, said Monday she was trying to reach the Knorr to confirm the report.

The French agency's announcement said it and the Woods Hole institute would hold simultaneous news conferences about the discovery, in Paris and Washington, on Sept. 13, with the members of the expedition participating.

It did not give the precise location of the wreck, apparently for security reasons.

Unwary farmers fall victim to illegal loan-finding scam

By CONRAD EASTERDAY
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part report on farmers and false loan schemes. Wednesday's story will focus on state regulation and action to protect farmers from such scams.

Farmers don't want to believe it, but they are finding not everyone offering money these days can be trusted.

A rising number of Kansas farmers have fallen victim to loan-finding schemes which may not be legitimate, said DeAnn Hupe, attorney for the state Board of Agriculture's Farmer's Assistance and Counseling Service.

The typical scheme involves a financially desperate farmer and a loan-finding agent who promises to find a low-interest loan which will save his farm, Hupe said.

Farmers should be wary of accepting these schemes at face value, said Sam Brownback, K-State's extension agriculture law specialist. The schemes are sometimes too good to be true.

The agents describe themselves to farmers as non-traditional financing agents, Hupe said. Unlike traditional sources such as banks and other lending institutions, these non-traditional sources require advance fees for processing or obtaining loan or mortgage applications, Hupe said.

Requiring an advance fee is a telltale sign of the non-traditional financier. And if the agent is dishonest, his sole objective is to be paid that fee and then lose contact with the farmer.

The number of non-traditional financing agents has been rising for the past two years along with the number of farmers with unsupportable debts.

Some agents answering cries for help may be legitimate financiers. But Kansas Securities Commissioner John Wurth said his office has seen many agents tell farmers they can find low-interest loans and then disappear after pocketing thousands of dollars in fees.

Hupe said she has received several calls from farmers in Kansas asking questions about loan-finding agents.

"It's unknown that they (the agents) have loaned anybody money anywhere," she said. "I have yet to hear of anybody who's done this (paid the finder's fee) actually receiving a loan."

Some farmers have been waiting for their loan to come through as long as a year and a half, Hupe said.

Many of the farmers who approach, or are approached by, the agents are facing foreclosure within a year. Hupe said they are the ones who make easy victims.

"Most of the farmers I have talked to who have paid these companies still believe the loan will come through," Hupe said. "Some are thinking, 'Well, the foreclosure sale is Friday. This is Wednesday; maybe the loan will come through before then.'"

Hupe declined to say all the non-traditional financiers are frauds or con men. She added that the Kansas Securities Commissioner and the state Attorney General's office are likewise being very careful in how they describe agents and their operations.

Not all agents come under the loan-finder description. Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan said another method agents use is to request farmers sell the agents their land and then lease it back.

College begins in the dorm

When Sondra Broers, freshman in general, unlocked the door of 108 West Hall early that "moving in" Wednesday morning of Aug. 21, two questions rolled through her mind. Would she like the person who had a bunny nametag on the door beside hers? Would they ever be able to make the cold, empty pea green room into something cozy and liveable?

Under her mom's supervision, Sondra quietly made her bed and moved her small load of personal belongings to a corner of the room. Then she waited for the answers to her questions.

Claudia Maldonado, freshman in general engineering, finally made the West Hall scene on Thursday afternoon. She and her parents dashed in and out of 108, quickly filling the pea green room with box after box.

"I had about 10 or 12 boxes. Sondra didn't have anything," Claudia said. "I figured she'd hate me."

Sondra didn't. Even though the only thing this Ottawa farm girl (Broers) and Wichita city slicker (Maldonado) have in common is the room they share, both women were happy to discover their fears about having a roommate would not be realized.

Sondra was afraid she'd "get a real snotty person" and Claudia worried "I'd get too much of a partier, and I'd never get any rest."

Well, Claudia may be getting less sleep than usual, but it's only because Sondra has a tough time sleeping past 6 a.m. since she got up at 4:30 every morning on the farm.

The roommate question was answered. Sondra decided Claudia would be OK as a roommate, and she (Claudia) also provided the solution to the pea green room problem with the contents of one of her boxes — posters, posters and more posters obtained this summer from her job at a movie theater.

The roomies went to work, and soon the ugly walls were covered with ads for movie hits such as "Sixteen Candles," "Romancing the Stone" and "The Verdict."

West was Claudia's first residence hall choice because she wanted the friendliness and feeling of closeness that a smaller hall could offer.

Sondra had heard good things about West, but had only seen the outside.

Sondra Broers, freshman in general, sits on her bed and scans her West Hall room after moving in.

"I knew the rooms were going to be gross...," Claudia said. "I saw these walls and thought 'we are definitely going to get rid of this green.' My Mom kept saying 'don't bring so many (posters).

"But I'm glad you did," Sondra said. "We could use a couple more really."

Claudia was the first of the two to have a crisis not uncommon among freshmen.

"I lost my keys after three hours," she said.

"Yeah, she found them finally in her bed," Sondra said.

"That's how with-it I was," Claudia replied.

Sondra tried to comfort her roommate by saying she had only misplaced her keys.

"Oh please. I was sleeping two inches away from them," Claudia said. "All those days of putting the keys in the mailbox..."

One set of keys isn't the only thing the roommates have shared.

Together, they're still adjusting to residence hall and campus life, while trying hard not to look like freshmen.

"When I was in high school, it wasn't that bad to be a freshman. I kind of enjoyed my freshman year because you got a lot of attention," Claudia said. "It seems like here, if you're a freshman, you make a fool of yourself a lot more."

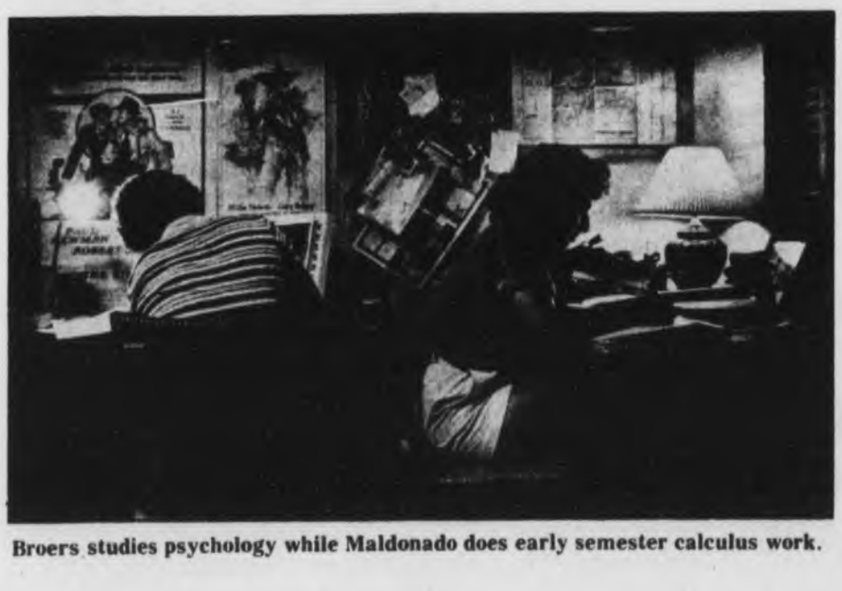
Derby Food Center has proved to be an excellent new student training ground.

Chocolate milk gushed all over the floor because Claudia pushed the milk machine button twice. They both waited in the same lunch line for several meals because they didn't realize there was more than one.

"We're still trying to get to the hamburger/hotdog line, but we can't find it," Claudia said.

The women thought they'd made a big mistake when they sat at the end of a table occupied by a group of guys.

"They all just looked at us — their necks stretched about five feet — and then the whole lunchroom looked at us.



I thought 'Oh, no, is this one of those dumb rules where you're supposed to have respect for upper classmen so you can't even sit 10 feet near them?'" Claudia said.

Just venturing down the hall out of the postered room is another experience. Claudia and Sondra are still trying to remember to look both ways for male visitors or listen for a

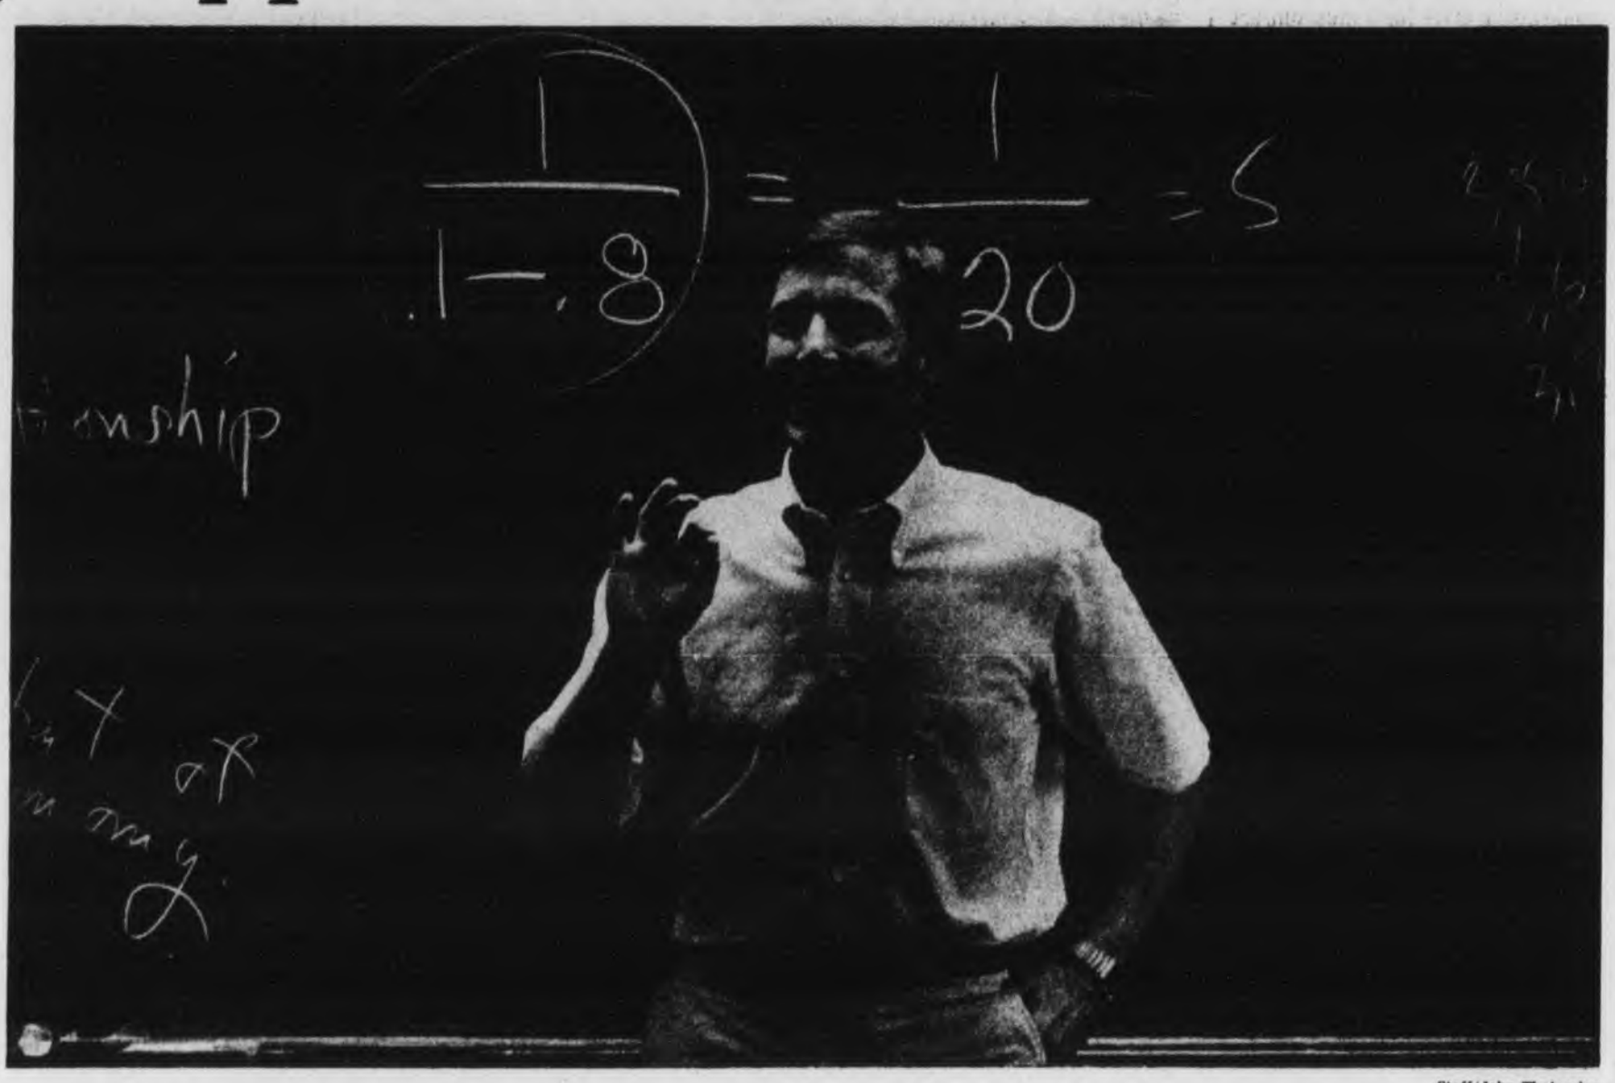
Moving in and rearranging their room takes its toll on Broers and her roommate Claudia Maldonado, freshman in general engineering, so they take a nap before experiencing lunch in the Derby Food Center.

Broers studies psychology while Maldonado does early semester calculus work.



Maldonado and Broers are happy as roommates. "I'm just glad I got somebody nice to live with," Maldonado said.

Trenary supplies economic realities

Coursework demands dedication

By MARY A. BEGGS
Staff Writer

Staff/John Thelander

Roger Trenary, instructor of economics, lectures to students during an Economics I class in Waters Hall. Trenary has won numerous awards for his teaching and was recently voted by students as one of the most popular and well-liked instructors on campus.

His office, like many professors', is cluttered. Piles of papers, stacks of magazines and books spill onto chairs and file cabinets.

The man is Roger Trenary, instructor in economics.

"In many ways, economics really isn't a practical field. It teaches you all you need to know about running a country," Trenary said. "And there aren't that many countries looking for leaders."

For students, it may be fortunate that Trenary has not found a country desiring his services. During the past eight years, Trenary has taught hundreds of students the basics of supply and demand curves.

Although learning economic theory is important, Trenary said he teaches students that economics isn't just a bunch of theories. It is important in everyday life. It is reality.

"I try to show why what we learn in class is important to them," Trenary said. "I talk about current events and try to show them why what they are learning is worthwhile. I challenge people to think."

Challenge is the key word.

Trenary is known by many students as an instructor who makes students work.

"But I'm not sure having a reputation as a hard teacher is so bad," Trenary said.

"People who want an easy class know that they shouldn't be in my classes," he said. "People who are serious about economics, about learning, know that I'll challenge them."

In Trenary's classes, students compete against each other for an A grade. It takes a lot of work, and the tests are difficult, according to Trenary's students.

"I don't give cheap A's in my classes" Trenary said.

Although Trenary's standards are high, he must be giving students what they want.

In a recent Manhattan Mercury poll, students voted Trenary one of the most popular and well-liked professors on campus.

This was not the first time students have honored him. In 1982, he was selected as the outstanding instructor in the College of Arts and Sciences. In the fall of 1983, he was given an award by the Department of Economics which resulted in a salary bonus.

The award was established when a donor left the department a sum of money. The yearly interest from this money is added to the recipient's salary.

"I like what I do," Trenary said. "Students care more than we give them credit for. And they know when a teacher is not doing his job."

Trenary said he believes instructors must make material relevant to students and help them take an interest in the world around them.

He also said he believes students seem to be too interested in material things and making money. Trenary said he isn't against making money, but he is concerned with what he calls "the narrowness of student ideas."

"Students need to be more aware of the world around them. What bothers me is that they don't have an opinion," Trenary said. "They don't think."

When Trenary gives students advice, he tells them to develop interests in areas other than just their major. He encourages them to take classes such as art, music and literature. And he advises students to take advantage of special events such as Landon Lectures.

Trenary, who received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Wayne State University in Detroit, Mich., studied both political science and accounting before deciding on an economics major.

"Don't just study the practical things," Trenary said. "Classes such as art and music might not be practical, but they help you develop an interest in the world around you."

In keeping with the Santa-Cali-Gon Days celebration of the Santa Fe, California and Oregon trails, Reagan spoke from the side of a covered wagon in front of a sign which read "Blazing a Trail for Tax Reform."

Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft deemed the president a "trail boss" and Independence Mayor Barbara Potts referred to him as "Mr. Trailblazer."

Money

$7 million, solicit $7.1 million from individual contributors and collect $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Student fee payments to date total $1.9 million. When that amount is subtracted from the $7 million total student cost of the coliseum, $5.1 million remains to be financed.

The University would prefer to apply $2.7 million of the $3.4 million reserve to the coliseum project and reduce the student-bond issuance to $2.4 million. That action would leave approximately $700,000 to be allocated by student senate this semester.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said he believes the $2.7 million reserve contribution for the coliseum and the $700,000 offered to student senate are "optimum numbers." Miller did not indicate what he meant by optimum.

"President (Duane) Acker, Dr. Miller and the administration felt that since it was student funds, it should revert back to the students," Jones said.

After the administration made that decision, Jones said, he and Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and student body president, were informed the money was available.

"Basically, they said 'you can do with it what you want' with Acker's, the Board of Regents' and (the Legislature's) approval," Jones said.

During the summer an ad hoc committee consisting of Jones, Brown, Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities, and Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for student affairs, discussed ways in which the money could be spent.

The committee has two criteria for alternatives, Jones said. Committee members believe the money should be used for large, non-recurring special projects.

First, it is the intent that the money not be used to fund existing programs or groups that currently receive student activity fee funding. The money should be used to fund a special, University-wide project, he said.

Second, it should not be used for projects or programs that should be the responsibility of the Legislature.

"One idea is to use the money for (Farrell) Library. However, Dean (of Libraries Brice) Hobrock was against using the money for requisitions or daily operations," Jones said. "He felt that these were (the Legislature's) responsibility."

Other ideas that have received support from the committee are renovating Holton Hall in one phase instead of several to save money; a one-time allocation to the library for upgrading purposes or funding for a special project; an initial investment in the scholarship program's drive this fall to set up a Student Governing Association scholarship.

Additional options include an adviser of the year award set up in conjunction with the colleges and the outstanding faculty award, and an initial student investment to begin a fund-raising drive for a museum/art building.

Jones said the Holton Hall renovation idea has received the most support so far. Plans for the renovation began in 1981 and student senate passed a bill approving the plans in the spring of 1982.

The project is being planned in three stages. Phase one is scheduled to begin during the 1986-87 school year, phase two during the 1990-91 school year and phase three during 1993-95. The estimated cost for the project is approximately $780,000, said Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development. Students are currently paying $3 per semester to finance the project.

The advantages to renovating Holton in one phase are many, Nolting said.

"There's the convenience of having it all done at once," he said. "Also, the three-phase plan is subject to inflationary costs. We could conceivably save $100,000 (if the project were done in one phase) and that's a conservative estimate."

Nolting said renovating Holton in one phase would probably take four to six months if it were done during the spring and summer of 1986.

Student Senate Executive Committee has already been briefed about the funds and student senators will be told details about the money at the first fall semester senate meeting at 7 p.m. Sept. 5 in the Union Big Eight room.

Senate will hear a report about the funds at its Sept. 12 meeting from John A. Moore, University controller. Moore is responsible for University expenditures.

Jones said he plans to set up a Student Bond Refinancing Ad Hoc Committee to go through the existing ideas and any ideas students bring forth.

The committee is tentatively scheduled to include five senators and three at-large members from the student body. Jones is also tentatively scheduled to chair the committee because of his prior involvement with the issue.

Jones said the administration has yet to place any restrictions on the money except that it is considered state money and must be used according to state guidelines.

This summer's committee has already received additonal ideas, Jones said, some of which are feasible.

All ideas from students are welcome as long as they are presented in writing, he said. The deadline for submitting ideas has not been set, although the senate ad hoc committee is expected to present its recommendations to senate on Oct. 24.

"We're (student senate) excited about it," Jones said. "Student senate's never done anything like this before. It's unique. It shows the administration respects the students. They (administration) could just as easily have taken that money and done something with it and we would have never known about it."

Lynn Standerwick, Kansas City, Mo., holds a sign at President Ronald Reagan's Monday speech in Independence, Mo., proclaiming her belief that "Rambo," a fictional war hero, is a member of the Republican Party.

Reagan invokes spirit of Rambo

By Staff and Wire Reports

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — President Reagan drew crowd cheers Monday when he invoked once again the name of the movie hero "Rambo" in his speech appealing for support of the administration's tax revision plan.

"Rambo," a film starring Sylvester Stallone, is about a highly trained Vietnam veteran who single-handedly rescues a group of Americans who had been held prisoner in Southeast Asia long after the war ended.

Reagan's reference to the movie protagonist, which had not been included in his prepared text, came after he declared that "I'm back, and rarin' to go, up for the battle — that has only just begun."

Then, to cheering from the crowd estimated at 5,000 to 10,000 people, the president added:

"In fact, when I think of all the good people who've pleaded with the federal government for years to clean up our tax structure, I am reminded of a recent, very popular movie — and in the spirit of Rambo, let me tell you we're going to win this time."

Reagan previously alluded to Rambo on June 30 while waiting to address the nation from the White House Oval Office, following the release of 39 Americans held hostage in Beirut after the hijacking of a TWA jetliner.

On that occasion, the president joked that "after seeing 'Rambo' last night, I know what to do the next time this happens."

Signs in reference to the president's past allusions to Rambo were in evidence Monday. One onlooker carried a sign in protest reading "Some people just can't seem to let go of Vietnam." Another sign stated "Progress is a Live POW."

Judy Lowery, 40, of Excelsior Springs, Mo., expressed her feelings by waving a sign proclaiming, "Rambo is a Republican." The wife of a Vietnam veteran, she said she attended the event to bring attention to those soldiers still listed as missing in action.

Nicaraguans fail to receive fund pledges

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nicaraguan refugees got only a tiny fraction of the $219,525 taken in on their behalf at an April fund-raising dinner featuring a speech by President Reagan, according to an internal audit.

The Nicaraguan Refugee Fund, which received direct White House help in arranging the April 15 event, said costs totaled $218,376, including $116,938 in consulting fees and $71,163 to feed the nearly 700 people at the $250- to $500-a-plate dinner.

From the dinner and other revenues, the fund spent $3,000 to ship relief supplies to refugees in Central America.

The audit follows an earlier disclosure that the refugee fund was started a year ago with the secret involvement of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force.

The democratic force, or FDN, is the largest U.S.-backed rebel army fighting to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist government.

Fund officials said that the audit reveals no money has gone to the rebels. Consultants, however, received over half the money.

According to the fund's internal audit, the dinner's consultant costs included $13,000 for "fundraising"; $9,688 for "publicity"; $61,250 for "consultant termination fees"; and $33,000 for "consultant fees."

Michael Schoor, a fund attorney, said the chief reason the dinner did not raise significant amounts for the refugees was the failure of many people to live up to their donation commitments.

"If the outstanding pledges came in, it would be a marvelous success," Schoor said, estimating that those pledges total about $80,000.

Joseph Luman, the fund's general counsel, said, "we're disappointed in the numbers" in the draft audit.

Auto safety group seeks investigation of '84-'85 Ford cars

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An automobile safety group said Monday it is asking the government to investigate and recall 1.4 million 1984-85 Ford Motor Co. cars that allegedly are prone to sudden acceleration and engine surges.

"The sudden acceleration condition occurs spontaneously and without warning, causing cars to shoot forward at a high rate of speed from a standstill," the Center for Auto Safety said. "The engine surge causes cars to suddenly speed up and race down the road when the owners are driving at normal highway speeds."

The center asked National Highway Traffic Safety Administrator Diane Steed to open a full defect investigation into the alleged problem, and to order the recall of all defective cars as soon as possible.

The request covers full- and mid-size Ford cars with fuel-injected 3.8 and 5.0 liter engines. The center cited 50 reports of sudden acceleration and surging, including 18 accidents and seven injuries, which is said constitute "frightening evidence that conditions described in Ford bulletins are widespread and dangerous."

Ford spokesman Jerald terHorst said the automaker believes "there is no safety-related defect in approximately 1.4 million cars about which the Center for Auto Safety claims to know of only 50 complaints."

The center's recall request covers the 1984-85: Ford Thunderbird, LTD, Crown Victoria, and Mustang, as well as the Mercury Marquis, Cougar, Grand Marquis, Capri and Colony Park.

Volume defines regional expressions

New dictionary clarifies 'calf-slobber'

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — There are Texans who call meringue "calf-slobber," Tennesseans who refer to snoring as "calling the hogs" and Wisconsinites who say a suspicious person has "beans up his nose."

Some New Jersey residents suffer "buckwheat itch," supposedly from eating panckaes in summer. In Virginia and North Carolina, firecrackers are called "baby-wakers." To be bow-legged in Kentucky is to be "bandy-shanked."

Those folk expressions and thousands like them now can be found in one place, the Dictionary of American Regional English, which took nearly 100 years from conception to publication.

The first volume of the dictionary, edited by Frederic G. Cassidy, professor emeritus at the University of Wisconsin and head of its DARE Institute, recently was published by Harvard University Press and will soon be in bookstores. For $49.95, you get 903 pages covering "a" through "c."

This volume, and four more expected over the next several years, are the results of the first compilation of the quaint, funny, sad, melodious and vulgar strains in American speech.

"You get a sense sometimes that people were trying to outdo each other in coming up with colorful expressions," said Cassidy, 77.

Food, for example, spawned expressions such as "Cape Cod turkey" for codfish, "Albany beef" for sturgeon, "Connecticut River pork" for shad, "Alaska turkey" for salmon and "Arkansas T-bone" for bacon.

There are scores of local names for fauna and flora, such as the black-eyed Susan which yielded 50 different names. There is the language of children's games, foreign phrases, illnesses and natural phenomena.

There are euphemisms, such as calling an illegitimate child a "catch colt" in parts of the Northwest or warning a woman in the South that her slip is showing by saying her "cotton is low."

There are etymologies. "Cakewalk" or "piece of cake," meaning something easy, has its roots in black dance contests that featured a cake as first prize. Pioneers made buttons from sycamore trees, so they naturally called it "buttonwood."

The dictionary also captured words fading from the language. Examples include "old chestnuts," to Northeasterners something that is worn out by use, and the much more remote "batterfang," to assail violently in Davy Crockett's day.

The dictionary's foundation is the more than 40,000 expressions culled from local publications by the American Dialect Society, founded in 1889. That work was expanded by Cassidy, whose assistants conducted 1,847-question surveys in 1,002 communities from 1965 to 1970.

The project got started in earnest when Cassidy began badgering the society to make good on its promise to publish such a dictionary.

"I kept asking when it was going to be done. They asked me how to do it. I wrote an article for them on how I would do it ... and then found myself appointed editor," said Cassidy. That was 1963, and he and Professor Audrey R. Duckert of the University of Massachusetts set to work.

For example, readers will find some of the more than 300 answers given when asked for the name of a countrified person. Those include, "swamp angel," "goober-grabber," "apple-knocker," "mossback" and "hayseed."

Among the nearly 170 names for dustballs that form under furniture are "house moss," "difflewuzz," "woolies," "bunny-tails" and "collywobbles."

Jewelry, cash stolen; value exceeds $1,000

A home on Manhattan's south side was recently broken into and more than $1,000 worth of jewelry and cash stolen.

Sometime on Friday, July 19, or Saturday, July 20, an unknown person or persons kicked in the basement window on the north side of the home at 313 S. Manhattan Ave. The party stole jewelry from a bedroom dresser and pried open a filing cabinet.

Among the items stolen were a woman's gold-tone analog watch, Navajo bracelet with coral highlights approximately 1-1/4 inches wide, silver and turquoise ring and a jade and diamond ring.

The Riley County Police Department has no information on possible suspects.

Stanford lures student with use of rare violin

By The Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif. — Colleges always promote their assets to attract desirable students, but Stanford University used a precious perk to lure a special young woman.

Kathryn Pearson, 17, a straight-A honors student, record-breaking athlete and concert violinist, picked the school over Harvard, Princeton and the University of California at Berkeley after Stanford said it would let her practice on its Stradivarius violin.

Princeton cried foul.

"Who would have thought that 'reputable' Stanford would outflank us by zinging in a perk that tipped the scales?" Tom McCann, an insurance man from Petaluma, Calif., who tried to recruit Pearson, wrote in the Princeton Alumni Weekly. "Personal use of a Stradivarius for four years. I ask you, is that sporting?"

Pearson, who is to register as a freshman at Stanford this month, was a concert mistress of the San Francisco Youth Symphony at age 16 and a member of the World Youth Symphony. She set league records in the 400-meter and 800-meter runs and in the high jump.

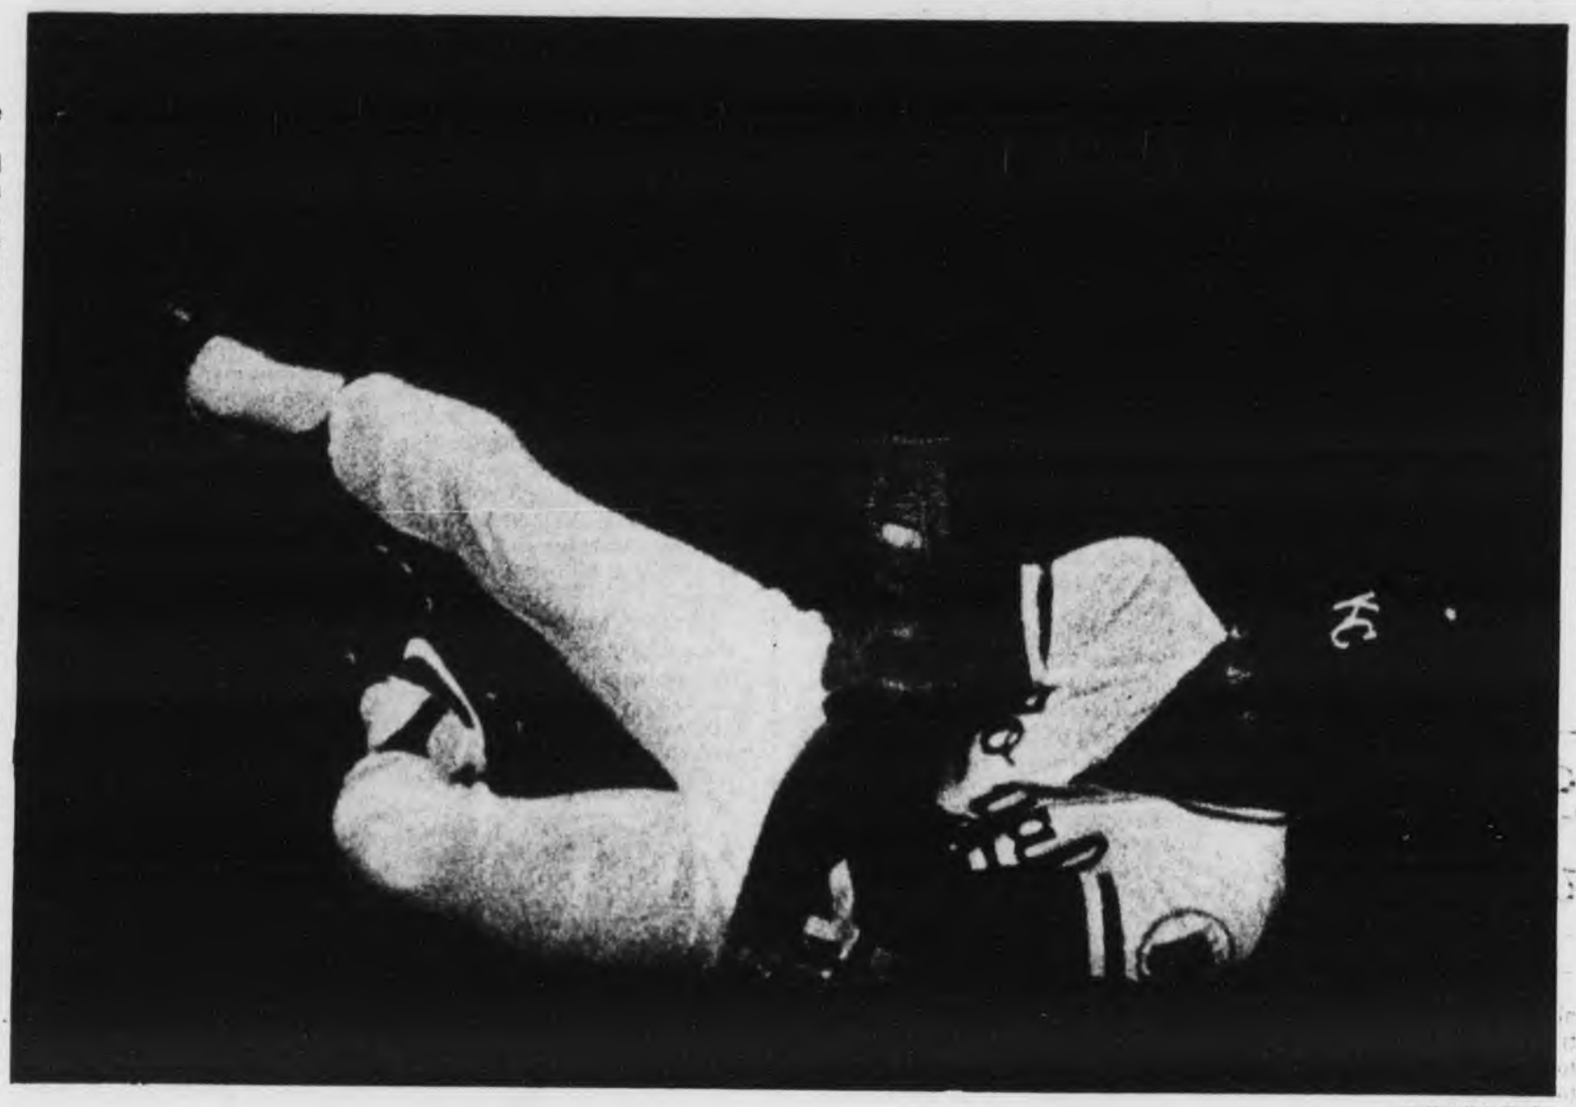
Royals down Chicago



By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett and Hal McRae hit solo home runs and Mark Gubicza allowed four hits over 7 2/3 innings Monday night as the Kansas City Royals posted a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

The victory snapped a three-game losing streak for the Royals and kept them 2½ games behind front-running California in the American League West.

The Royals jumped to a 1-0 lead when McRae hit his 12th home run leading off the second inning. Brett led off the fourth with his 23rd home run, then with one out Steve Balboni and Darryl Motley hit consecutive doubles for a 3-1 lead.

Gubicza, 11-7, pitched out of bases-loaded jams in the third and sixth innings. Dan Quisenberry got the final four outs for his 31st save.

Staff/Jeff A. Taylor

Kansas City Royals' centerfielder Lynn Jones makes a diving catch of Chicago White Sox batter Bryan Little's bases-loaded fly ball to end the third inning Monday at Royals Stadium. Jones replaced Willie Wilson, who may be out of action for two weeks due to a penicillin reaction.

Wilson out with injury

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Center fielder Willie Wilson was operated on Monday for pain and swelling in his buttocks and could be sidelined up to three weeks, the Kansas City Royals announced.

Wilson, who has won American League batting as well as stolen base championships, received an injection for a cold on Saturday from the Texas Rangers team physician, Dr. B.J. Mycoskie.

Wilson underwent surgery on Monday at St. Luke's Hosital in Kansas City to relieve pressure and swelling in the left buttock, the Royals said.

Dr. Paul Meyer, the Royals team physician, said a three-inch incision was made at the point of the penicillin injection.

"We found a small amount of blood around the point of the injection," Meyer said. "No additional blood was encountered. It is our opinion that the swelling of the gluteal muscle was a reaction to the penicillin injection. We have put Wilson on antibiotics and hope he will be ready to play in about two weeks."

The Royals entered Monday night's game against the Chicago White Sox trailing first-place California by three games in the American League West. Wilson, the Royals' leadoff batter, was hitting .285 with 40 RBIs. Lynn Jones, a reserve outfielder, has been moved into center field, said Manager Dick Howser. Left fielder Lonnie Smith will be moved to the leadoff spot.

"We're going to have to get by without him for three weeks. There's no sense in me sitting here worrying about it," Howser said. "He's the starter for our offense, but now someone else is going to have to do it."

Football team has the clout; now it needs the tradition

TODD NIGHSWONGER
Sports Editor

This season K-State free safety Barton Hundley begins his fifth year in the Wildcat program.

Hundley is one of the few players in the 1985 edition who has seen Coach Jim Dickey's redshirt program develop since its genesis in 1981.

The redshirt plan, which began by redshirting 22 players (including eight starters from the 1980 season), was implemented in hopes of establishing a winning football program at K-State.

By redshirting, a player would get an extra year to learn the system, get in shape and lift weights. Thus, a redshirt player would get five years to play four. And for the last three years, Dickey said, the Wildcats have redshirted "everybody we could possibly get by with."

Hundley, Dickey and just about anyone who has ever played for or followed K-State football were not only tired of losing but were tired of losing by large margins. Those humiliating defeats to the likes of the University of Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska hurt no one more than the players.

"It's just so frustrating because it seems like everything you do is done for nothing," Hundley said.

So Dickey decided to take a chapter out the the Nebraska Cornhuskers' redshirt program. It was a bold move no K-State coach before Dickey had ever tried.

Now, four years later, the redshirt plan has had a chance to get on its own two feet. And if ever there would be a good time for the plan to pay off, it would be this season.

The redshirt plan, according to Dickey, has given K-State the most depth in his eight years as the Wildcats' coach.

"I feel better about our depth than any time since I've been here at K-State," Dickey said. "We have several positions where our No. 1 individual and the alternate are very close."

What the redshirt program has done at K-State is produce several fifth-year seniors and fourth-year juniors.

"We have just as many or more fourth- and fifth-year players as we did when we went to the Independence Bowl," Hundley said, comparing the 1982 season when K-State went 6-4-1 to earn its first bowl berth in the school's history.

"My freshman year we didn't have near as many good athletes as this year," Hundley added. "We've got better athletes now. Hopefully, all this experience that we've got is going to carry over onto the field."

But will the redshirting plan ever be established enough to consistently produce a winning football team?

After 3-8 and 3-7-1 records the last two years, some have called the 1982 season a fluke. But why do they feel that way? Because of tradition — K-State football teams are supposed to lose.

An attitude like that is just what K-State's football program doesn't need. Just because the Wildcats have had 25 winning seasons in the team's 89 years of existence — including two winning seasons in the last 30 years — is no reason to assume a winning tradition can't be started.

Believe it or not, from 1941 through 1961, the Nebraska football team had losing seasons 17 times. Even Texas Christian University, which before 1984 last enjoyed a winning season in 1971 and has had three winning seasons in the last 24 years, went 8-4 last year and is expected to win again this year.

"Expected to win" is the key phrase. When a team is expected to win, it often does win. Even K-State fans know that.

In 1982, the second year of the redshirt program, K-State was expected to win and they did. Because of all the talk about holding out 22 players and eight starters, the Wildcats weren't expected to win in 1981 and they didn't.

But when taking a closer look back at the '81 season, K-State went 2-9 but could have gone 6-5 with a few breaks. Of the nine losses, four were by no more than a touchdown, including a one-point loss to Drake University and three-point losses to the Universities of Kansas and Colorado.

But teams that are supposed to lose don't seem to get the breaks. In 1982, K-State got the breaks.

Jim Wacker, TCU's head coach, established a deep-seated belief in his players last year that "they really could win." Dickey was able to do that here in 1982. The players believed they could win and they did.

But did the fans believe K-State could win? Some say that Dickey, who is in the last year of his contract, should be fired if K-State has anything less than a winning record this season.

But the bottom line is tradition. No coach can win without tradition. And no individual can establish tradition by himself. Everyone involved with the athletic program — administrators, coaches, players, students and fans — must help build a winner.

Instead of firing Dickey, let's get rid of K-State's poor football tradition in favor of a new, winning tradition.

Kremer, three others cut as Chiefs meet roster limit

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nose tackle Ken Kremer, a seven-year veteran with the Kansas City Chiefs, was among four players waived Monday as the club reached the National Football League limit of 45 players.

Also waived were third-string quarterback Sandy Osieki, offensive lineman Scott Auer and rookie fullback Chris Smith.

Kremer was a part-time starter with the Chiefs since being drafted in the seventh round out of Ball State.

The Chiefs also announced they had waived rookie wide receiver Andy Hill of Missouri off the injured reserve list. Hill suffered a hamstring pull in the preseason.

McEnroe advances to U.S. Open quarterfinals

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Sweden's Joakim Nystrom knocked off Wimbledon champion Boris Becker Monday, advancing to the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships and dashing the anticipated meeting between Becker and top-seeded John McEnroe.

McEnroe, the defending champion, fulfilled his part earlier in the day by stopping 16th-seeded Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 7-5, 6-2.

But Nystrom, seeded 10th, eliminated the 17-year-old, eighth-seeded "wunderkind" with his relentless, accurate ground game. Becker, however, did not go down without a fight, staving off five match points before succumbing 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

Another Swede, No. 8 Anders Jarryd, also reached the quarterfinals as he ousted No. 13 Tim Mayotte 7-6, 7-6, 6-4.

In the women's singles, top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd and defending champion Martina Navratilova led a stampede of the favorites into the quarterfinals.

Lloyd crushed Robin White 6-2, 6-4 after Navratilova fought off No. 13 Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden 6-4, 7-5.

No. 3 Hana Mandlikovza of Czechoslovakia, No. 4 Pam Shriver, No. 5 Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, No. 6 Zina Garrison and No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia also reached the round of eight.

Mandlikova eliminated Kathy Jordan 7-5, 3-6, 6-1; Shriver stopped Alycia Moulton 6-2, 6-4; Kohde-Kilsch outlasted No. 12 Wendy Turnbull of Australia 5-7, 7-5, 6-2; Garrison crushed Kate Gompert 6-3, 6-2; and Sukova ousted No. 15 Carling Bassett of Canada 4-6, 7-6, 7-5.

Becker boomed 20 aces and 24 service winners. Nystrom had only two aces.

But it was Nystrom — who lost to Becker at Wimbledon and the ATP Championships — who found the hardcourts surface at the National Tennis Center more to his liking. And the baseliner opened up his full barrage of passing shots and lobs

Universities will increase drug testing

By The Associated Press

Quarterbacks, point guards and even cheerleaders at more than 50 major colleges will be tested for drugs this year as schools crack down on the use of illegal narcotics and performance-enhancing substances.

Most small colleges responding to an Associated Press survey said the cost of such tests were prohibitive, but major schools apparently have decided that the need to assure a "clean" athletic program is worth the price.

"It would appear to me that most institutions have been initiating drug education programs because of the widespread acceptance of the fact that drugs are being used," said John Toner, athletic director at the University of Connecticut and a former president of the NCAA. "Following the example of the United States Olympic Committee, colleges are coming to realize that testing is part of the education program."

The AP asked athletic departments at 38 colleges and universities nationwide if their athletes were tested for drug use. Twenty-eight said drug-testing programs were in effect or would be in effect by the end of September. Several others said they were studying drug-testing proposals.

Toner, who heads a committee looking into mandatory drug tests for all NCAA schools, said last week that 50-60 Division I schools were conducting some form of drug tests on athletes. Division I is made up of the biggest members of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Toner also said his committee would recommend to the NCAA's policy-making Council next month that drug tests be required at all championships and postseason football games. He did not reveal details of the proposed tests.

The AP survey found that some major schools are using voluntary drug tests, others are picking the test subjects at random and still others are requiring everyone in the athletic program to be examined.

"Every athlete, every coach and every coaching staff member in every sport will be periodically checked during the season," said the sports information director at one of the hard-line schools, Jim Vruggink of Purdue. "Every sport is involved. Every person with direct contact to the sport, including, I think, even the cheerleaders."

Another school with a tough anti-drug stance is Florida State. Participation is not only mandatory, but the football players are required to take the tests naked, to prevent players from concealing a container of urine from someone who hasn't been taking drugs.

Schools generally don't start serious punishment of an athlete until the second or third offense. If a test comes out positive once, counseling is the most frequent response, and sometimes parents are informed of the athlete's problem.

Suspensions of a week or a month are common for second positive tests, with suspensions of a year or more, or permanent dismissal, commonly assessed after a third or fourth offense.

Most of the tests are designed to uncover use of "street drugs," such as marijuana, amphetamines, cocaine and opiates. Most of the schools said the cost of testing for steroids and other performance enhancing drugs is too high — about $100 per test — to use regularly.

Hernandez and Parker may appear in drug trial

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Several of baseball's best-known players, including Dave Parker of the Cincinnati Reds and Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets, may be called away from their teams during the pennant races this week to testify in the federal drug trial of a former clubhouse caterer.

Curtis Strong, 38, of Philadelphia, faces 16 cocaine distribution counts beginning today in a trial in which players are likely to be asked to detail under oath how extensive the cocaine problem is in major league baseball.

U.S. Attorney J. Alan Johnson, in papers filed last Friday before U.S. District Judge Gustave Diamond, said nine current players and one former player may be called to testify. All received immunity from prosecution in return for the testimony before a federal grand jury.

Federal sources, speaking only on the condition they not be named, said an undisclosed number of players were asked by the grand jury from whom they purchased cocaine, the dates and approximate times of the deals and the location.

The indictment against Strong contends the bulk of his cocaine sales were made to the Pirates, Phillies, San Francisco Giants, Montreal Expos, St. Louis Cardinals and Houston Astros.

ATHENS, Ga. — Mike Shula threw a 17-yard touchdown pass to Al Bell with 16 seconds remaining to lift Alabama to a 20-16 Southeastern Conference victory over Georgia in a game of wild comebacks Monday night.

Alabama, which had led most of the way before falling behind on a blocked punt with 50 seconds left, had no timeouts when it started a 70-yard drive.

Shula, son of Miami Dolphins Coach Don Shula, connected with Greg Richarson for 16 yards, Bell for 26 and Richardson again for 12, before finding Bell alone at the Georgia 3 on the 17-yard scoring play.

Freshman Terri Webster blocked a punt in the final minute and junior Calvin Ruff pounced on it for a touchdown to give Georgia a short-lived lead.

King takes fifth LPGA victory

By The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Betsy King birdied five holes on the back nine Monday to break out of a tight pack and claim a two-stroke victory over Janet Anderson in the LPGA Rail Charity Classic.

King, the 1984 LPGA Player of the Year, made pars on the first nine holes before her birdie spree started. She finished with an 11-under-par 205 in the 54-hole tournament.

"I was hitting the ball well all day," said King, 30, Limekiln, Pa. "It was just going to be a matter of whether I could sink any putts. Once you make a couple, you fee like you're going to sink some more."

Chris Johnson, the leader after the first and second rounds of the three-day tournament, tied for eighth, five shots behind King.

The victory was the fifth of King's nine-year career, all in the past three seasons.

Telethon tops $33 million; MD pledges hit new mark

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The star-studded 20th annual Jerry Lewis muscular dystrophy telethon raised more than $33 million Monday, the largest amount ever in the history of the Labor Day weekend event to fight neuromuscular disease.

The $33,181,652 raised across the country in the 22½ hour "Jerry Lewis Supershow" surpassed by $1.1 million the record of $32,074,566 set last year.

In addition to the $33 million pledged Monday, an estimated $50 million poured in throughout the year from corporate and civic sponsors nationwide.

Lewis said he expected the entire year's donations to exceed last year's total of $81.6 million.

Gifts pledged by corporations and organizations included $7.5 million from the Southland Corp. and $5 million from the International Association of Firefighters.

Hundreds of people crowded into a sports pavillion at Caesars Palace resort and joined Lewis in cheering as a tote board recorded the $33 million.

Lewis then ended his part of the telethon by singing his traditional closing number "You'll Never Walk Alone," which he dedicated to "all of my kids." The telethon ended at 3:30 p.m.

The telethon, inaugurated in New York City in 1966, was telecast over nearly 200 stations this year. The A.C. Neilsen Co. estimated that 96 million Americans watched all or part of the show last year.

Lewis, who has been MDA national chairman for 31 years, was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977 for his work.

The money raised for the association helps support MDA's worldwide research effort and a national network of some 240 hospital-affiliated clinics.

6 die in apartment fire

Authorities investigate arson

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Authorities searched for clues Monday to a deliberately set fire that raged through a northeast Kansas City apartment building, killing six and injuring six others, including one critically.

Arson investigators called to the scene of the early morning fire at the three-story brick structure said Monday the blaze was set by an arsonist. Authorities were offering a $5,000 reward for information leading to an arrest and conviction.

Kansas City Fire Department spokesman Harold Knabe said the 2 a.m. fire started at the rear of the building on the first floor. He declined to say how the fire was started.

The victims were identified as: Russell T. Young, 62; Kevin R. Fisher, 27; Jerry L. Bratcher, 31; Truman G. Cobb, 31; Mary M. Scott, 32; and Mildred E. Caldwell, 69.

Knabe said all six were found on the top floor of the building and apparently died from smoke inhalation.

One man, David O'Brien, 22, was listed in critical condition at the Truman Medical Center in Kansas City with second-degree burns over 40 percent of his body, said hospital supervisor Charles Poynter.

Francis Anderson, 24, was listed in serious condition with injuries suffered while jumping from the building, Poynter said. Two others, Sherrie Smith, 30, and Deborah Anderson, 29, were in fair condition.

Bonnie and Rick Elliot were taken to University Hospital in Kansas City and were listed in satisfactory condition, a hospital spokeswoman said.

A resident of the building ran to a major fire station about one block from the building and pounded on the door to alert firefighters about 1:59 a.m., Knabe said.

The building was engulfed in flames and several of the building's 20 residents were hanging from the windows attempting to escape when firemen arrived, according to Knabe.

Raymond Hatfield said he was watching the Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon and was leaving the building to make a pledge when he opened his first-floor apartment door and saw "all kinds of smoke."

"I started yelling, 'Wake up! The place is on fire. Let's get out of here,'" said Hatfield, 32.

Pee-Wee emerges with style; takes off on a big adventure

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

When first seen, Pee-Wee Herman could strike the viewer as the kind of comedian best taken in small doses — very small doses. His guest shots on "Late Night with David Letterman" have been just brief enough that he could be funny before starting to grate on the nerves.

Film Review

A whole movie about him should have been excruciating, like fingernails on a chalkboard. But surprise, "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" is one of the year's funniest movies.

"Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" is a savvy piece of Hollywood movie-making. It's definitely a piece of fluff. It celebrates fluffdom, and it does so with a lot of vigor.

The movie begins as Pee-Wee dreams about winning Le Tour de France, the famous bicycle race. This is a good indication of what's to follow because, like "Revenge of the Nerds," in this movie nerds will emerge well-admired and victorious. The message is clear: It's OK to be different, to not be one of the beautiful people with golden tans, brilliant white teeth and clothes from Bloomingdale's.

One doesn't have to look any further than the clothes of today to see that looking stupid is fashionable. (Hawaiian shirts and Bermuda shorts? Give me a break.) Now is the day of the eternal vacationer. Pee-Wee Herman has taken advantage of this trend. He's not really the king of the nerds, but more like their ambassador of goodwill. He's stuck in a pre-adolescent world where guys still hate girls.

It's a '50s time warp where he revels in all the gaudy gimmicks of that time. His most prized possession is his bicycle. It's not a 10-speed or even a five-speed — it's a gleaming red single speed that clatters and jingles as it bounces down the street.

When the bicycle is stolen and takes on the importance of the Holy Grail, Pee-Wee must take off on a cross-country journey to find it. That sounds pretty skimpy plot-wise, but there are so many interesting characters and situations that things never bog down — well, not for long anyway. His wimpy chuckle is really annoying the first 10 minutes, but that is all the script let him do — look goonish and giggle. Once things get rolling, "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" is good fun.

Enrollment

are probably records for KU.

The previous high figure for KU was reported in 1982 when final enrollment was 24,613.

"The continuing pattern of increases, despite national trends to the contrary, reflects the high regard in which the University of Kansas is held," Chancellor Eugene Budig said Wednesday. "We are gratified that students and their parents continue to accord such stature to KU."

While KU is reaching new highs in the enrollment picture, Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, said this might be the bottom of a downward slide for K-State.

"Some may suggest that this is the bottom — that there might be upswings in enrollment next year," he said. "On the other hand, with the economy, it may be a couple of years before there is an upswing."

Koplik said he thinks K-State is responding well to the declining enrollment.

"Ultimately it looks like Kansas State University is facing the dilemma most colleges in the nation are facing," Koplik said. "There is a smaller pool of 18-20 year olds, there is a need for some students to work and there are some who cannot afford school.

"We've got a greater number of people knocking on the doors of the financial aid office. This reflects the economy."

Koplik speculated that the new additions to the administration, the resignation of Acker and publicity about the coliseum had a minimal effect, if any, on enrollment.

"All of those things contribute to people's perceptions of the University," Koplik said. "But I doubt that they had a significant effect..."

Don Foster, University registrar, agreed that the falling number of high school graduates was one of the reasons for K-State's drop in enrollment. He said the agricultural economy may also be responsible for the decline in K-State's enrollment as compared to KU.

"I really don't know why enrollment at KU is not dropping," Foster said. "KU is heavily involved in the health sciences. The health science field is still drawing heavily."

Magazine

poetry for publication.

Of an estimated 1,000 works sent to the editors no more than 40 are accepted. The contents of an issue are planned up to two years in advance.

When a story is submitted, it is read by one or all of the three fiction editors: Schneider; Ben Nyberg, associate professor of English; and John Rees, professor of English. Schneider has worked on the magazine since 1968. Nyberg is currently on sabbatical working on the lead article for The Writer, a national magazine. The story discusses the elements important to an editor as he reviews a piece submitted for publication.

Poetry selections are read by Schneider or W.R. Moses, retired professor of English. Historical pieces are reviewed by Homer Socolofsky, professor of history.

Writers are not paid for publication, but are eligible for a cash award given annually for the best fiction and poetry.

This year the magazine received a $2,000 grant from the Kansas Arts Commission which helps to fund the $3,000 of awards given each year for outstanding works of fiction and poetry as judged by a nationally acclaimed writer. Judges from previous years have included William Inge, John Cheever, John Gardner, Kay Boyle and Gwendolyn Brooks.

Kansas Quarterly also encourages Kansas talent with the Seaton Awards made possible by donations from Richard M. and Mary Holton Seaton of Coffeyville. These awards are given annually for the best work by a Kansas writer.

This year's judges were R.V. Castle, author of "Beyond Goliath," and Marilyn Hacker, winner of the National Book Award. Winners will be announced in the next edition.

cry of "man on floor" before scooting down to the bathroom they share with 19 other women.

"You have to peek out and make sure nobody's out there, and then run down the hall," Sondra said.

"I kind of like the big bathroom," Claudia said. "At home, the bathroom's never open; there's always someone in there."

The roommates' campus life really began with the walk to their first class. Like most other new students, they both located the halls where their classes would meet, but finding the building was only the first step on the freshman campus tour.

"We go in the buildings, and you think you know where you're going," Sondra said. "But you come in one door and go out one you've never seen before, and you're on the wrong side of the building."

Sondra said she has been amazed at all the people stuffing flyers in her hand or asking her to take a survey.

"They're always trying to get you to buy something or go somewhere," she said.

Even so, both Claudia and Sondra are pleased with their decisions to come to K-State.

Sondra said the people seemed friendly and finds that K-State is a good place to receive any kind of an education.

And as Claudia aptly suggested, "some students get the experience of living away from home.

I'm just glad I got somebody nice to live with," she said. "It would be really hard to do anything if you didn't get along."

Blaze causes $400 million damage

By The Associated Press

PASSAIC, N.J. — An arson inspector said Tuesday that children may have started a trash bin fire that spread to dozens of factories and houses, destroying the jobs of 2,200 people and the homes of up to 400.

The fire, declared under control at 1 a.m., caused an estimated $400 million in damage over 40 acres.

One firefighter died of a heart attack, but others suffered only minor injuries.

The blaze dealt a staggering blow to this blue-collar city of 55,000 residents and the neighborhood of Hispanic and Polish immigrants, some of whom lost both their jobs and their homes.

Passaic, typical of the aging industrial cities of the Northeast, has lost prosperous residents to the suburbs and many of its businesses to the South.

But there had been some recovery, with the 25 percent jobless rates of the 1970s falling to below 9 percent in recent months and about 60 small businesses filling the once half-empty factory complex of 100-year-old brick buildings that burned Monday.

Mayor Joseph Lipari said up to 25 percent of the city's industrial base was destroyed as fire roared out of control for about 10½ hours.

Gov. Thomas H. Kean toured the site and promised state aid. The city will also seek federal assistance.

Lipari said the fire was set, and an investigation was under way.

Donald Miller, the fire department arson inspector, said the blaze apparently started in a large metal trash bin.

He said it was reported by a private security guard who had chased children from the area about an hour before seeing the flames.

Miller said the fire appeared to have spread from the garbage bin to a wooden loading dock and up six stories to the eaves of a brick building, which had a sprinkler system that apparently did not work.

At a relief center, worker Emil Yannetti said displaced residents were being given "a few dollars to hold them over" and several insurance company representatives took claims.

The Red Cross housed about 100 people.

"The new immigrants, they have no insurance. They keep everything at home and now they have lost it," said the Rev. John Podgorny of Holy Rosary church.

Wheat enhances efficiency of livestock operations

By SHELLY DICKEN
Collegian Reporter

In increasing numbers Kansas farmers and ranchers are turning to inexpensive wheat to enhance the efficiency of their livestock operations, said an official for the Kansas Wheat Commission.

"It all boils down to price," said Becky Vining, communications director for the Kansas Wheat Commission. "It is a simple supply and demand theory at work. If there is an oversupply, the price will go down. And worldwide, wheat production has increased in the last few years. So the more wheat there is, the more economical it is to use it as feed."

As agribusiness leaders survey the relatively unstable economic condition of Kansas agriculture, some are willing to explore options that might improve the efficiency of their enterprise.

According to the Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service, 444.6 million

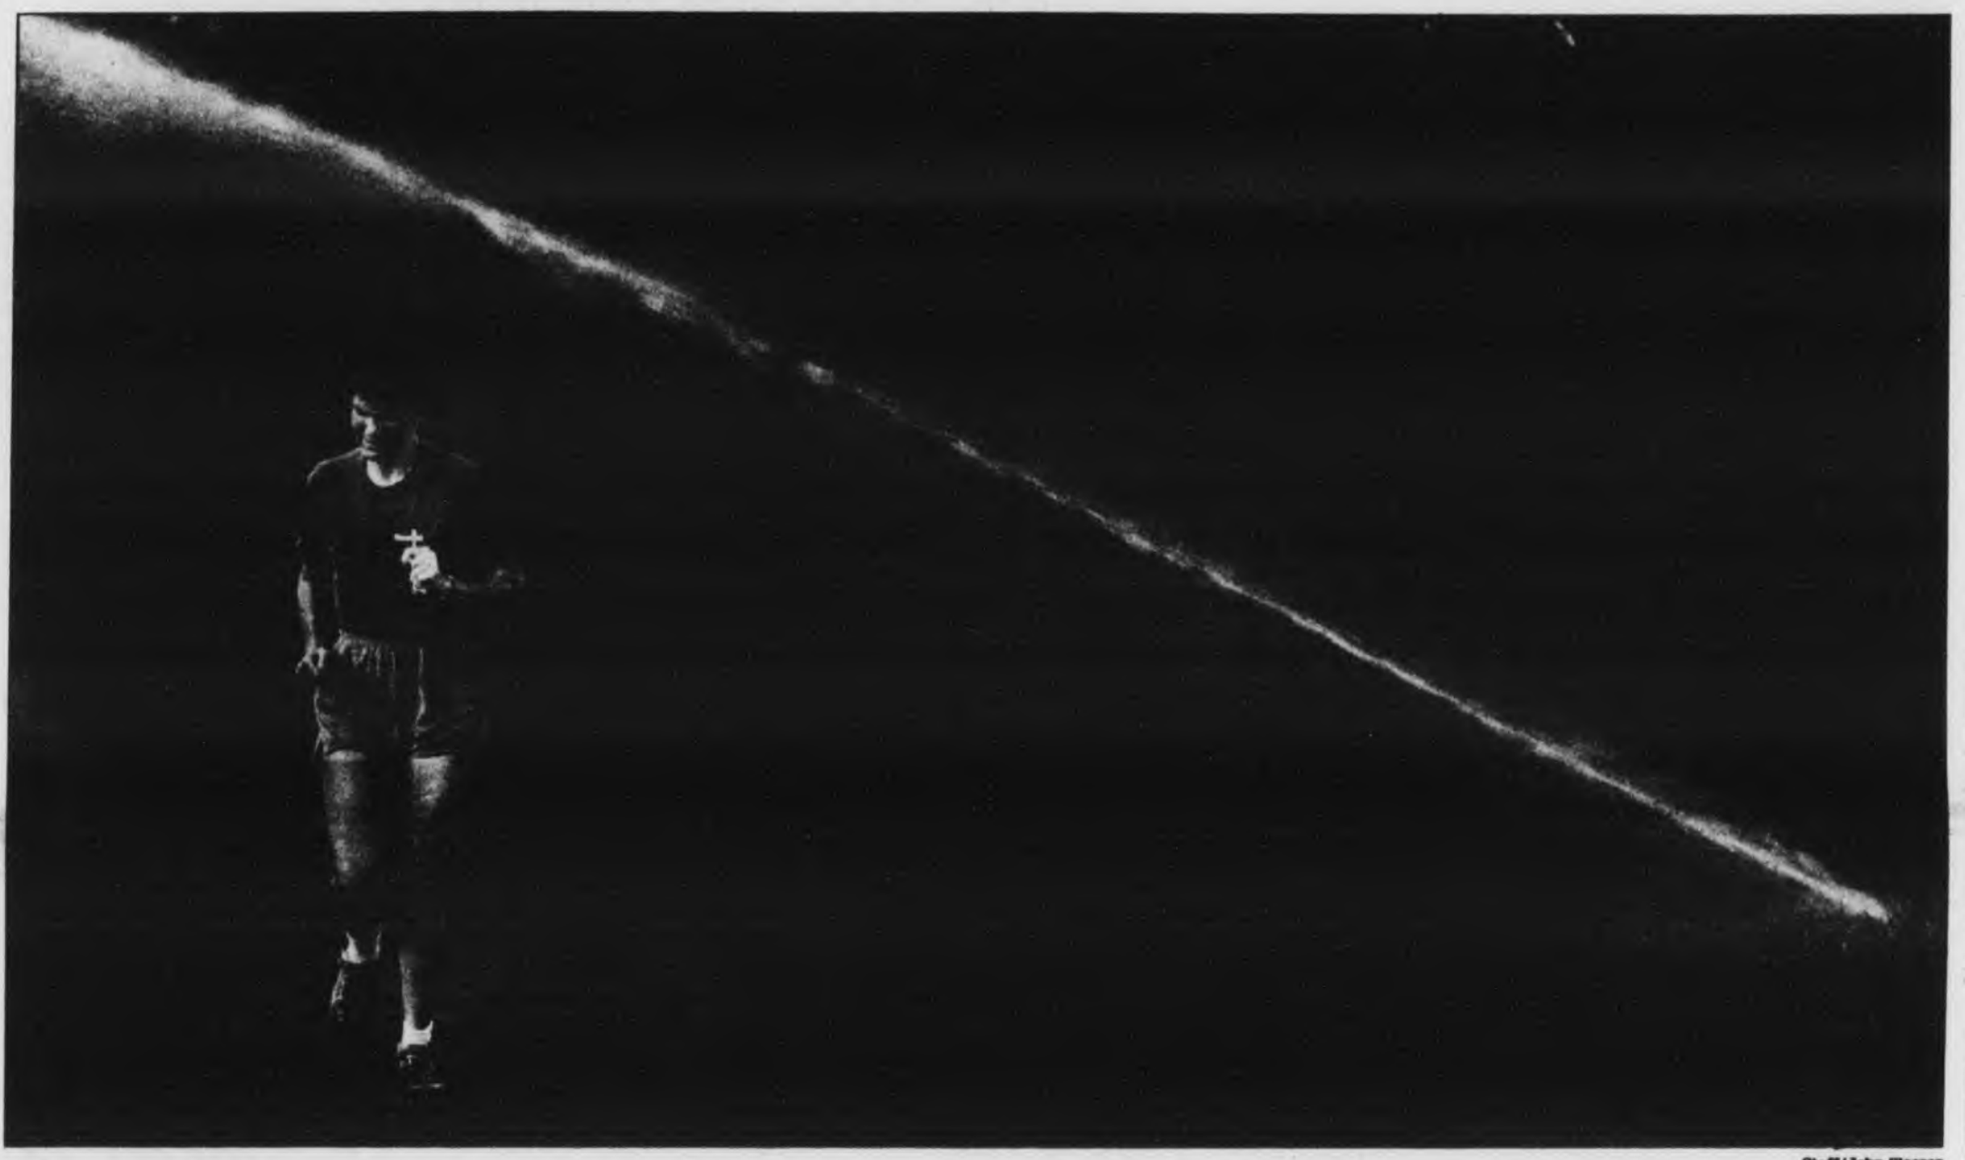
Nuclear plant passes tests; goes on line

By The Associated Press

BURLINGTON — The $3.05 billion Wolf Creek nuclear power plant was put into commercial operation Tuesday, ending a period of extensive tests.

Kansas Gas and Electric Co. spokesman Lyle Koerper said the final pre-operational test, a complete shut down, was performed Aug. 28. He said the past few days since the test were used for maintenance and the removal of test equipment.



See related story Page 9

Koerper said at 1:16 a.m. Tuesday the three utility owners of the plant authorized their power dispatchers to call on Wolf Creek for electricity just as they do other generating units.

Affidavits saying the plant is in commercial operation are being submitted to the Kansas Corporation Commission and the Missouri Public Service Commission. Koerper said those agencies will verify that the requirements for commercial operation have been met.

Since their requests for new rates to pay for Wolf Creek still are pending before the KCC, the plant's three utility owners will continue billing electricity from the nuclear plant at current rates.

The KCC has authorized the utilities to list Wolf Creek ownership and operating expenses in a special accounting file to be considered when a rate decision is made, Koerper said.

Father doubts safety of apartment house

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

In the aftermath of a fire Friday that resulted in first- and second-degree burns to a K-State student, the father of another K-State student has raised questions regarding the safety of the building.

Lon Smelser of Topeka said he visited the apartment his daughter, Shannon, graduate in accounting, rented at 1010 Fremont St. on July 31 and August 5.

The conditions Smelser cited included circuit breakers that would shut off when the refrigerator and air conditioner were both operating at the same time; a stove pilot light so high "you could have cooked off the top of it." Smelser said the general condition was "absolutely filthy...not clean by any means."

Reports of the fire, which injured Paul Schanzmeyer, senior in landscape architecture, said the flash fire erupted when fumes from gasoline he was using to strip paint off an apartment's walls were ignited by the pilot light of a gas appliance.

Smelser said he had contacted the Manhattan Code Enforcement Office and American Investments Real Estate, the apartment's management company.

Dan Woelhoff, code department head, said no report was on file for the address other than a 1983 letter regarding trash and debris on the premises.

Pat Scott, manager of American Investments Real Estate, said the property had undergone inspection by the Manhattan Fire Department between four and six weeks before it had been leased.

She also said the apartments may not be up to the standards of a student's home environment, but expenses may not allow a student's housing to match the family home.

"I try to take care of my students," Scott said.

Manhattan Assistant Fire Chief Glen Wilkinson, who also serves as the city's fire marshall, said the property had last been inspected May 21, 1985. He said there were some "minor problems," but nothing in serious violation.

Wilkinson said the building needed more smoke detectors and fire extinguishers, but he said the fire last Friday was due to "the careless use of gasoline." He said the violations, which American Investments Real Estate were in the process of coming into compliance with, "had nothing to do with this fire."

Students leave school, protest in riots

Police barricade 8 black townships

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Students abandoned black schools near Johannesburg and rioted around Cape Town on Tuesday, one year after bloody rent protests set off a tide of violence against white rule that has cost more than 650 lives.

Police and troops sealed off eight black townships, including the two in which the rent protests began Sept. 3, 1984.

The black National Union of Mineworkers said Tuesday night it had "suspended" a two-day-old pay strike against selected gold and coal mines after a gold mine fired 5,000 of its 7,000 workers.

Gold Fields of South Africa said earlier that it was "processing" the workers dismissed from its Deelkraal mine, west of Johannesburg. Mine guards and police fired tear gas to drive strikers away from a heavily guarded dormitory block, where management said 1,400 miners who wanted to work took shelter.

The strike appeared to be crumbling through the day. Managements said only two gold mines remained struck, Deelkraal and the General Mining Corp. operation at Marievale.

In announcing the suspension, the union said it was seeking a court injunction to stop management from sending dismissed miners back to impoverished black homelands. It said Marievale already had sent 300 miners home. There was no immediate comment from the mine management.

The eight sealed townships included Sharpeville and Sebokeng, near the industrial white towns of Vereeneging and Vanderbijl Park, 30 miles south of Johannesburg.

There had been rioting incidents in August, it was the Sept. 3 protest of rent hikes that marked the beginning of South Africa's year of black rage against apartheid, the race laws that guarantee supremacy to the white minority.

A black man was shot to death Tuesday in the black Eastern Cape township of Duncan Village, near East London, when police fired on a crowd during a gasoline bomb attack on a police vehicle, national police headquarters in Pretoria reported.

It also said students demonstrating at the University of the North, in the Lebowa tribal homeland, went "on the rampage." One student was seriously wounded and five were arrested, it said.

In the huge black city of Soweto, which houses 1.5 million people outside Johannesburg, thousands of high school students left classes and roamed the streets. Residents said

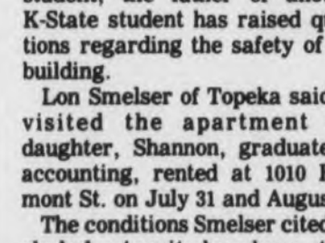
White House downplays Soviet claims

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House on Tuesday sidestepped Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's charge that the United States is setting up a confrontation at the November summit, and chose instead to welcome his pledge to propose ways of improving superpower relations.

In the administration's first formal reaction to Gorbachev's debut interview in the Western press, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes dismissed the Communist Party chief's claim that the United States expects the Soviets to make all the concessions.

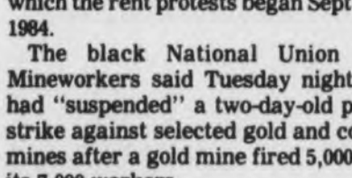
President Reagan, Speakes said, is prepared "to meet the Soviets halfway in an effort to solve problems."



Meanwhile, a delegation of U.S. senators who met with Gorbachev in Moscow on Tuesday said the Soviet leader told them he is ready to make radical offers to reduce nuclear weapons arsenals and may not oppose basic U.S. research on space-based military systems — the so-called "Star Wars" program.

Speakes said the administration has heard such talk before and challenged the Soviets to put their proposals on the table when arms control talks resume Sept. 19 in Geneva if they are serious about negotiating arms reductions.

"Our views of the causes of the present U.S.-Soviet tensions are quite different from that presented by Mr. Gorbachev," Speakes said in response to the Soviet leader's interview with Time magazine. But he said, "We do not intend to enter into a debate in the media."



He repeated Reagan's challenge to the Soviets to permit the American president the same access to the Soviet Union's government-controlled media as Gorbachev has to the independent Western press.

"We are pleased that Mr. Gorbachev was able to present his views to the American public," Speakes said. "If President Reagan had a comparable opportunity to express his views to the Soviet people through the Soviet media, this would doubtless improve our dialogue and indicate Soviet willingness to accept a degree of reciprocity in an important aspect of our relations."

Guatemala City violence spreads

GUATEMALA CITY — Bands of teen-agers protesting the cost of living smashed store windows and attacked cars Tuesday, in the second day of citywide violence that left two people dead and 516 arrested.

The federal education minister on Tuesday afternoon suspended classes indefinitely in public schools in this Central American capital.

Five city buses have been burned and five others damaged since Monday morning, when the government raised local bus fares 50 percent, to 15 cents. Police said 11 stores and five police vehicles were also damaged and windows in City Hall were smashed.

Students at the University of San Carlos vowed to hold a second mass meeting Tuesday night in the Plaza of the Martyrs, where riot squads used tear gas to put down a rally Monday night.

Twenty-two people, including three police officers, were injured, said Mario Ramirez Ruiz, spokesman for the National Police. He declined any other comment except on the number of people arrested so far.

Soviets battle Afghan guerrillas

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Soviet commandos battling Afghan guerrillas fought their way to within 1½ miles of the Pakistan border Tuesday as a major Soviet task force launched new assaults against the insurgents.

The Communist government of Afghanistan, in an unusually detailed radio broadcast Tuesday night, said that its security forces had inflicted a major defeat on the guerrillas and killed huge numbers of the insurgents.

Islamic guerrillas are fighting the Afghan government, which is supported by an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops.

Sandinistas strengthen PLO ties

WASHINGTON — Nicaragua has developed close ties with the Palestine Liberation Organization and other radical elements in the Middle East, posing an "increasing danger of violence for the Western Hemisphere," a State Department report said Tuesday.

"The Sandinistas' anti-Zionist rhetoric, close relations with radical Arab groups and efforts to organize Nicaragua's society and economy according to Marxist-Leninist precepts all contributed to the departure from Nicaragua by 1981 of nearly all of Nicaragua's Jewish community," the report said.

Following the 1979 Sandinista revolution, Nicaragua received loans and military trainers from the PLO and granted the PLO full diplomatic status, the report said. It added that Libya has provided Nicaragua with millions of dollars in financial assistance.

Blue Cross angers medical center

WICHITA — Blue Cross acted without regard for patients or doctors at Wesley Medical Center when it decided last week to quit paying directly for services performed at the hospital, a Wesley advertisement charged Monday.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas announced Thursday it will not renew its contract to pay subscribers' bills directly to Wesley because it views the hospital's parent company as a competitor.

Blue Cross officials voted to cancel and immediately notified Wesley and its parent firm, Hospital Corporation of America, said John Knack, vice president of marketing and alternative delivery systems for Blue Cross.

Blue Cross was responding to HCA's purchase this summer of Wesley and of Health Care Plus, a health maintenance organization which competes with Blue Cross, Knack said.

6 die in code-violating apartment

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The apartment building where six people died in a Labor Day fire set by an arsonist did not have fire-resistant stairways and fire doors as required by the city code, a fire department official said Tuesday.

Stairways were not enclosed by walls that would resist fire for at least an hour, said Chief Robert Wallace, the city's chief fire marshall. Exit doors were not thick enough and did not close automatically as required, he said.

The six people who died were found on the third floor.

The building had not been inspected, said Gerald Jones, director of the Codes Administration Department. He said inspectors began looking at buildings this year.

A special police squad was formed Tuesday to hunt for the arsonist, said Det. Vernon Wilson.

The fire swept through the 15-apartment building early Monday so fast that the building was completely engulfed in flames when firefighters arrived from a station only two blocks away, said Harold Knabe, fire department spokesman.

Proposal may slow AIDS growth

NEW YORK — The city's health commissioner wants to make it easier for drug abusers to obtain sterile needles and syringes in an effort to slow the rapid spread of AIDS among addicts, according to a letter made public Tuesday.

In his letter written Aug. 13, Dr. David J. Sencer asked Mayor Edward Koch to press for changes in state health laws that restrict sale of such paraphernalia without a doctor's prescription.

Sharing needles and syringes among addicts is the second most common way of obtaining Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, an often-fatal disease for which there is no known cure, Sencer wrote.

Koch said the proposals were "quite controversial" but sent Sencer's memo to the district attorneys of the five boroughs to get their opinions before acting. No replies have been received, mayoral spokesman Tom Kelly said.

Volkswagen recalls 105,000 autos

DETROIT — Volkswagen of America Inc. on Tuesday recalled 105,000 VW and Audi cars for faulty brake hoses that can crack and leak fluid, leading to partial loss of the brakes.

The import company said the recall affects West German-made VW Quantum, Jetta and Scirocco models and Audi 4000S and 5000S Turbo models from the 1983 through 1985 model years.

Repairs will be free, VW said.

VW said it knew of no accidents or injuries involving the defect.

10 injured during plane evacuation

ABILENE, Texas — An American Airlines jumbo jet carrying 190 people made an emergency landing Tuesday when a warning light indicated an engine fire, and 10 people were injured while evacuating, officials said.

Flight 436, a DC-10 carrying 177 passengers and 13 crewmembers, was flying from El Paso to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport when it landed at Dyess Air Force Base shortly after noon, airline spokesman John Hotard said.

An examination of the engine showed there was no fire in the engine, said airline spokesman Joe Stroop.

Veteran fights war against hunger

INDIANAPOLIS — Slowly but surely, Bob Wieland is making his way across the nation, propelling himself with his arms to demonstrate that the loss of his legs in Vietnam is no excuse to stop caring.

The 39-year-old Californian, who stepped on a mortar shell while serving as a combat medic, has spent nearly three years getting this far from Laguna Hills, Calif., on his way to Washington, D.C., to raise funds to fight world hunger.

This week he and a companion are traveling in the Indianapolis area along U.S. 40, having completed more than 80 percent of the trip that began Sept. 8, 1982. He anticipates the journey will end in Washington next April.

"We average about 3 miles to 5 miles a day," said Wieland. He uses his arms to propel his body three feet at a time, putting his padded fists in front of himself and swinging his body forward, and estimates it will take him 4,822,000 such steps for the whole journey.

He's raised about $225,000.

Donations come in many ways. Some are handed to Wieland as he travels along the highway. Others donate at church and other public meetings he holds along the way. Others mail donations.

"I'm alive with the grace of God," Wieland said. "He got me to overcome my injuries. This project is my way to work for him."

Actor says expletive, quits show

DUBLIN, Ireland — Actor Alan Devlin, stumbling his way through the lyrics of a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, halted the show by blurting out a four-letter expletive and stalking out the front door of Dublin's Gaiety Theater.

Devlin, a former member of London's Royal Shakespeare Company, was starring as Admiral Sir Joseph Porter in "HMS Pinafore" Monday night and had gotten to the third verse of "I Am the Ruler of the Queen's Navy" when he suddenly uttered the expletive and declared, "I'm going home."

He then walked up the aisle past a stunned audience, turned his costume over to an understudy and left. The show went on with the understudy.

"He was taken ill," a theater spokesman explained. "You could say his balance wasn't the best."

A spokesman for Noel Pearson, who produced the show, said Devlin would not be reappearing.

Devlin, familiar to Irish audiences as a barman in TV beer commercials, said by telephone from his suburban Dublin home that he was thinking of giving up acting.

"I don't think it suits me," he said.

Survey calls could be prelude to criminal act

By The Collegian Staff

An unknown person or group of people are falsely identifying themselves as representatives of the Manhattan Fire Department and are telephoning Manhattan residents claiming to be taking surveys for the department, fire department officials said.

The fire department has received several complaints from residents who say the callers want to know the number of occupants in the house, the location of rooms and the times when people are home, said Larry Reese, deputy fire chief.

However, no such surveys are being taken. Firemen are advising residents not to answer any questions, and not to give the caller their names because the survey is possibly a prelude to "a planned criminal act."

Reese said the matter is under investigation, and the Riley County Police Department and the K-State Police Department have been notified. People receiving calls of this nature should attempt to get a telephone number where the caller can be reached and then contact the RCPD at 537-2112, or the fire department at 537-0054.

FAA may adapt some rules in response to test criticism

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Amid criticism that government-required evacuation tests for jetliners often bear little resemblence to the problems faced in a crash, the Federal Aviation Administration is considering an overhaul of its rules.

Before a jetliner may carry passengers, the government must be convinced a full plane can be evacuated in 90 seconds. But flight attendants, members of Congress and safety experts say the tests are often contrived to meet the regulations and give little assurance of what can be expected in an accident.

The FAA, acknowledging it is time for "a rigorous reassessment" of its evacuation regulations and how manufacturers and airlines abide by them, began four days of meetings Tuesday in Seattle to take testimony.

But Rep. James L. Oberstar, D-Minn., whose House investigations subcommittee oversees FAA activity, says some changes in the agency's approach to aircraft evacuation are overdue.

"We've got ... no uniformity, just sort of a haphazard approach to (evacuation) rule making and safety, and lives of people are at stake," Oberstar complained.

The ranking Repubican on the subcommittee, Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, calls the approach taken by the FAA and industry on evacuation as "just totally out of touch with the real world."

Concern over the ability of airline passengers to escape an aircraft cabin took on added weight recently with the Aug. 22 fire aboard a British charter Boeing 737 as it was taking off from Manchester, England. Fifty-four people were killed from toxic smoke and flames.

Boeing officials convinced the FAA that the two over-wing emergency doors on the jumbo jet can be eliminated because federal regulations require one door for every 110 seats and that none of the 747s on which the doors would be sealed carry more than 440 seats anyway.

The agency's Seattle office, which handles all certification of large commercial aircraft, agreed and approved the change without a test to see whether passengers actually can be evacuated within 90 seconds — another federal requirement.

Critics, however, charge those tests themselves are flawed.

An evacuation test on the Boeing 757 last October was to show that 231 people could be evacuated in 90 seconds. They made it with seven seconds to spare.

But, said Steven Vincent, a flight attendant who took part in the exercise, the tests didn't meet "the spirit" of the regulations. He said all but 10 of the passengers were Boeing employees, flight attendants went through three days of rigorous training immediately before the test and the group had no children, no one over 60 years of age and no one physically impaired.

"We feel we have complied with the FAA requirements. They are the certifying authority. We comply with their requirements," said Boeing spokesman Jack Gamble.

Nora Marshall, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator who as a flight attendant once participated in a Boeing 747 evacuation test, sees other differences betwee the tests and an actual crisis:

No one is fatigued after hours of travel; no one struggles to save prized possessions; there is no smoke or danger from fire and no panic for fear of life; and finally, test passengers — unlike some airline travelers — all are sober.

Moslems suicide-bomb militia base

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A Moslem suicide bomber crashed his explosive-packed car into a Christian militia base in southern Lebanon Tuesday and gunfighters fought over bread at bakeries in west Beirut.

There also was a new surge of fighting between Shiite Moslem militiamen and Palestinian guerrillas at the Bourj el-Barajneh Palestinian refugee camp on Beirut's southern outskirts. Police said five people were killed and 20 were wounded. They called it the gravest violation of the 10-week-old cease-fire negotiated by Syria to halt a month-long war between Shiite Amal militiamen and Palestinians at Beirut's refugee camps.

The terrorist group that asserted responsibility for the car bombing at the Kfar Houne checkpoint claimed the blast killed or wounded 62 militiamen of the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army and injured seven Israeli intelligence officers.

But the Christian Voice of Lebanon said the bomber, who was killed, was the only victim because the explosives apparently went off prematurely.

Military soures in southern Lebanon said the explosives in a blue Mercedes detonated at 5 a.m. before any of the 40 militiamen normally assigned to the checkpoint had reported for duty.

The bread battles in predominantly Moslem west Beirut that left some people injured followed the kidnappings of at least 60 people by rival militia groups in recent weeks.

Units of the Lebanese army had closed all crossings between west Beirut and Christian east Beirut to stop the kidnappings, and that halted most of the shipments of flour and other essential supplies into the Moslem zone.

Police said they did not know how many people were wounded in the gunfights that erupted in several bakeries, but they knew of no fatalities.

Fraud affects rural area

Financiers operate land scam

By CONRAD EASTERDAY
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part report on farmer and false loan schemes. Tuesday's story focused on the nature of such schemes.

Rural fraud recently became national news when the Wall Street Journal reported how Nasib Ed Kalliel, a Texas financier, used a purchase/lease back method to scam $3,500 from a Sublette man.

The method — in which an agent "purchases" land from a farmer supposedly to lease it back — is one of several scams affecting state farmers. In the schemes, a loan agent disappears with the farmer's money, promising to find a way to finance the farm, without producing any results.

The schemes are affecting desperate farmers across the state, but in some cases there is legal recourse.

Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan said his office won a $172,000 lawsuit against Kalliel two months ago.

Like Kalliel, a large part of the agents working in Kansas are not from the state, said Brownback. However, the companies the agents represent, whether they are in state or not, must comply with the Securities Commission's regulations for doing business in Kansas.

The securities commissioner used those regulations to issue a cease-and-desist order a year ago against two related companies, Lease Bank Inc. of Wichita and Financial Brokers Inc. of Georgia.

Lease Bank has since taken steps to comply with the commissioner's requirements, said John Wurth, Kansas Securities commissioner.

Kalliel and Lease Bank are two of the few operations against which authorities have been able to take action.

For such action to occur, a farmer must complain to authorities and have evidence other than his word against the agent's word that the agent has not lived up to the bargain, Hupe said. Usually, no contract exists, and a complaint isn't voiced.

The farmers are too desperate to complain, said DeAnn Hupe, attorney for the state Board of Agriculture's Farmer's Assistance and Counseling Service.

"Farmers are not calling the security commissioner," she said. "And when they do, they are not saying 'get my money back.' They're saying 'make them get me that loan.'"

But desperation is only one of several reasons farmers are hesitant to talk to the authorities even after they call Hupe for confidential advice, she said.

Some finders tell their supposed clients if they reveal the name of the finder, processor or lender to anyone, they won't get the loan.

"They (the farmers) need that money. If the money is there, and they complain, they don't get it," Hupe said.

Hupe also described the "mind set" of some of the farmers and one reason the agent's schemes can work.

"They have a mind set that they would blow up their land before they would let the Federal Land Bank get it.

"That's one of the reasons they fall for these schemes. Some would rather have a stranger from Argentina get the land than the bank from whom they originally borrowed money," she said.

And farmers believe in the hope promised by the agents because they understand finding and processing a loan to mean they will actually receive one, Hupe said.

Finding a loan means the agents will find a possible source for it, Hupe explained. Processing means they will do the paperwork for the loan. The application doesn't have to be approved.

"You may have paid money just to get turned down," Hupe said.

Farmers are not being fooled by inept hucksters. Hupe described the loan finders as "very good," "sincere" and ready to answer every question a farmer might have.

When the loan doesn't come through, if the finder can still be contacted, they appear to be just as upset as the farmer, Hupe said.

Farmers, however, can protect themselves from making such a costly financing or refinancing mistake. Hupe suggested that a farmer who's approached by an agent, or who is thinking about trying non-traditional financing, be certain the agent and the agent's company are legitimate.

She also suggested that the farmer check out the agent's credentials with the Better Business Bureau and the Consumer Protection Division of the state Attorney General's office.

If the credentials check out, the farmer should insist on a written contract, and show the agent the door if he refuses, Hupe said. If the agent agrees to a written contract, the check for his services should be placed in an escrow account until certain conditions in the contract are met.

The same steps should be taken with the loan processor, Hupe said. And the farmer should be certain that the processor and the finder agree on the same terms.

National security betrayal fails to pay off

TIM FITZGERALD
Collegian Columnist

I've come to realize that I am not a vital cog in the wheel of any sort of power structure. I carry my share of influence in various arenas of personal importance, but I certainly lack superior knowledge in any of these arenas.

No, Fitz is not experiencing an identity crisis which will end with a short affair with a loaded pistol. By the current rules of the game, I'd rather not be blessed with any form of extraordinary knowledge.

These rules state that to be important, "the other side" must recognize your importance by asking you to become a spy for them.

With the incredible amount of espionage currently occurring in the world, it would not surprise me to wake up tomorrow morning and have a banner headline on the Collegian screaming, "Reagan defects to Soviet Union."

You see, I've come to realize my lack of importance because I have not been approached by anyone who wanted me to become a spy for them. I'm almost insulted by the whole situation.

No one from the University of Kansas, or from a rival fraternity, or the Democratic Party, or from the Soviet Union or even from the Coalition Against Prepsters, has made the slightest overture to me about providing them with any inside knowledge that I might possess.

Thus, I must not be blessed with knowledge so extraordinary that it might change the course of the future if it falls into the wrong hands. Now you realize why I am so insulted.

It was a long summer for spies in the United States this year. Seemingly everyone in the U.S. Navy named Walker has been arrested for passing military secrets to the Soviets.

Even comedian Jimmy Walker is under suspicion for giving information to the Soviets which is essential for the making of a really poor situation comedy.

The stupidity of the whole thing is how little these people get paid for betraying the things they are supposed to love. Someone is going to make a quick buck in becoming a "double-agents' agent." These traitors need someone to make sure the Soviets are paying them enough to make life in jail worth betraying their loyalties.

Another option might be to start a Spy Union to look out for their interests. If they feel underpaid, they can go on strike and chant such things as "We betray, you pay" or "We want financial security for our national security" while they picket the Soviet embassy.

The latest covert operation to catch headlines is from West Germany. People involved with West German intelligence are disappearing, and writing letters of explanation to their families on red stationery with East German postmarks on the envelopes.

An example of such letters might read as follows: "Dear Helga, The weather is beautiful out east, but sightseeing is hell — the walls are all so tall. Love, Hans."

So much intrigue makes me wonder if spying is going on at K-State. I believe some K-State officials may be or have been spies for other universities.

Former Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross has moved on to Columbia University where he will school them in the fine art of building roads and then putting posts, bushes and wood chips in the middle of them so that they are impassable.

President Duane Acker has resigned effective June 30, 1986, when he will possibly move on to Iowa State University. He might share his insight into how a healthy four-year university allows its enrollment to shrink to the equivalent of a community college or how to build a basketball arena with $14.95 and a good set of Lego.®

Also suspected is Steve Brown, student body president and junior in pre-veterinary medicine. Brown is rumored to be passing on information to KU concerning the techniques of tending bar in Aggieville as well as attempting to undermine the current trend toward tasteful dressing in Manhattan.

Maybe it's best I'm naive in this world of important information. I do not want to personally experience the punishment doled out for breaking the nose of an overly inquisitive Soviet spy.

The current betrayal fad will not soon end. But I would hope it will soon lead to the implementation of the death penalty for those who think that jeopardizing the United States' national security is worth several thousand dollars.

County AIDS testing site

Thanks in part to a newly found realization of the impact of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the Riley County Manhattan Health Department has become the eighth testing site for the disease in Kansas.

Perhaps one reason for the availability of funds is the realization that AIDS is not relegated to the homosexual community. Approximately 27 percent of AIDS victims are not members of the gay community.

The first case of AIDS was reported in 1981. In 1984, 5,100 cases were diagnosed, and projections for 1985 place the total at approximately 10,000. Only through pressure from lobbying groups and members of Congress has the Reagan administration seen fit to provide adequate research funds as the number of AIDS cases increases.

In 1982, $5.5 million was allocated for research; in 1984, $61.5 million; and after the report of actor Rock Hudson's illness, the Reagan administration requested $126.3 million for research.

One point that must be remembered is that just because Riley County has become a test site does not mean the region has become a mecca for AIDS.

Those responsible for initiating the action should be commended for the move toward better health care or precautionary measures to that end. And unlike other AIDS testing programs, the goal is health-oriented, and not disciplinary such as those implemented by private corporations or military branches of the government (the Army).

Despite the statements of those in the medical community, the stigma attached to AIDS sufferers is sure to be perpetuated for some time, as indicated by the statement of former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox, who was suspected of contracting AIDS from cancer treatments in the Bahamas.

"If they gave me a choice of cancer or AIDS, I'd take the cancer. At least with cancer, there is a certain dignity," Maddox said.

Stereotyping and ignorance of the facts did not get rid of the plague. Nor will stereotyping and ignorance find an answer to AIDS.

Nicaraguans denied relief

According to a recent article by The Associated Press, Nicaraguan refugees received only a fraction of the $219,525 collected in their behalf at a fund-raising dinner attended by President Ronald Reagan.

The Nicaraguan Refugee Fund, in cooperation with the White House, arranged the April 15 event. Using proceeds from the dinner along with other revenues, the Fund spent 1.3 percent of the receipts for relief supplies for refugees in Central America. So what happened to the rest of the money?

The event itself cost $218,376. More than $70,000 was spent to feed about 700 people. The individuals in attendance were charged $250 to $500 for the chance to eat dinner and hear the president's speech.

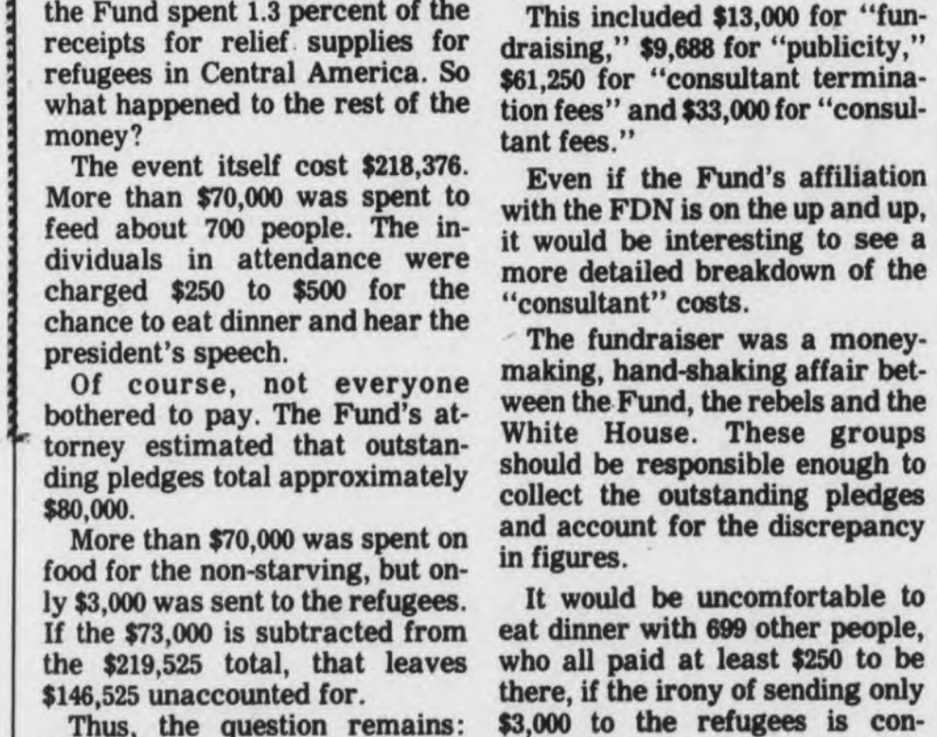
Of course, not everyone bothered to pay. The Fund's attorney estimated that outstanding pledges total approximately $80,000.

More than $70,000 was spent on food for the non-starving, but only $3,000 was sent to the refugees. If the $73,000 is subtracted from the $219,525 total, that leaves $146,525 unaccounted for.

Thus, the question remains: What happened to the rest of the money?

Some fingers have pointed to the Fund's semi-secret involvement with the Nicaraguan Democratic Force — the largest U.S.-backed rebel army fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government in that country.

Officials from the Fund said they believe no money has gone to the rebels, however, "consultants" received more than half the proceeds from the dinner.



This included $13,000 for "fundraising," $9,688 for "publicity," $61,250 for "consultant termination fees" and $33,000 for "consultant fees."

Even if the Fund's affiliation with the FDN is on the up and up, it would be interesting to see a more detailed breakdown of the "consultant" costs.

The fundraiser was a money-making, hand-shaking affair between the Fund, the rebels and the White House. These groups should be responsible enough to collect the outstanding pledges and account for the discrepancy in figures.

It would be uncomfortable to eat dinner with 699 other people, who all paid at least $250 to be there, if the irony of sending only $3,000 to the refugees is considered.

Religion not cause, but cure of societal ills

ROD SAUNDERS
Guest Columnist

When you live and work around a university, you expect that academic or intellectual debate should surface from time-to-time. Occasionally, it is even expected that such will demonstrate good reasoning.

But after 13 years, it is also expected that such debate will not always exhibit such "higher" educational standards, even if it proceeds from scientists, philosophers or mathematicians. In other words, academicians have their off days just like anyone else, or as the old Jewish proverb says, "When humanity thinks, God laughs."

And there is the old line about academicians being the strongest people because they always hold the world at arm's length in order not to get involved. (Maybe that's why God laughs at our thinking.)

The honest reality is that science has its belief systems just like anything or anyone else. (However, this is not to be seen as a science-is-a-religion argument a la the silly secular humanism religion claim of some.)

Science, for example, "believes" there is order in the universe, or at least a studied disorder. But it is a "belief," not a "fact" as two plus two.

There is reason for the quotation marks. If we are honest, it is really debatable as to what is and is not a belief and/or a fact; for all language is at base metaphorical, including the reasoned language of science. And science has even realized that the experimenter cannot avoid influencing the results given the reality that "measuring" introduces intrusion into the "normal" flow and movement.

So, who is really able to say whose beliefs are "fairy tale" as compared to what? Is it possible all thought, including both religious and scientific, has its elements of "fairy tale"? (The word "quark" comes from a book of fiction, "Finnegan's Wake.")

Is it not possible that all the mysteries of life cannot be solved, are not to be solved — that some sense of awe and wonder will be with us always?

To say that religion is one cause, or to blame, for much misery and suffering has been, and is, true. To suggest by such a statement that it is THE cause is to claim far more than can ever be demonstrated in any way, shape or form.

While religious zeal is one of the causes of problems in several "hot spots" in the world (Iran-Iraq, the Middle East), it is religious faith that possibly offers any real hope at all for peaceful, constructive solutions in other "hot spots" (South Africa, Central America).

And does reason offer us any greater salvation? Is it not "science" that has given us the means by which to destroy the whole planet? Was it not "reason" and "logic" which led to the concepts of Naziism and Facism?

Let's be honest. Reason can be abused, exploited, prostituted as easily as any religious belief system. Demeaning all religious faith as dangerous is itself dangerous, yet also doomed to failure since everywhere you find this human animal you find it religious — not always living out the highest and best of those religious doctrines, but often trying in ways which enable the highest and best of concerned, loving compassion that this human animal has known in its history.

Perhaps, in this setting of higher education (itself founded by religious people as were many, if not most), it would be good to remember a couple of things some other scientists have said.

Max Planck, the founder of quantum physics, "insists that the pioneer scientist must have 'a vivid imagination, for new ideas are not generated by deduction, but by artistically creative imagination.'" (Metaphorical Theology, Page 75)

Albert Einstein said, "I assert that the cosmic religious experience is the strongest and noblest driving force behind scientific research."

Comments in South Africa expose Falwell as phony

Editor,

It appears that the Rev. Jerry Falwell has decided to "go international" with his campaign to make a nincompoop of himself.

I am referring to his recent comments about South Africa in which he judged Bishop Desmond Tutu as not representative of South African blacks and a "phony." (Most would agree that this declaration is as credible as Mr. T calling Albert Einstein a "dummy.")

What can we make of such statements? Two conclusions: Either Falwell is completely ignorant of the South African situation or he is a blind ideologue willing only to make statements that are consistent with his own political beliefs regardless of how erroneous or unbelievable they are. In either case, he certainly does not speak for an informed majority (or Christianity) as he insists.

I always derive some personal pleasure from seeing people whose viewpoints I oppose "shoot themselves in the foot." It is particularly gratifying when the shot is heard 'round the world.

We can only hope that Falwell will continue to shoot his mouth off and expose himself for the phony he is.

Reagan tops manners list, sets example

By The Associated Press

KEWANEE, Ill. — President Reagan leads the list of the 10 best-mannered people in the country, says etiquette expert Marjabelle Stewart.

"It used to be taboo to show affection," said Stewart. "But he has a beautiful way of saying you can be nice to your wife. He is always reaching for Nancy's hand and helping her."

Others on Stewart's list include opera star Beverly Sills, actor Cliff Robertson, entertainer Ann-Margaret, former United Nations ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, television host Gary Collins, actress Linda Evans, golfer Arnold Palmer, White House correspondent Helen Thomas and columnist Art Buchwald.

Stewart's Encyclopedia of Etiquette will be published next spring.

Coastal residents grateful

Recovery from Elena begins

By The Associated Press

PASCAGOULA, Miss. — Residents of Mississippi's resilient Gulf Coast set to work Tuesday to recover from a savage beating by Hurricane Elena, grateful that this time, at least, there was something left to repair.

"Right now, it's time to get back on our feet and get this community back in shape," said Harrison County Civil Defense director Wade Guice, who has faced the likes of Hurricane Camille in 1969. "We've come through this before down here and we've always had the spirit it takes to come back and rebuild."

He estimated that damage could exceed the $500 million toll from Hurricane Frederick in 1979.

"Its bad, real bad, but at least this time we've got something to go back to and repair. After Camille there was nothing left," said Jim Boyce of Pascagoula. Camille packed 200 mph wind, highest on record for a hurricane striking the U.S. mainland. Damage was estimated at $3.8 billion and 256 people were killed.

Six federal and state disaster teams drove around making "windshield surveys" of damage and making preliminary estimates of losses.

"Until that survey is completed, we would only be guessing but I don't think I'd be too far out of line to say the damage to the Mississippi Coast could run in the hundreds of millions of dollars," Guice said. "I know we've been hit hard in Harrison County and things are worse over toward Pascagoula."

Despite the damage, no deaths were reported along the Mississippi coast. However, the death toll from Elena rose to four Tuesday when the New Orleans coroner's office attributed a death at sea to the storm.

Spokesman John Gagliano a third mate aboard the M.V. Ambassador was crushed between two loose trailers Thursday when the container ship was tossed by stormy seas about 30 miles from the eye of the storm.

There had been three deaths in Florida last weekend when the storm lingered off that coast.

The Coast Guard reported Tuesday that ports along the coast had been closed because many buoys and channel markers had been blown off position. A spokesman said Gulfport, Pascagoula, Mobile, Pensacola and Panama City would remain closed until a Coast Guard team completed inspections.

UPC sponsors exhibit; businesses participate

By The Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee is sponsoring Outdoor Awareness Day today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on the Pedestrian Island area north of the Union.

Eight different businesses and organizations will exhibit outdoor equipment such as canoes and camping equipment and provide information on the Tuttle Creek State Park, the Recreation Services' fall schedule and activities of the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society.

The organizations represented at the event are The K-State Canoe Association, The Pathfinder, the Audubon Society, K-State Sailing Club, Tuttle Creek State Park, K-State Recreation Services, UPC Outdoor Recreation Committee and The Sunset Zoo. The zoo is a new addition to this year's event.

Artificial heart recipient falls sick

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Leif Stenberg, who was making an impressive recovery with a permanent artificial heart, has suffered a stroke and is in Karolinska hospital's intensive care unit, the hospital announced Tuesday.

Spokeswoman Tania Blanck said the Stockholm businessman, 53, suffered the stroke "a few days ago," but his doctors had decided to release no further information at this stage.

"We will make statements when there is a change in his condition," she said, and declined comment when asked if Stenberg was in satisfactory condition.

Such reticence is characteristic of Karolinska and many other European hospitals, which tend to be more restrained than American institutions in releasing information about patients.

Stenberg became the world's fourth recipient of a permanent artificial heart, and the first non-American, when his Jarvik-7 was implanted Easter Sunday, April 7.

He had appeared to be recovering more rapidly than other patients.

Stenberg had been spending only nights at Karolinska in recent weeks, passing the days in a specially equipped apartment near the institution on the edge of Stockholm.

His only previously reported complication was in June, when the Norwegian specialist who implanted the heart said there was a temporary disturbance of Stenberg's eyesight.

The three previous American patients each suffered severe complications, including bleeding and strokes, at points of recovery at which Stenberg appeared to be relatively free of problems.

American patients William Schroeder and Murray Haydon suffered strokes after receiving the Jarvik-7 artificial heart.

Surgeon William C. DeVries, who implanted the devices in both men and in two others since 1982, has called stroke "a common complication of the procedure."

Barney Clark received the first permanent artificial heart at the University of Utah on Dec. 2, 1982, and lived 112 days on his Jarvik-7.

The second was Schroeder, 53, who received the heart Nov. 25, 1984, at Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville, Ky. Schroeder has suffered two strokes, the second of which left him partially paralyzed and unable to speak.

Haydon, 59, became the third Jarvik-7 heart recipient in an operation at Humana on Feb. 17, 1985. He suffered a stroke in June but had no lasting neurological damage, doctors said.

The most recent implant was performed last Thursday on Michael Drummond, 25, the youngest Jarvik-7 recipient, at the University Medical Center in Tucson, Ariz.

Poll accesses interest in space travel

Majority believe in extraterrestrials

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Is there intelligent life on other planets? Nearly half of Americans think so, and they believe money is well spent searching for it, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

And while the idea of civilian space travel is no longer far-fetched, Americans are not overly eager to ride in the space shuttle.

Forty-seven percent of the 1,517 respondents in the nationwide telephone poll said they believed alien life existed, while 36 percent disagreed. Seventeen percent were unsure.

Forty-nine percent said the search for life on other planets, such as that done with radio telescopes, was a good use of research money, while 45 percent disagreed.

But fewer than half of those polled said they wanted to ride aboard the space shuttle, despite the flight of U.S. Sen. Jake Garn earlier this year and a scheduled flight for New Hampshire school teacher Christa McAuliffe.

Forty-eight percent of the respondents said they would like a trip in the space shuttle, while 50 percent said no.

Not surprisingly, younger people appeared more eager for the ride than older people: two thirds of 18-to-34-year-olds wanted to ride in the space shuttle, compared with nearly half of the 35-to-54-year-olds, and only 19 percent of those 65 and older.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,517 adults across the country July 5-13. As with all sample surveys, the results of the Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,500 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of three percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample. That is, if one could have questioned all Americans with telephones, there is only one chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than three percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for several reasons. Differences in exact wording of questions, in the timing of interviews and in the interview methods could also cause variations.

Israeli experts discover oldest bronze dentistry

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A tooth containing the world's oldest known dental filling has been found in the skull of a middle-aged Nabatean warrior who was buried in a mass grave 2,200 years ago, an Israeli archaeologist said Tuesday.

A bronze wire was inserted into the canal, a treatment the patient probably thought would stop "toothworms" from burrowing into the decaying tooth, and it probably caused great pain, said Joe Zias, curator of Israel's Department of Antiquities.

Death may have come as a relief, he said. "This guy's mouth was a mess. He had four abscesses, two impacted teeth, an extra tooth in front and an enlarged molar."

Because the bronze oxidized, the tooth turned green, attracting the attention of scientists examining the warrior's skull.

Zias told The Associated Press he had confirmed with medical historians in the United States that "this is the oldest tooth ever found with the filling intact."

"No one knew people did this kind of operation" that long ago, he said.

Ancients believed tooth decay was caused by a toothworm. The notion persisted until modern dentistry was founded 300 years ago, and it remains current in some backward areas. Zias said the wire probably was implanted to "keep the worms from climbing in."

He said the man died about 200 B.C., was 40 to 50 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall and powerfully built. The skeleton was found last spring in a mass grave in the Negev Desert.

Engineers support drilling in Hugoton gas field

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Two petroleum engineers told the Corporation Commission Tuesday their studies show between 29 percent and 44 percent of the natural gas in the Hugoton field of southwest Kansas will go to waste unless producers are allowed to drill more wells.

"Without infill drilling significant reserves will go unrecovered, resulting in inefficient and ineffective drainage of the formation and waste of natural gas," Charles E. Sale, a petroleum engineer for Tenneco Oil Co., said in testimony submitted in support of a request to permit a second well on each 640-acre section in the Hugoton field.

Because one well cannot tap all the pockets of gas in a square-mile section, there is a significant volume of gas which "will never be recovered and will be wasted with the present single-well per lease," said Richard J. Keeling, a petroleum engineer with Helmerich & Payne Inc.

Sale, from Oklahoma City, and Keeling, from Tulsa, were cross examined by intervenor attorneys Tuesday as the KCC resumed for the fifth week hearings on a year-old request by Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. to allow so-called infill drilling in the giant gas field.

The hearings, scheduled to carry into late October, will be held here the remainder of this week, then return to Wichita during the third and fourth weeks in September.

At issue is whether the geology of the Hugoton field dictates that additional wells be drilled in order to drain more gas as the field's capacity is played out over the next decade or two, or whether the allotment of one well per 640 acres — in effect for more than 40 years — is adequate to drain the field.

Proponents, who include producers and royalty owners, contend doubling the number of wells is essential if the field is to be drained efficiently. They say adding a second well on each section can double the remaining capacity of the field.

Opponents, who include pipeline and gas distribution companies, counter there is no solid proof that increased drilling will expand the field's capacity, and say there is no market demand for more gas. They also charge the real motive of producers is to get the gas reclassified so a higher price can be charged for it.

"Based on my study of the original gas in place under the five-township area, by having only one well per 640 acres 44 percent of the original gas in place will be left unrecovered," Sale said. "I believe an average of 4.9 BCF (billion cubic feet) per section above what will be recovered by the existing well can be recovered by infill drilling within this study area."

Downtown redevelopment closer to reality

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

With the approval of an Urban Development Action Grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, a variety of downtown redevelopment projects and the Southern Arterial trafficway are moving from the drawing board toward physical reality.

Although the redevelopment projects effect three areas, they are not necessarily dependant on each other. The downtown mall (the largest and most expensive), the Southern Arterial trafficway, and general improvements in the downtown business district (the Conservation Area) comprise the projects.

The Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall, was developed by Forest City Rental Properties Corp., of Cleveland and JCP Realty Inc., a subsidiary of the J.C. Penney Company. It will generally be bordered by Pierre Street on the south; Leavenworth Street on the north; Tuttle Creek Boulevard on the east and Third Street on the west. The mall will be 340,000 to 350,000 square feet.

Of this area, approximately 304,000 square feet is slated for retail sales space, with additional land available for future expansion if necessary.

Gary Stith, downtown redevelopment coordinator, said the city is ready to make formal offers for buildings and land needed for the mall site, but will not send offers out until the HUD grant is returned to Manhattan with all necessary signatures.

Of the 65 properties involved, the city has received 36 signed acquisition contracts. Stith said businesses legally have a minimum of 90 days to vacate the premises after notification.

The current schedule calls for businesses east of Third Street to be vacated by mid-January 1986. Businesses west of Third Street will have until July 1986. The grand opening of the mall is currently scheduled for August 1987.

The building on the northeast corner of Poyntz Avenue, which houses Art Resources, the Paint and Frame Shoppe and Manhattan Camera, will not be destroyed due to its historical designation.

The $9 million HUD grant for mall site acquisitions and preparation was a reduction from the original request of $10 million. HUD requested the developer pay the $1 million difference as a form of equity to the city. The grant covers only site preparation, with the actual mall construction financing the responsibility of the developer.

Site preparation is scheduled to begin in October.

The mall, with a price tag of approximately $24 million, is designed to contain 75 to 90 businesses. J.C. Penney Co. Inc. will anchor the south end, and Dillards the north end. Stith estimated 25 percent of the remaining stores would be of local origin, but final applications and placement would be up to the managing development partner, Forest City.

In order to ease the relocation of certain businesses, the local development company of Curtin/Bowman Enterprises has acquired land from the city in the 300 block of Colorado Street for construction of a Service-Commercial Plaza. This project, to be built in two phases, will allow relocating businesses not suitable nor profitable enough for a mall location.

The first phase will be used for owner-occupied businesses and the second for tenant-occupied businesses. Stith said the location may also help draw new service or commercial businesses to the area.

This illustration shows an artist's rendering of the Public Plaza to be built at the Poyntz Avenue and Third Street mall entrance.

Another new building planned for the downtown business district is the Colony Square Office Complex, to be located at the site of the Murdoch Chevrolet-Cadillac Company, Sixth Street and Poyntz Avenue. This office space is being developed by local businessmen Philip Brokenicky, Edward A. DeVilbiss and Steel and Pipe Supply Co., of Manhattan.

The Conservation Area is a larger area of the downtown business district scheduled for street and sidewalk improvements, new sewer and water lines and parking lots to be paid for by benefit districts, with costs split between the developers and city at large. Stith said all cost splits were set by the same policy that applies to all developments in the city.

Included in the Conservation Area is a public plaza to be located at the intersection of Third Street and Poyntz Avenue. Other changes include stopping the flow of eastbound traffic on Poyntz Avenue, Humboldt and Houston streets at Third Street.

Third Street will terminate at parking lots to the northwest and south of the mall and Second Street will be closed from Humboldt to Pierre streets.

New access to the downtown area will be created with the extension of Leavenworth and Pierre streets to Tuttle Creek Boulevard and the proposed Southern Arterial.

Stith said all streets in the area will be two-way by the end of construction.

The Southern Arterial, which Stith has compared in design to Claflin Road, is designed to connect Fort Riley and Tuttle Creek boulevards and remove through-traffic from heavily residential neighborhoods. The Arterial is to be built along the abandoned Rock Island Railroad right-of-way south of El Paso Street.

The Arterial, which Stith said would be completed approximately six months before the mall, has a February '86 bid-opening date scheduled by the State Department of Transportation.

Stith said the city has already acquired about 65 percent of the property needed for the arterial. All other appraisals are finished and the necessary letters ready to be sent to the property owners, Stith said.

Library commemorates Eisenhower presidency with colleagues' essays

By SHERRI HAGER
Collegian Reporter

A publication commemorating Milton Eisenhower's presidential years at the University is a major project of Friends of the KSU Libraries this year.

Friends of the KSU Libraries is a group of people interested in the improvement of libraries, who want to enrich resources and encourage gifts to the libraries.

The publication will be a collection of essays written by those who knew Eisenhower, said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of libraries for public services.

"I have asked various people who actually knew Dr. Eisenhower or worked with him while he was here on campus to write these essays. I have had excellent response. They are now coming in and by April we hope to have the book published," Quiring said.

Friends of the KSU Libraries began two years ago as a multipurpose organization. The group's purposes include enriching facilities of the libraries beyond the responsibility of the state and the University and to stimulate a greater awareness of the library's role in the University and community to encourage gifts, endowments, collections and memorials to Farrell Library.

Friends of the KSU Libraries also serves as a major support for other K-State libraries — including the Weigel Library of Architecture and Design, Chemistry Library, Physics Library and Veterinary Medical Library. The organization also sponsors programs designed to add to the cultural life of the community and to advise administrators of the various libraries in matters of development, special acquisitions and program enrichment.

"Membership at the end of the 1985 fiscal year was 199 members. To become a member, one pays dues. The Friends organization is open to anyone who is interested in being a friend of the library," Quiring said.

There are various levels of membership in Friends, each requiring yearly dues. A contributing member may join for $25, but a student may join for $5. Corporate members are required to contribute $1,000; patron members, $500; sustaining members, $100; supporting members, $50; and family members, $35.

In addition to the publication of essays, Leland Warren, president of the organization and associate professor of English, said he plans to make the group more visual on campus.

"Last year was the first real year (for the group), and it was very successful in the number of new members and money raised through membership," Warren said. "But I think we're probably not visible enough in the community, we need to make people more aware that the organization exists and it's going to be here for a long time.

"At very strong libraries where there are very strong Friends organizations, the Friends are able to give considerable sums of money each year to the library for special projects that are not covered in the library's budget," Warren said. "I would like very much for us to be able to do that.

"I think as Friends at K-State becomes established and known and is widely recognized, that there will be a means to contribute to the library in this way."

Suspect charged in California slayings

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Richard Ramirez, the drifter arrested in the "Night Stalker" serial slayings that terrorized California, was charged Tuesday with murder and seven other felony counts including burglary, robbery and sexual assault.

The 25-year-old Ramirez was charged with the May 14 murder of William Doi, 66, who was shot in the face in his surburban Monterey Park home, and the sexual assault of Doi's wife.

Ramirez answered "yes" three times in a loud and clear voice as he confirmed his identity, waived his right to enter a plea and waived his right to a preliminary hearing in 10 days.

"We've had only the briefest period to discuss with Mr. Ramirez the defense of his case," Deputy Public Defender David Meyer said in asking for a delay in entering the plea.

Municipal Court Judge Elway Soper ordered Ramirez to appear Sept. 9 to enter a plea. There is no bail in the case.

An investigation was continuing into 14 slayings linked to the attacker, said Los Angeles County District Attorney Ira Reiner.

"Assuming the evidence warrants, we will be filing additional charges within the next couple of weeks," he said. "We have sufficient evidence to convince us that the majority of these crimes were, in fact, committed by the same person.

"However, I would caution you that not all of these cases are necessarily attributable to the same person," Reiner said.

Ramirez was charged with one count of burglary and robbery for the break-in at the Doi home, and one count each of rape, sodomy, forced oral copulation and murder.

One count each of burglary and robbery also were filed for a May 9 intrusion into the home of Clara Cecilia Hadsall.

Ramirez was arrested Saturday in East Los Angeles after being chased and beaten by a crowd that prevented him from trying to steal a car. He is under constant surveillance in a high-security section of Los Angeles County Jail.

In Orange County, Chief Deputy District Attorney James Enright said he was awaiting reports on an Aug. 25 attack in Mission Viejo in which a man was shot and wounded and his fiancee raped. Enright said possible charges could include attempted murder, assault with a deadly weapon, rape, robbery and burglary.

Ramirez had already been served with arrest warrants from Orange and San Francisco counties. The one from San Francisco alleges murder in the Aug. 16 shooting of accountant Peter Pan. The warrants are a way of informing a person he is wanted in another jurisdiction, and are not actual charges.

An unidentified police source told the Los Angeles Herald Examiner that although Satanic symbols were found in at least two homes where the killer struck, authorities are discounting devil worship as a motive.

Deputy District Attorney Philip Halpin, the prosecutor assigned to the case, said Satanism is not a top priority for investigators working the case.

Judge's order frees Boston schools

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — A federal judge relinquished control over the city's public schools Tuesday, more than a decade after the start of court-ordered busing to integrate the nation's oldest school system.

Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr.'s final order to guide the future of black, white, Hispanic and Asian children came on the same day that Boston schools get their first black superintendent.

In a series of official papers released shortly after 5:30 p.m., Garrity permanently enjoined city officials from "discriminating on the basis of race in the operation of the public schools of the city of Boston."

He also ordered the school committee, which regained control of the public schools, to enroll public school students in a pattern that generally reflects the ethnic makeup of each school district. In cases of certain magnet schools, Garrity said the ethnic composition should match the citywide school population.

He also ordered the school board to desegregate the faculty and administration, and specifically said those categories must be at least 25 percent black and 10 percent other minorities.

The order came on the same day that Laval S. Wilson took office as the system's first black superintendent.

On June 21, 1974, Garrity found that the school system was "unconstitutionally segregated," with the School Committee operating a dual system and black students often going to inferior schools.

He ordered busing to integrate the schools, an edict that touched off violence and demonstrations.

In 1982, Garrity turned the day-to-day monitoring of his orders over to the state Board of Education.

Fun Fair strives to increase knowledge

By BRENDA KITCHEN
Collegian Reporter

Family entertainment and information about where to go for help for family needs will be available at the second annual Riley County Family Fun Fair.

The fair is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Pottorf Hall in Cico Park. There will be exhibits, demonstrations, entertainment and activities.

The objectives of the fair are to increase the public knowledge of available community resources for facilitating and supporting families, and to increase awareness among family members ways to have fun together, said Lynda Hershey Frey, executive director of the Riley County Red Cross, one of the sponsors of the event.

Many area social service agencies will have exhibits at the fair. Some will be seeking volunteers. Among the agencies represented will be the Kansas Children's Service League, the Regional Crisis Center and Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

The Identikid program will be made available by the St. Mary Hospital Auxiliary. Parents may have their children fingerprinted without charge. An ID card with a photo of the child will be made for a $2 charge.

Fairgoers will have the opportunity to sign up for Red Cross cardiopulmonary resuscitation and first-aid classes among others.

A bicycle rodeo will be among the many activities at the fair. The bicycle rodeo will be sponsored by the Kansas Highway Patrol. There will be two divisions, first through third grades and fourth through sixth grades. Children must provide their own bicycles.

Family entertainment will include the Manhattan High School Pep Band; Angie Doyen, a ventriloquist from Concordia; the Streetside Quintet from Manhattan and a breakdance demonstration.

Emergency vehicles including an ambulance, fire engine, a Military Aid and Assistance to Traffic helicopter and a Radio Emergency Action Citizens Team communications van will be on display.

A petting zoo will be sponsored by the MHS Future Farmers of America.

The Riley County Family Fun Fair is sponsored by the Riley County Red Cross, Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, Extension Home Economics, Pawnee Mental Health and the Family Center at K-State.

Cambodians replace Khmer Rouge leader

By The Associated Press

ARANYAPRATHET, Thailand — A non-communist Cambodian resistance group on Tuesday welcomed the replacement of Khmer Rouge leader Pol Pot, saying it could open the way for talks with Vietnam on resolving the Cambodian conflict.

The radio station of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front said that Pol Pot's removal may lessen the disputes between the Khmer Rouge, who are radical communists, and the two non-communist factions of the Cambodian resistance.

The Liberation Front and the forces of Prince Norodom Sihanouk have long condemned Pol Pot, whose government was blamed for the massacres of some two million Cambodians while he was in power from 1975-78.

Khmer Rouge radio on Monday announced that Pol Pot had been replaced as military chief by Son Sen. It said Pol Pot had to retire under a new order signed by Khmer Rouge Premier Khieu Samphan setting 60 as the retirement age.

The Reagan administration, which does not recognize the Heng Samrin government, is supporting diplomatic efforts by the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) for the withdrawal of the Vietnamese from Cambodia. At the same time, the United States is assisting the two non-Communist guerrilla forces.

Wolf Creek to increase utility bills

Missouri attorney criticizes rate hike

By The Associated Press

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — An attorney for Kansas City, Mo., said a proposed rate increase by Kansas City Power & Light Co. to cover the cost of the Wolf Creek nuclear power project would hurt the city's economy.

Carrol Kennett, assistant city attorney for Kansas City, told the Missouri Public Service Commission Tuesday the impact of KCP&L's proposal would have "many adverse impacts" throughout the city's economy.

Representatives of the PSC staff and the Office of Public Counsel, which represents consumers before the commission, questioned KCP&L's management practices in building the plant and the facility's $2.9 billion cost.

However, Drue Jennings, KCP&L vice president and general counsel, said the utility had built the plant at a reasonable cost.

Their testimony came as PSC opened hearings Tuesday on KCP&L's request for a $237.6 million electric rate increase to cover the cost of its Wolf Creek nuclear power plant in Kansas.

The plant, located about 100 miles southwest of Kansas City, began commercial operation Tuesday, according to company officials.

KCP&L has asked for its rate increase to be phased in over a four-year period, but the PSC's staff has asked for it to be phased in over eight years to lessen the so-called "rate shock" to consumers and business customers of the Kansas City-based utility.

The company serves 234,000 customers in Missouri and about 125,000 customers in Kansas, where KCP&L also asked for a rate hike to pay for Wolf Creek.

Kennett said if the PSC approved KCP&L's rate proposal, the utility's rates would be among the highest in the nation, which would be burden to residential customers.

In addition, businesses would pass on their higher rates in the form of higher prices to consumers, he said.

KCP&L's rate plan would mean higher costs to industrial customers, hospitals, schools and others, Kennett said. In the case of industrial customers, some firms could be forced to cut back on their work forces to cover the higher electric rates, he said.

Such loss of jobs would have ripple effects throughout the city's economy, he predicted.

One estimate showed KCP&L's request would mean a $13.3 million increase in utility costs to state, local and federal government agencies in Kansas City, Kennett said.

Steven Dottheim, the PSC's deputy general counsel, also said a key issue in the case was whether KCP&L officials had been "prudent" in planning and construction of the nuclear plant, which originally was estimated to cost only $1 billion.

Dottheim said the utilities position was "no costs were incurred imprudently."

However, the review by the staff showed some phases of the Wolf Creek project werea not well managed, he said.

Dottheim said part of the problem in the eventual cost increase of the plant was caused by KCP&L's inexperience in building a nuclear plant.

Richard French, of the public counsel's office, said testimony from one expert on nuclear plants, showed it might have been preferable not to go ahead with the plant.

He noted Union Electric Co. of St. Louis gave up its plans for a second unit at its nuclear plant near Fulton, Mo.

Congress starts session with debt ceiling issue

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress ends its summer recess Wednesday with lawmakers seeing red — red ink, that is — as one of their first major decisions will be to either raise the public debt ceiling over $2 trillion or leave the government unable to finance its operations.

Sanctions against South Africa, trade protection bills, and farm programs also sit atop the agenda as the fall session begins.

There's little question Congress will extend the treasury's borrowing power, which could run dry by the end of the month. But the Senate, which will take up the issue first, is braced for an onslaught of amendments from senators tired of approving the steady rise in the debt, which has doubled since 1980.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., predicts the fight will be "the donnybrook of the year."

"We all know that the debt ceiling has got to be raised. That's not the issue," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas. The question, he said, is "are we going to change the system that has failed us."

Gramm said he's prepared a budget reform package to propose as an amendment to the debt ceiling bill. The plan would force the president and the Congress to gradually reduce annual deficits to zero by 1990.

The latest government estimate put the national debt at $1.819 trillion on Aug. 29, just $5 billion shy of the legal limit of $1.824 trillion.

The budget Congress adopted Aug. 1 estimated the government's borrowing needs would require a debt limit of $2.078 trillion for next year and up to $2.5 trillion by 1988. Interest on the debt costs $140 billion a year.

The full Senate won't convene until next Monday, when a vote is scheduled on choking off a conservative filibuster blocking final approval of sanctions against South Africa.

President Reagan reportedly is considering a veto of the compromise legislation, approved earlier by the House. The Republican-led Senate might override such a veto.

The House convenes Wednesday with a ceremony to swear in Jim Chapman, a Democrat elected to Texas' 1st District in a special election runoff on Aug. 3. Clapman replaces Rep. Sam Hall, D-Texas, who resigned to become a federal judge.

Counties gain prosecution jurisdiction

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — It will be left to county appraisers to decide whether to seek criminal charges against any merchants who under-reported their inventories on tax statements to avoid property taxes, Attorney General Robert T. Stephan said Tuesday.

Stephan said the state has no role in prosecuting tax cheats, saying it's strictly a matter between county appraisers and county attorneys. He made the comments in response to questions about a Board of Tax Appeals investigation that uncovered more than $20 million in merchants and manufacturers inventories statewide which was not on tax rolls and may have escaped taxation in past years.

"Generally, all failures to report are a misdemeanor and it's up to the appraiser to notify the county attorney of any violation," Stephan said. "If it's done intentionally, the procedure would be for the appraiser to get in touch with the county attorney.

"But I think it's important for everyone to honestly report their property for taxation or otherwise an unfair proportion of the tax burden falls on all the honest taxpayers. For us to have a fair tax structure, taxes must be equitably applied."

And he said enforcement of tax laws and prosecution of tax cheaters is important to ensure uniform compliance with tax laws.

"That's why the IRS folks are so tough," he said.

While it's unclear whether anyone will be prosecuted for tax fraud, one clear result of the inquest will be increased tax revenues for the counties where hidden inventories were discovered. That property will be taxed at full levels this year.

"There's no question that a great number of counties have benefited from increased valuation," said Fred Weaver, chairman of the tax board, which considers appeals from people who feel they are paying too much in taxes.

"To me, the most important benefit will be an awareness on the part of the counties that they can do more than they have been doing and that there are benefits that accrue to them and to the taxpayers when they comply with the law."

The investigation was ordered last winter by the five-member board after a number of inconsistencies and problems surfaced during property tax appeal hearings.

The most publicized case found by the board involved Payless Cashways Inc., which took advantage of a mistake by the 1982 Kansas Legislature which allowed it to intentionally under-report the size of its inventory and avoid paying thousands of dollars in taxes.

The board revised the tax assessment against the lumber company, saying it had not reported its inventory properly and its value should be $1.2 million rather than the approximate $500,000 value reported by the firm.

In addition, the Shawnee County attorney's office filed two misdemeanor fraud charges against Payless. A company official agreed to enter a diversion program as a result of the charges.

Also, there was testimony before legislative committees that inventories were being underrated by 30 percent to 50 percent, causing additional interest to be focused on the investigation.

The state's three biggest counties reported the largest amounts of hidden inventories.

The Sedgwick County appraiser's office found $12.8 million worth of previously untaxed or undertaxed inventories which now will be added to the county's valuation.

The Wyandotte County appraiser's office found upwards of $6 million in inventories which will be added to the tax lists.

The Johnson County appraiser's office reported its inventory values increased to $81 million this year from the $71.3 million level in 1984.

And the Shawnee County appraiser's office netted $3.5 million in inventory values, including $1.3 million from a single Topeka department store.

Band plans entertainment for autumn

By COLLEEN WILSON
Staff Writer

Thousands will watch the K-State marching band at halftime on Saturday, but few will consider the hours spent creating and perfecting the performance.

Band director Stanley Finck said by kickoff time, the 192 band members will have spent more than 48 hours practicing for the performance. This includes daily two-hour practices Monday through Thursday, an additional practice Friday and a pre-game practice Saturday, not including the day-long practices during the week of registration.

Sometimes the practices are tiring, but the results are worth it, said Leslie Stokes, junior in journalism and mass communications and clarinet player.

"Sometimes it will be raining and we'll be up to our knees in mud, or it will be really hot, but that's kind of what makes us feel tough," she said. "It's like, 'gosh, look how hard we're working. We're gonna put on an awesome show.'"

Finck said he spends quite a number of hours diagramming the formations. He distributes two pages of instructions and three maps to each section's squad leaders, and to the four drum majors who teach the band, flag line, rifle team and Pridettes the routine.

"The squad leaders keep track of their own group," Finck said. "We're very fortunate to have capable kids to do this."

Finck is busy throughout the year recruiting these "capable kids" from area high schools, but he said most of the recruiting is done by the band members themselves. He already has a student file of potential band members for next year.

Stokes remembers being contacted when she was a high school senior through an annual Department of Music newsletter. Soon after she arrived at K-State, Stokes went through "a simple tryout just to see if I could even play an instrument," she said. From there on, she was hooked.

"I just fell in love with it that first year," she said. "It has a real family atmosphere. We all sweat together, but we didn't care because our main cause is to put together that show. When you hear that crescendo shake the ground, it just sends shivers up your spine."

This year the band is planning a trip to Lawrence and then to Kansas City to play at halftime at the Kansas City Chiefs game against the Los Angeles Rams Oct. 20.

Other band events include an annual music fund run and the Sept. 28 Band Day. Seventy-five bands are expected for Band Day.

Finck said all participating bands have only one hour to practice the music and formation, but added, "Our band members are miracle workers — they take care of it."

For a different look for the band this year, Finck and band members have dug up some "old, old, old" uniforms and are trying to revitalize them. Finck said all the band members "had a clorox session" to clean the uniforms and he plans to use them for the drum line.

Another difference this year is that Athletic Director Larry Travis has agreed to move the band to the center of the student section.

Stokes said she is excited because this year the band will play on the 50-yard line.

"Before, the sound went off into no man's land, now the sound should be great," she said.

Artist leaves costly viola in KC airport

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A musical instrument valued at $210,000 was inadvertently removed from an Albuquerque-to-New York flight Monday and left unguarded for more than three hours at an airport gate in Kansas City, police said Tuesday.

The instrument — a Gaspar da Salo viola made in Italy in 1560 — was recovered by Eastern Airline officials in Kansas City and held for the owner.

Sgt. Jim Treece, a police spokesman, said Stephen Tenebom, a concert violist from New York City and the owner of the viola, had taken the instrument to a music festival in Albuquerque. Tenebom was going to another location and asked Andre Schub, a friend, to take care of the viola.

Police said the Eastern flight carrying Schub and the instrument made a stop in Kansas City. Another passenger helped an elderly woman departing the plane in Kansas City remove luggage from an overhead compartment and mistakenly removed the viola while Tenebom's friend was asleep.

Treece said it was not learned that the viola was gone until the plane was in the air to New York City.

Kansas City police were notified after midnight, nearly six hours after the plane left Kansas City, and Police Sgt. Lowell Fundom learned that an airport security officer had discovered the missing instrument near a gate inside the airport at about 9:45 p.m.

Police said it was assumed the elderly woman realized the viola was not hers and left it at the gate more than three hours before it was discovered.

"I think that could only happen in Kansas City," Schub said Tuesday in a telephone interview from New York. "It sure wouldn't happen here."

Space shuttle ends week-long mission

By The Associated Press

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Space shuttle Discovery's triumphant astronauts landed safely by dawn's early light Tuesday, completing a "near-perfect" repair mission in space that revived a lifeless $85 million satellite.

Discovery dropped out of a brightening sunrise sky and mission commander Joe Engle and pilot Dick Covey guided the 100-ton craft to a flawless landing down the centerline on the dry lakebed runway, ending a week-long, 2.9 million-mile voyage.

"Eddie (Edwards) looks beautiful," said Engle, a former test pilot who once flew airplanes at the desert test flight center.

"Welcome home, Joe, and congratulations to the whole crew," said Mission Control.

Jesse Moore, director of NASA's space shuttle program, said he was delighted with the mission that included the "jump start" salvage of the Syncom 3 satellite and the successful launch of three other satellites.

Astronauts perform 'like clockwork'

If Syncom 3 works when it is fired toward a higher orbit next month, it will become the first commercial satellite salvaged in space. An earlier astronaut crew repaired and relaunched Solar Max, a science satellite. Two broken commercial satellites have been returned to Earth for repairs.

"I have to characterize this as a near-perfect mission," said Moore at a post-landing news conference. "It clearly demonstrated the value of people in space."

Moore praised the crew for performing "like clockwork" in their dramatic repair of the Syncom satellite.

An hour before the 8:15 a.m. CDT landing, Engle fired braking rockets over the Indian Ocean to start Discovery falling toward Earth.

"Looks like this bus is coming home," the astronaut told Mission Control.

In a long fiery arc, the spacecraft streaked above the Pacific Ocean, crossed the California coast north of Los Angeles with a double sonic boom, turned and then dived toward the lakebed.

Aviation pioneer Chuck Yeager, who described himself as a "hunting and fishing buddy" of Engle, was among the 2,100 people who watched the landing.

During the week-long mission, the astronauts launched three satellites for commercial customers and then stalked and captured the crippled Syncom 3.

Syncom 3 was launched from the shuttle last April, but failed to turn itself on. Astronauts on that flight attempted to activate it by brushing a switch with improvised fly-swatter-like snares. The switch moved, but the satellite remained lifeless.

Astronauts James "Ox" van Hoften and Bill Fisher, in two weekend spacewalks, muscled it onto Discovery's robot arm. They then installed an electronics box and a wiring harness to bypass the failed electrical circuit.

Van Hoften launched the 7½-ton satellite, heaving like a weightlifter to give it a stabilizing spin of about three revolutions per minute as it floated away.

Engineers at Hughes Communications Inc., owner of the Syncom, reported its batteries and liquid-fueled rocket engines seem undamaged, despite four inactive months in the supercold of space.

Hughes president Steven Dorfman said the final success of the salvage effort will not be known until Oct. 29 when Syncom 3 is scheduled to fire the solid rocket and climb to an orbit 22,300 miles above the Earth.

Hughes spent $12.5 million on the salvage effort, including a $8.5 million payment to NASA.

Insurance underwriters paid Hughes $85 million, but will receive $65 million back in a profit-sharing arrangement if Syncom 3 works.

Syncom 3 is to be one of four satellites leased by Hughes to the U.S. Navy.

Weekend blaze injures student in Moore Hall

By Collegian Staff

A fire Sunday morning destroyed room 422 in Moore Hall injuring one student, authorities said Tuesday.

Mark Mahan, freshman in architectural engineering, was taken by a Riley County ambulance to St. Mary Hospital where he was treated for second and third degree burns on his arms and legs. He was later released.

Mahan and his roommate, Norman Tyree, sophomore in business adminstration, were apparently sleeping when the fire broke out.

The cause of the blaze is thought to be a candle left burning on a plastic shelf. University officials said the blaze was not criminal.

The Manhattan Fire Department responded to the call at 9:42 a.m. and found heavy smoke on both wings of the fourth floor. The smoke was spreading to the third and fifth floors, said Bill Smith, fire chief.

Hall Director Jim Sands said the fire was confined to room 422, but all occupants were evacuated.

Damage to Moore Hall is estimated at $2,000. Damage to the student's personal effects has been estimated between $2,000 and $3,000.

POW's remains baffle identification experts

By The Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — One of eight sets of remains released by Vietnam last year cannot be positively identified as that of the Marine pilot as presumed, a forensics expert said Tuesday.

Dr. Clyde Snow, a forensic anthropologist, reached his conclusion after examining the bones, which were exhumed two weeks ago on orders of Kathryn Fanning, widow of Maj. Hugh Fanning.

Fanning said last month she had many questions about how the Army determined that the remains were those of her husband.

"Probably the Army report is essentially accurate as far as it goes," Snow said. "There are several modes of identifying a body. I would need a great deal more documentary information."

Fanning's A-6 jet was shot down over Vietnam on Oct. 31, 1967, when he was 26. The Army said his remains were among those of eight brought back to the United States last year, and they were buried in Oklahoma City on Aug. 8, 1984.

Snow said he couldn't determine from the remains whether the man was left-handed and didn't know how the Army did in its forensic report.

Fanning said the bones will be stored in a laboratory in hopes some new information, such as X-rays, are found to reach a determination.

Infrared heating device destroys dioxin

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An infrared heating device destroyed dioxin from contaminated soil during a test this summer in Missouri, making it the third successful incinerator to burn the toxic chemical, it was announced Tuesday.

An official of Shirco Infrared Systems Inc. of Dallas told a congressional panel there was no detectable dioxin in the soil after it was treated by the company's mobile unit. The test in July at Times Beach, Mo., he said, produced "very extraordinary results."

"Our truly mobile system permits on-site cleanup. Our distinctive infrared process ensures safe and economical disposal," James Welsh, Shirco's president, told the House Small Business subcommittee on energy, environment and safety.

A Missouri environmental official confirmed the results for the panel, adding that no dioxin contamination was found in the exhaust gases from the equipment or in dust from an air pollution device that is part of the treatment system.

Last year a New Jersey company used an advanced electric reactor to destroy dioxin at a state research site at Times Beach, and this year the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency successfully tested a tractor-trailer-size mobile incinerator in southwest Missouri.

Robert Schreiber Jr., director of the division of environmental quality in the Missouri Department of Natural Resources, said the test in July was a "very positive" development for efforts to clean up dioxin-contaminated sites in the state, which now number 44.

However, he said it was premature to consider selecting a firm to use an incineration process in the state. But added that mobile incinerators offer a possible solution to dixoin contamination in some Missouri sites.

Management key to Chiefs' success

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Anybody who says the 1985 Kansas City Chiefs are more talented than their immediate predecessors will get an argument from Brad Budde.

A new attitude by management, more than anything else, has resulted in an optimistic outlook and a 3-1 exhibition record, he says.

"I think John Mackovic has a lot to do with it," Budde said of the Chiefs' third-year head coach. "I think the management is really treating players well, starting to pay them well. Those are the intangibles we've lacked in the past."

All-pro defensive end Art Still and Budde, a sixth-year guard, were two of several training camp holdouts. But the long, bitter standoffs which soured Chiefs' camps of the past did not take shape. Shortly after owner Lamar Hunt made a hurried trip to Kansas City, everybody had been signed, sealed and made happy.

"Used to be, everybody was griping about money. But you don't hear that anymore," Budde said. "Everybody's happy. John is a very demanding coach, which we need. I really think that's why we're performing so well."

It's Mackovic's third year in charge of one of the National Football League's longest rebuilding projects and the former Dallas Cowboy assistant has honed the passing game to a fine edge. Quarterback Bill Kenney, who passed for more than 4,000 yards in Mackovic's first season, is fully cured of the nagging injuries which felled him during much of last year's 8-8 campaign. Kenney throws a beautiful middle-range pass and has a talented corps of receivers in Carlos Carson, Stephone Paige, Henry Marshall and Anthony Hancock.

There are other areas of apparent strength. Tight end, a trouble spot for more than 10 years, seems to be improved with the play during the exhibition season of Walt Arnold.

The kicking game is among the NFL's finest with the return of placekicker Nick Lowery and punter Jim Arnold. And Budde's offensive line figures to be a strength, as does a talented secondary and a potentially dominanting defensive front.

Flanking Still at the other defensive end spot is Mike Bell, who can be overpowering if he stays away from nagging injuries. In the middle is second-year noseguard Bill Maas, the Associated Press' NFL defensive newcomer of the year in 1985.

Nothing in the pre-season gave reason to expect great improvement in the two main chinks in the Chiefs' armor — running back and linebacker.

A quality running back to complement their well-conceived passing game may be all the Chiefs need for a championship-caliber attack. But Ethan Horton of North Carolina, the first running back taken in the 1985 draft, gained only a disappointing 50 yards on 30 preseason carries. If he fails to develop, the Chiefs will see continued double-coverage of their wide receivers.

Gary Spani remains the only one of the Chiefs' four starting linebackers who has established himself as above-average.

Perhaps the biggest obstacle standing in the Chiefs' path is their schedule. It calls for 10 games against teams that made the 1984 playoffs, including Super Bowl participants Miami and San Francisco.

But here again, Budde would disagree.

"You've got to play with the big boys if you expect to be there," he said. "In years past, we've had a so-called easier schedule and not done anything. But that's part of it, too, changing the attitude to look forward to those tough teams, and having the confidence that we can play well and be physical and wear them down."

Staff/Jeff A. Taylor

Kansas City Chiefs defenders Gary Spani (59) and Kevin Ross (31) tackle St. Louis Cardinals tight end John Goode (84) after he caught a pass during Saturday night's game in Arrowhead Stadium. The Chiefs defeated the Cardinals 17-13 to end their preseason schedule with a 3-1 record.

McRae lifts KC to 3-2 win

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bret Saberhagen outdueled Tom Seaver, and Hal McRae hit a two-run homer Tuesday night, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

The 21-year-old Saberhagen gave up seven hits to raise his record to 17-5, tying Ron Guidry of the New York Yankees for most victories in the American League.

Seaver, winless since he joined the 300-victory club on Aug. 4, surrendered six hits as his season record dipped to 12-10.

McRae, who also homered Monday night, came up in the first after George Brett had drawn a two-out walk. The veteran designated hitter hit Seaver's first pitch over the center-field wall for his 13th home run of the season.

Royals sign Moreno to replace injured Wilson

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City centerfielder Willie Wilson remained hospitalized Tuesday after suffering a severe reaction to a penicillin shot administered to cure a cold.

Wilson, who underwent surgery Monday to relieve swelling in a muscle caused by the penicillin reaction, was expected to be lost for at least two weeks, the Royals said. Wilson is expected to remain in the hospital until Thursday or Friday.

The Royals on Tuesday signed free-agent outfielder Omar Moreno. Lynn Jones has played in centerfield in the two games missed by Wilson, who is hitting .285, has stolen 40 bases and leads the major leagues with 19 triples.

"Under the circumstances, we feel very fortunate that a player with Moreno's physical abilities is available," said General Manager John Schuerholz. "His speed and defensive skills will go a long way in helping us offset the loss of Willie Wilson."

The shot was given to Wilson Saturday night in Arlington, Texas by the team physician of the Texas Rangers, Dr. B.J. Mycoskie. Wilson could not play Sunday night because of pain and numbness in his leg and needed a wheelchair to get on a plane to return to Kansas City.

"You got a guy with a pretty bad cold," said Royals Manager Dick Howser. "He was having some problems. But guys play with colds. I've never seen anything quite like this. Never have."

Mycoskie is the same doctor who gave a shot to New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin. Martin suffered a collapsed lung.

"If it's a reaction to penicillin," said Kansas City co-owner Avron Fogelman, "it can happen to anybody, any time, any situation."

Dr. Paul Meyer, the Royals' team physician, said he was not aware Wilson was allergic to penicillin.

"I don't recall if I've given any penicillin to Willie," he said. "I'm not as prone to giving penicillin as some doctors. But it has nothing to do with what Dr. Mycoskie did. This is not a coverup."

Moreno, who has 470 career stolen bases, was released by the New York Yankees on August 16. He was batting .197 with one home run, four runs batted in and one stolen base in limited duty.

Moreno began his major league career with the Pittsburgh Pirates and played on the 1979 World Series winner. He signed as a free agent with Houston in 1983 and was traded to the Yankees in August 1983 for Jerry Mumphrey.

Howser said Pat Sheridan also may play centerfield, although he is still recovering from a strained hamstring.

It was the third injury to a key player for the Royals, who went into Tuesday's game with the Chicago White Sox trailing the California Angels by 2½ games in the American League West. Second baseman Frank White has missed two games with a deep thigh bruise, and catcher Jim Sundberg has missed 14 games with torn cartilage in his rib cage.

Smith set to testify today in Pittsburgh trial

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Lonnie Smith of the Kansas City Royals is expected to be the first witness to testify today, and the key to the federal government's case, in the cocaine trafficking trial of Curtis Strong, a former Philadelphia Phillies clubhouse caterer, The Associated Press learned Tuesday.

Smith is expected to be called this afternoon and Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets will be called next to testify, said sources close to the case who requested anonymity.

Smith has confessed to several years of cocaine abuse and testified under a grant of immunity before a federal grand jury that indicted Strong and six other Pennsylvanians on drug trafficking charges in May.

Smith recently told The New York Times that he identified his drug supplier to both the FBI and to the Pittsburgh grand jury. Smith underwent drug rehabilitation in 1983, the year after he was a key member of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals.

"We're going to find out if a jury will believe the testimony of junkies," said Strong's 'attorney, Adam O. Renfroe Jr., who would not identify the "junkies."

Smith's testimony is expected to follow completion of the jury selection, which took most of the court's time Tuesday, and opening remarks by Renfroe and U.S. Attorney J. Alan Johnson.

Smith is one of 10 current and former players identified last week by Johnson in court documents as prospective witnesses in the case, which could take more than a week to try.

Royals spokesman Dean Vogelaar said Smith would miss the Royals' home game Tuesday night against the Chicago White Sox because of his court appearance, but hope Smith will be back in uniform tonight.

Mets Manager Dave Johnson said Hernandez, also a former Cardinal, is expected to "miss a day" because of the Strong case.

Among the other players who could be called are Dave Parker of the Cincinnati Reds, Rod Scurry of the Pittsburgh Pirates and Al Holland of the California Angels.

Top 7 teams hold rankings in first week of AP poll

By The Associated Press

The nation's top seven teams, none of which has played a game this season, retained their positions Tuesday in the first regular-season Associated Press college football poll.

Defending national champion Brigham Young jumped from 10th place to eighth after opening with a victory over Boston College.

Top-rated Oklahoma, which doesn't get under way until Sept. 28, received 27 of 60 first-place votes and 1,049 of a possible 1,100 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Auburn received 10 first-place votes and 948 points, followed by Southern Methodist with two firsts and 834 points.

Iowa retained the No. 4 spot with five first-place ballots and 810 points while Florida received two firsts and 735 points. One first-place vote went to sixth-place Southern California, which received 715 points. The Trojans visit Illinois on Saturday.

Seventh-place Maryland received three first-place ballots and 701 points.

No. 1 Lloyd, Conners advance at U.S. Open

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert Lloyd, the two winningest players in U.S. Open history, kept alive their title hopes Tuesday with hard-fought victories.

Lloyd, the No. 1 seed who is seeking her seventh women's singles title here, reached the semifinals for the 15th consecutive year by disposing of tenacious Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany 6-3, 6-3. Lloyd's next foe will be third-seeded Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, who edged No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia 7-6 (7-4), 7-5.

Connors, going for his sixth men's crown, having last won in 1983, stopped Stefan Edberg of Sweden, the No. 11 seed, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 in a match that was much closer than the score indicated.

Connors will face Switzerland's Heinz Gunthardt in their quarterfinal match. The other quarterfinal pairing in the bottom half of the draw will pit No. 7 Yannick Noah of France against the winner of Tuesday night's match between second-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and teen-ager Jaime Yzaga of Peru.

Noah stopped amateur Jay Berger, a Clemson University sophomore, 6-7, 6-2, 6-3, 6-1, while Gunthardt ousted Henri Leconte of France 7-6, 6-2, 3-6, 4-6, 6-3.

Wheat

bushels of wheat were harvested in Kansas this year. That represents the third largest Kansas wheat crop on record. If there is a glut of wheat on the market, the resulting price decline may provide incentive for producers to supplement their livestock rations with wheat instead of traditional grains such as milo, sorghum silage and corn.

Larry Penka, manager of Ingalls Feedyard, an Irsik-Doll firm, feeds cattle a ration that is 30 percent to 35 percent wheat.

"We've had it (wheat) in our ration for years. The cattle do as well on wheat as anything else," he said.

Penka feeds wheat to his cattle four to five months a year, but cautions that livestock producers should "be careful (when) feeding wheat" to their cattle.

A pamphlet published by the Kansas Wheat Commission, titled "Wheat for Feed," recommends that wheat supplements be limited to 40 percent of the total ration. This can help avoid often fatal rumen acidosis, or bloat, which is caused by overeating.

John Brethour, feed nutritionist for the Fort Hays Branch Agricultural Experiment Station, has completed studies "which show efficient methods of using up to 100 percent wheat in cattle rations."

Jim Bair, marketing specialist for the wheat commission, said feeders are becoming more aware of wheat.

"It has been used for a long time, but traditionally, the price of wheat has been too high for livestock feed. But now wheat is replacing corn and milo. It has been used some places at 100 percent, but more generally it is mixed with grain sorghum (milo)," Bair said.

Wheat has additional attributes other than low cost, said David Frey, assistant administrator of the wheat commission.

"Wheat is higher in energy than, say, corn," said Frey. "It also has two or three more percentage points of protein."

If cattle are fed wheat, their feed intake requirements will be less than with other grains, but the livestock will gain the same amount of weight. That reduction in feed consumption could enhance the profit potential of the farmer or rancher's operation.

Brethour has completed research that may enable wheat cleanings or liftings — which includes dust, chaff, straw, weed seed and broken kernels — as feed.

Before the research on wheat liftings began, Brethour "underestimated the nutritional value of the liftings," but after compiling the data he found the "calves that received the test ration (of liftings) grew significantly faster."

Frey said the possibility of feeding wheat cleanings "makes wheat more competitive in price value."

Wheat is valuable in beef cattle rations, but may also be added to other livestock rations. Clifford Spaeth, associate professor of animal sciences and industry and extension sheep specialist, said wheat is acceptable in sheep rations.

"It is entirely based on price if you feed wheat or not," Spaeth said. "The generally accepted practice when feeding wheat is to go with it up to 50 percent of the ration."

For hogs, "wheat is just as good as anything," said Paul Maxson, extension swine specialist.

"You just have to watch the economics of it. You have to make sure to balance the diet and make sure the grind is right when it is processed." If the wheat is ground too fine, Maxson said, it will lose its palatibility.

"It is just like us putting baking flour in our mouths. It doesn't taste very good," he said.

A significant portion of the U.S. wheat harvest is exported for consumption by livestock.

the anniversary walkout spread rapidly in a mixture of spontaneity and coercion by militant students.

Streets of the Cape Town's Malay Quarter were closed in the morning. Youths hurled rocks at cars in the second straight day of unrest in the district overlooking the white heartland of the picturesque port city, witnesses said

The mine strike was to have involved 60,000 miners at five gold and two coal mines. Union leaders said 28,000 men walked out Monday, but management said the total was fewer than half that.

Both sides charged intimidation.

Sikh extremists shoot politician, bodyguard; officials order curfew

By The Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Three suspected Sikh extremists firing machine guns burst into a city council office Wednesday and killed a prominent politician who was a close friend of the prime minister. A bodyguard also was slain and six people were reported wounded.

Slain councilman Arjun Dass, 46, was a Hindu and a member of the Congress Party of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. Gandhi called an emergency meeting to review security in New Delhi.

In Punjab state, which has been beset for Sikh violence for more than a year, two terrorists riding a motor scooter opened fire in an industrial area of Jalandhar City. Police in the northern state said two people were injured, but gave no further details.

A series of coordinated attacks Tuesday by Sikh extremists in Punjab villages took the lives of four Hindus and injured 12 others. Hindus are a religious majority in all of India except the Punjab.

Authorities believed the spate of violence was intended to sabotage Punjab's Sept. 25 elections, which are being boycotted by Sikh militants.

Officials responded by ordering a dusk-to-dawn curfew on a section of Punjab's border with Pakistan. The curfew was imposed to "prevent entrance or exit of disruptive elements in the wake of the coming elections," according to an official statement.

Dass, a member of the Delhi Metropolitan Council, was named by civil liberties groups as one of 16 Congress Party leaders who allegedly instigated anti-Sikh riots following the assassination last Oct. 31 of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

At least 2,700 people died in the four-day riots, including almost 2,000 Sikhs in New Delhi alone. Another Congress Party politician linked to the riots, national lawmaker Lalit Maken, was assassinated at his home July 31.

Two of the six injured were listed in serious condition at the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences, a government hospital. Doctors said Dass was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital.

Merit pay controversy becomes analysis focus

By TRISH MEHAFFEY
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part report on merit pay. Friday's story will deal with the legalities of merit pay.

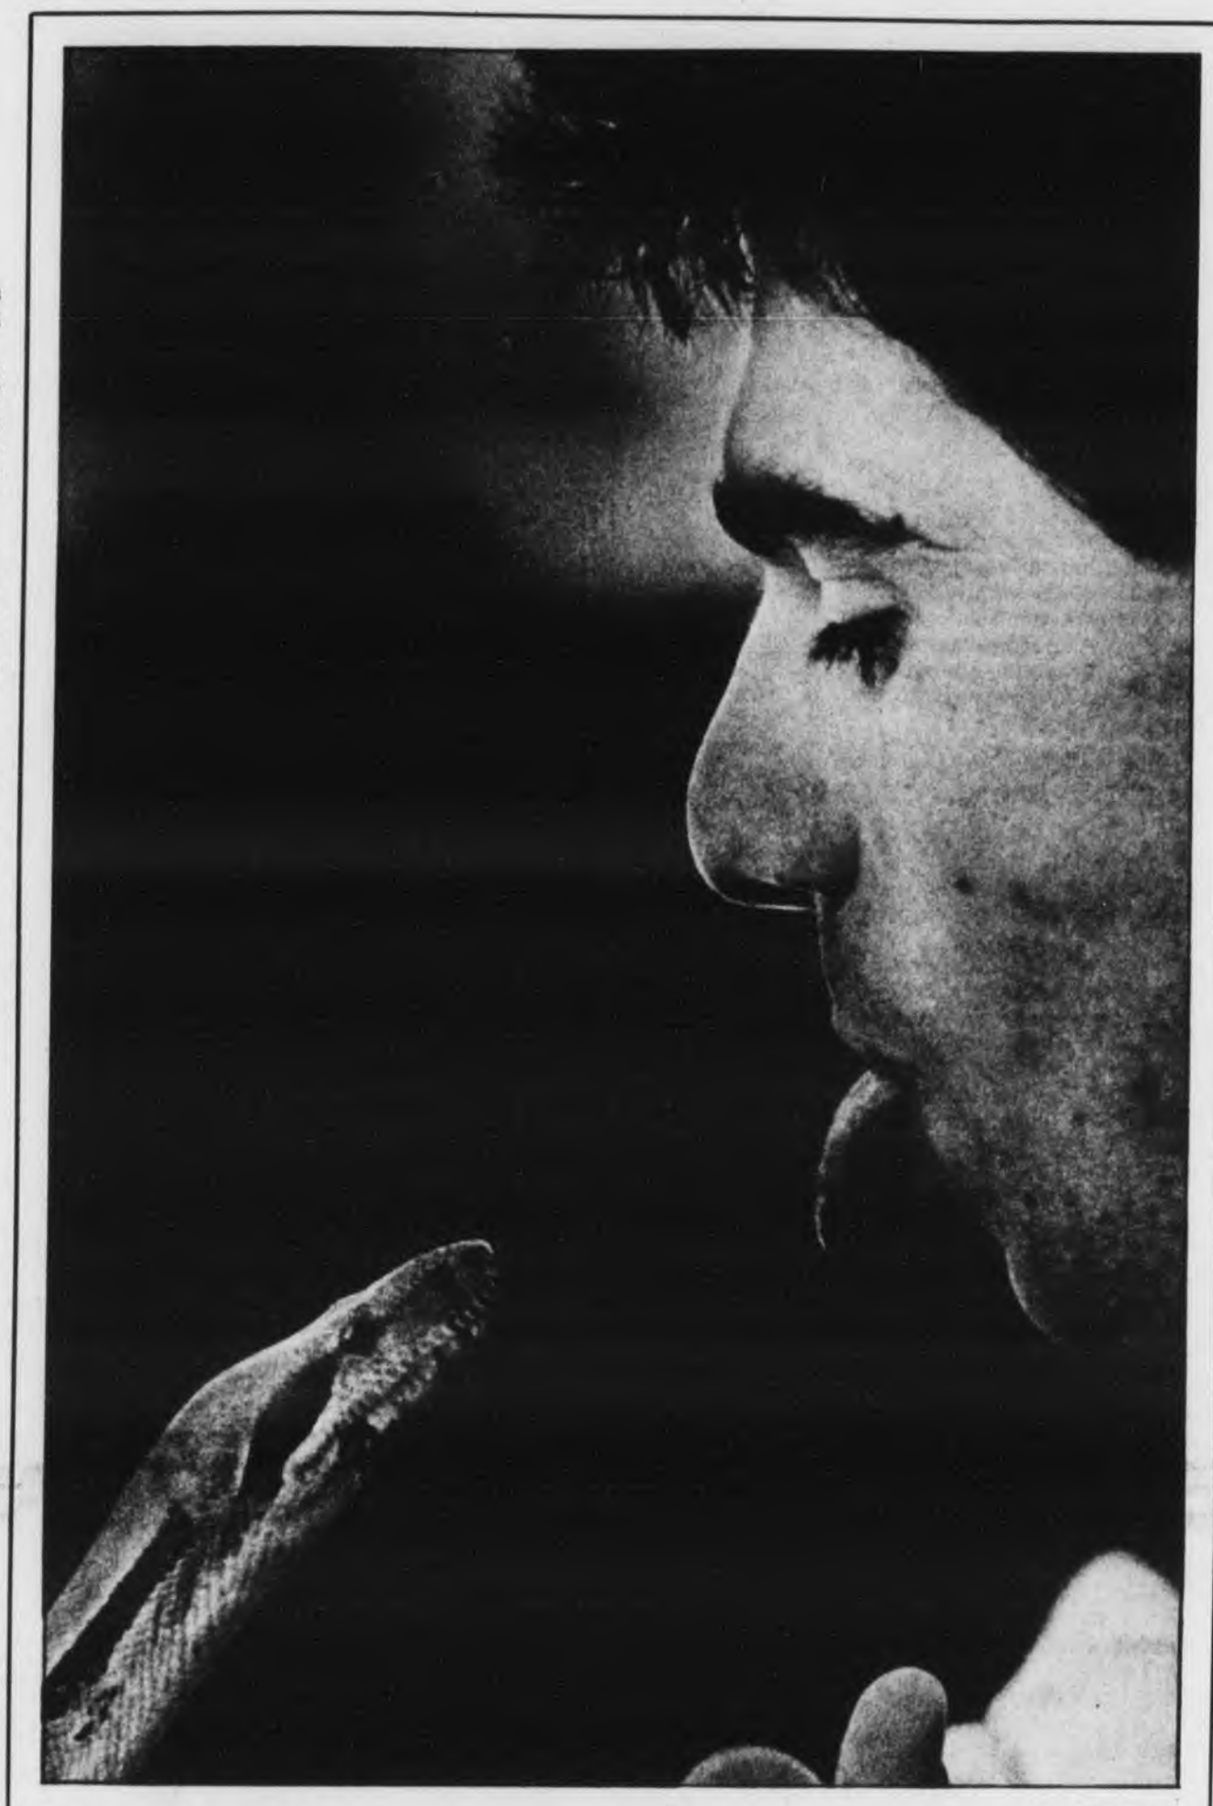
Controversy about pay increases to provide incentives for improved teacher performance has become the focus of a study in the College of Education.

Terry A. Astuto, assistant professor of education, is co-authoring the booklet, "Merit Pay For Teachers — An Analysis of State Policy Options", with David L. Clark, professor of education at Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.

Because of her interest in improving the organization of school systems, Astuto was asked by the College of Education in December 1983, to develop an analysis of merit pay.

Astuto said she worked on the booklet for six months. It was published in January 1985.

"The booklet is neutral; it just states issues and policies, not personal opinions," she said.



The booklet includes merit pay in local education agencies, how it affects teachers, proposals by state education agencies and conclusions drawn.

Astuto said she believes a statewide plan for teachers would be inefficient.

"It should be more localized so the local districts (can) decide what they want," she said. "There's nothing that says merit pay will upgrade teaching and nothing to say it won't. The biggest problem is money. Most local districts don't feel they have enough money to appropriate funds."

She said merit pay should be built on base salary. If teachers are underpaid in a school district, merit

Fraternity restraints maintained

By WAYNE PRICE
Managing Editor

The Interfraternity Council voted Tuesday night to uphold sanctions against the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity.

The ATOs, 1632 McCain Lane, were appealing sanctions imposed by the IFC board of directors for the alleged hazing of a number of pledges during the 1984 fall semester.

At a special meeting in the council chambers at the K-State Union, the IFC voted 18-6 to uphold the sanctions, Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs, said Wednesday morning.

The IFC is composed of presidents of all fraternities recognized by the Office of Greek Affairs.

Robel wouldn't elaborate on the nature of the alleged hazing or specify the sanctions imposed on the fraternity while the matter might still be appealed. Robel also declined to specify the number of former pledges involved in the complaint.

"The appeal process now goes beyond greek affairs," Robel said.

Joel Hermes, senior in computer science and president of ATO, said he was "disappointed" in the decision and was unsure whether the fraternity would appeal the matter further.

"We evaluated what happened and we don't know at this time what we're going to do," Hermes said.

Hermes previously denied some of the allegations and said the sanctions were "inappropriate," although he wouldn't elaborate on the penalties pending appeal.

If the ATOs plan to appeal, they have until 5 p.m. Friday to file the appeal with the Council on Student Affairs.

The 11-member council consists of six students and four faculty members. William Sutton, the recently appointed vice-president for educational and student services, is chairman of the council.

Also sitting on the council is Gary Arroyo, sophomore in veterinary medicine and president of IFC. Arroyo was in charge of the investigation which led to the sanctions against the ATOs.

Sutton said if Arroyo's presence on the student affairs council becomes an issue, there would be a special meeting to determine what action would be taken.

Soviets consider using satellite weapon

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union announced Wednesday it will consider itself free to deploy anti-satellite systems in space if the United States goes ahead with its planned test of an anti-satellite weapon.

Then-Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov announced two years ago that the Kremlin was adopting a unilateral moratorium on the testing and deployment of anti-satellite weapons.

Andropov had said the ban would remain in force as long as other powers including the United States refrained from similar testing and deployment.

A statement from the official news agency Tass, a form of report thought to reflect the highest official thinking in the Kremlin, said, "If the United States holds tests of anti-satellite weapons against a target in outer space, the Soviet Union will consider itself free of its unilateral commitment not to place anti-satellite systems in space.

"The entire responsibility for the further development of events will rest entirely on the American side," the statement from Tass said.

The United States on Wednesday dismissed the announcement as having "little practical meaning."

The Reagan administration, in identically worded statements issued by the White House and the State Department, called the Soviet announcement a "threat" and reaffirmed U.S. intentions to go ahead with the scheduled American test.

"They (the Soviets) have had for several years an operational ASAT system," the U.S. statement said. "In fact, their operational system goes into space and performs its mission."

Earlier, through the Tass news agency, the Kremlin said it would "consider itself free" to lift a two-year moratorium on deployment of anti-satellite weapons if the United States proceeded with the ASAT test.

U.S. sources said the Air Force had planned to carry out the first test of its anti-satellite weapon Wednesday but the Pentagon postponed it to ensure compliance with requirements that Congress be notified.

Reprieve sends killer back to Florida jail

STARKE, Fla. — Convicted murderer Willie Darden, spared by the U.S. Supreme Court hours before his scheduled Wednesday execution, resumed his life on Florida's death row, where he has lived longer than any inmate except one.

Just before midnight Tuesday, a sharply divided U.S. Supreme Court granted him an indefinite stay, blocking the execution in the electric chair set for 7 a.m. at Florida State Prison near Starke.

Darden, convicted of gunning down a Lakeland furniture store owner in robbery that netted $15, was with his girlfriend, step-sister

Credit system requires financial bailout

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Economic conditions in U.S. agriculture have slumped so badly that the $74 billion farm credit system, the nation's largest farm lender, can no longer absorb its losses and will have to seek outside help, system spokesmen said Wednesday.

The Farm Credit Administration's board of directors met to review the system's woes and to decide what steps, including government assistance, would be needed.

Reports that the system will need a bailout sometime in the next two years represented a reversal.

Regulators of the quasi-governmental farm lender have insisted for months that they had adequate reserves to withstand current financial problems in agriculture, and have been raising interest rates, shifting funds and streamlining operations in an effort to shore up its financial position.

But the picture has worsened in recent weeks. Projections of bumper grain crops mean increased surpluses and lower prices to farmers, decreasing their ability to keep up with loan payments. Export sales of farm goods continue to erode, and the value of farmland which is used for collateral still is plummeting.

"We've come to realize that the deterioration in agriculture has grown beyond the ability of (the farm credit system) to handle it," system governor Donald Wilkinson told the Wall Street Journal. "We cannot absorb the losses we face."

The system's problems, which had been confined largely to its regional banks which make short-term operating loans to farmers, now have spread to the federal land banks, its

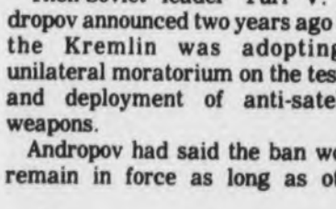
Kansas Farm Union calls for swift action

By The Associated Press

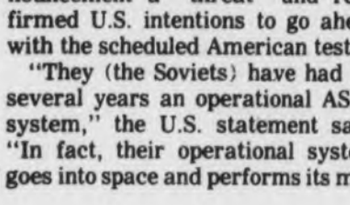
TOPEKA — Ivan Wyatt, president of the Kansas Farmers Union, Wednesday criticized Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole and the Reagan administration for failing to respond to the mounting financial crisis facing farmers and rural businesses and called on Congress to take swift, effective action during the fall session.



Wyatt, leader of the state's second largest farm organization which claims about 5,000 Kansas families as dues-paying members, sent a letter to Dole, R-Kan., saying his proposal to reduce world grain prices would "bankrupt thousands of American farmers." And Wyatt said he will travel to Washington D.C. next week in hopes of meeting with the state's senior senator to persuade him to change his program.

"I am sincerely concerned about what is happening to the American farm family and thousands of honest, hard-working family farmers are also concerned," Wyatt said in the letter. "It is sad, but if the present situation continues in agriculture, the only legacy the Reagan administration will leave is a bankrupt farm economy and probably a bankrupt America."

If the debt-ridden agricultural industry is allowed to slide even further, Wyatt warned the federal debt would increase $13 billion to $21 billion, upwards of 275,000 jobs will be lost and the nation's gross national product would drop possibly as much as $50 billion. He based his predictions on a Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute study.



"When you see your friends and neighbors going bankrupt and losing their farms, it makes you want to hit somebody hard," Wyatt said

17-year-old wins piano contest

VEVEY, Switzerland — Seventeen-year-old Natasa Veljkovic of Yugoslavia triumphed over 66 other pianists to become the youngest winner of the Clara Haskil prize, contest officials said Wednesday.

She was also the first person from her homeland to win the annual contest, instituted in 1963 in memory of Miss Haskil, a celebrated Romanian-born pianist. Entrants from 26 countries took part in this year's event.

Miss Veljkovic was selected the winner from six finalists, who performed Tuesday with the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra for the seven judges. She received 12,000 Swiss francs, worth $5,100.

Two other finalists, Huseyin Sermet, 30, of Turkey and Philippe Zahnd, a 20-year-old Swiss, received special mention.

Soviets, Afghans assault rebels

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A large Soviet-Afghan force with air and armored support launched repeated assaults on rebel positions near the Pakistani border Wednesday, trying to crush the Moslem insurgents and cut their supply lines.

Although the rebel firepower is limited, guerrilla commanders said their men were holding many of their positions in eastern Afghanistan's Paktia province.

Heavy losses were reported on both sides.

The Soviet and Afghan force is estimated at 10,000 to 15,000.

The objective of the drive is to regain rebel-held areas in southern Paktia province and to choke off the supplies that move across the border from refugee camps just inside Pakistan. The camps shelter millions of Afghans who fled the Soviet-installed communist regime.

Refugee hospitals in Pakistan reported receiving scores of wounded guerrillas. Hospitals in Kabul, capital of Afghanistan, are full of wounded from the Paktia fighting and more casualties arrive daily at the airport, according to Western diplomatic sources.

Rioting flares in Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Fierce rioting flared east of Cape Town Wednesday and one report said at least 40 people were wounded by police shotgun fire. The nation's battered currency dropped sharply again, three days after monetary controls were imposed to halt a financial crisis.

The currency, the rand, has been steadily weakened in a year of unrest over the white government's apartheid policies.

Police said two white soldiers and a black policeman were killed in incidents related to anti-apartheid disturbances. A police statement said 20 whites were arrested after a clash with police near Rhodes University in eastern Cape Province.

Youths heaved stones and gasoline bombs at police and army patrols in mixed-race townships around Cape Town's eastern suburbs into the night Wednesday, residents of the areas said.

Activist supporters win court case

KANSAS CITY — Supporters of imprisoned Indian activist Leonard Peltier have won a round in federal court for their plan to hold a rally and march in Leavenworth this weekend.

In a ruling returned late Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Dale E. Saffels blocked Leavenworth officials from enforcing a city ordinance requiring groups to post a $500,000 insurance bond before holding parades and public gatherings.

The Kansas chapter of the Leonard Peltier Support Group filed the suit last week claiming they could not afford the estimated $300 to $600 insurance premium. They claimed the city's requirement for the bond denied them their constitutional rights to assembly and free speech.

Peltier is serving two life terms in the federal prison at Leavenworth following his conviction in the slaying of two FBI agents during disturbances at the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota in 1975.

The support group plans a rally and religious ceremony in Dougherty Park, followed by a march to the federal prison on Saturday. On Sunday, following another traditional Indian religious ceremony, some members of the group say they plan to begin a march to St. Louis, more than 250 miles away, where they will join other support group members.

Smoking may reduce some cancers

BOSTON — Older women who smoke heavily may actually lower their risk of cancer of the uterus, possibly because cigarettes reduce their estrogen secretions, a new study suggests. But the researchers caution that the dangers of smoking far outweigh any potential benefits.

"The significance of this is the lead that it provides for potentially understanding the cause of endometrial cancer," said Harvey Fineberg, dean of the Harvard School of Public Health.

The study found that the risk of cancer of the lining of the uterus, or endometrium, is lower than usual among heavy smokers who have passed menopause, the researchers wrote in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Researchers calculated that smoking would prevent six deaths among every 100,000 postmenopausal smokers each year but noted the annual number of lives lost because of cigarette smoking is approximately 30 times as high.

The Department of Health and Human Services estimates that 30 percent of all cancer deaths, or about 125,000 a year, can be attributed to smoking. Smoking causes cancers of the lung, mouth, throat, bladder and pancreas. It is also a major cause of heart disease, emphysema and bronchitis.

Former 'Superfund' chief released

PLEASANTON, Calif. — Rita Lavelle, former chief of the federal toxic waste "Superfund," was released from prison today after serving all but three weeks of a six-month sentence for lying to Congress.

Lavelle, 37, said she has finished the first draft of a book on her experiences. In addition to the prison sentence, she was fined $10,000.

She spent her time in prison teaching English to fellow prisoners and was released early because of her good behavior, her lawyer said.

Lavelle, who was fired from her job by President Reagan, was convicted in December 1983 of lying about when she discovered that her former employer, Aerojet General Corp. of Sacramento was dumping toxic wastes at the Stringfellow Acid Pits near Riverside.

'Lovely Rita' retires from duty

LONDON — "Lovely Rita, Meter Maid," is retiring this week after 20 years of handing out parking tickets.

Meta Davis, now a 65-year-old grandmother, became the inspiration for the famous Beatles song after she ticketed Paul McCartney's car one day in 1967.

"Paul McCartney came up as I was writing out his ticket" for running out of time at a parking meter in north London, she said Wednesday. "He saw that my name was Meta and he laughed and said: 'That would make a nice jingle. I could use that.'

"We chatted for a few minutes and then he drove off. I didn't think any more about it, but then later the song came out," she said.

"My children were big Beatles fans and it was a bit of a thrill for them."

Murdoch pledges U.S. allegiance

NEW YORK — Australian-born media magnate Rupert Murdoch became a U.S. citizen Wednesday, removing one obstacle to his $2 billion purchase of the nation's largest group of independent television stations from Metromedia Inc.

Murdoch, 54, pledged allegiance to the United States along with 185 other new citizens in a 15-minute ceremony at U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

Murdoch said afterward that he became a U.S. citizen "because I wanted to and I'm very satisfied." He declined to say if he changed his citizenship to comply with regulations limiting foreign ownership of broadcast licenses.

Murdoch plans to add the seven Metromedia Inc. television stations to a media empire including more than 80 newspapers and magazines and half of 20th Century-Fox Film Corp. His U.S. newspapers include the New York Post, the Chicago Sun-Times and the Boston Herald.

Under FCC rules, he may have to sell the Post and Sun-Times if he retains Metromedia stations WNEW-TV in New York and WFLD-TV in Chicago, two of the seven stations he is buying.

Computer group donates software

By MIKE ROBBINS
Collegian Reporter

The Department of Dietetics, Restaurant and Institutional Management was awarded a donation of a $50,000 computer software package for food service management this spring by The Computer Based Operational Research Development Group, Inc., of Ithaca, N.Y.

CBORD donated food service software to the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y., and Texas Technical University in Lubbock, Texas along with K-State for being the year's top recipients. Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., Michigan State University, East Lansing, Mich. and Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind. were awarded the donation last year.

The CBORD software includes a menu management system for food cost and production control in food service operations and a nutritional accounting system which calculates the amount of calories, vitamins and minerals in a given recipe.

Marian Spears, head of the dietetics, restaurant and institutional management department, was informed about the donation by Mary Molt, unit manager at Derby Food Center. Spears then wrote CBORD to inquire about the software donation. Spears was told by officals at CBORD that a written proposal must be submitted stating department curriculum and examples of how the department would use the software.

Spears compiled the written proposal and received word that the University would receive the software donation. CBORD indicated to Spears that the University received the donation because the department had a reputation of having a strong dietetic program.

Mary Gregoire, assistant professor of dietetics, restaurant and institutional management, said CBORD believed the University had a good reputation of pro-

Religious groups question effect of Reagan's tax plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prominent religious groups, while praising President Reagan for trying to revise a "jungle-of-injustices" tax system, are complaining his plan would still do too little for the poor and too much for the rich.

In broadsides issued as members of Congress began returning from summer recess, a large coalition of Protestant and Jewish groups and the Roman Catholic bishops' national organization addressed details of the president's proposal.

The bishops' U.S. Catholic Conference asked rhetorically: "Should we allow a large windfall for the rich at a time when the gap between rich and poor is widening, at a time when millions lack even the most basic necessities required for

Nelson, farm leaders discuss FarmAid uses

By The Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Farm leaders from around the country gathered Wednesday for a meeting with singer Willie Nelson and Gov. James R. Thompson to discuss how to spend the millions of dollars expected from the FarmAid concert.

FarmAid — featuring such headline talent as the Beach Boys, Billy Joel, B.B. King, Waylon Jennings and Bob Dylan — was suggested by Nelson as a way to call attention to the plight of the nation's struggling farmers and to raise cash to help them out.

A key question is how the FarmAid money will be spent, and who will have final say.

FarmAid is modeled on Live Aid, the trans-Atlantic concert that raised millions of dollars for starving Africans earlier this year. At least 25 percent of U.S. farmers are in serious financial trouble for a variety of reasons, including high interest rates and declining land values, authorities say.

"Willie called tonight's meeting to get the input from farmers and grassroots organizations on what to do with the money we raise," said Vince Petrini, a spokesman for the governor. "This is just an organizational meeting."

He said Larry Werries, the Illinois director of agriculture, had been talking with his counterparts in other states to get ideas.

"It is a concern of ours and we are working hard to establish a plan," said Petrini.

"But the final say will have to come from the performers; this is their effort."

He said it was "difficult to speculate on how much money a concert like this could raise," but that it might generate $40 million to $50 million.

Nelson has suggested the money could be used for low-interest farm loans but added that "people have to figure it out who are smarter than me."

Since FarmAid was his idea, the singer-songwriter has said he would have to make sure the money goes "where it has to."

The total U.S. farm debt of about $212 billion will carry interest in 1985 of about $21 billion — $58 million a day.

Earlier Wednesday, about 30 people representing the musicians, television producers, lighting and sound companies, and the University of Illinois met to discuss technical details of the Sept. 22 event.

The concert is to feature Nelson and about three-dozen top name performers from rock, country and blues music.

The Howard Bloom Organization, a New York public relations firm that is handling promotion of FarmAid, said the list of entertainers also includes Glen Campbell, John Cougar Mellencamp, Loretta Lynn, Alabama, Lou Reed and Neil Young.

Regents boost funds for state scholars

By POLLY COLIP
Staff Writer

Maximum scholarship awards for freshmen state scholars has been increased from $500 to $1,000 by the Board of Regents.

The new maximum amount is available to incoming freshmen who graduated from high school in 1985. Each student must have qualified as a state scholar and plan to attend any of the state-funded educational institutions, said Clantha McCurdy, program associate for the regents. Approximately 400 schoiarships of $1,000 each were awarded to freshmen by the regents this fall.

"Only freshmen are eligible for the $1,000 maximum award. Continuing students are still restricted to the $500 maximum," McCurdy said. "We hope to eventually phase out the $500 awards."

Scholarships are awarded independently after financial aid has been awarded. The regents' scholarship awards range from a minimum of $50 to a maximum of $1,000. The amount of the regents' awards vary, McCurdy said, because some students may receive money through other financial assistance.

McCurdy said students are selected as state scholars on the basis of American Collegiate Testing scores. The regents receive the scores if students mark "yes" on item 190 of the ACT test. This sends their scores to state agencies.

The regents then compile index scores and set a cut-off based on the level of funds available. This year's cut-off index score was 153. This cut-off score is calculated by combining English, math, natural sciences and social sciences test scores.

Students are notified during the spring of their senior year if they are state scholars, but then they have to apply to receive monetary awards.

From the ACT family financial statement, the need analysis is calculated for each student. This is Get our new $49* software module when you buy an HP-41.

It's a deal that has no equal, for a calculator that has no equal.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Do it now. The phone call is free.

But our new module won't be for long.

Reflecting on memories of a dead friend

WAYNE LONG
Collegian Columnist

Travis Gracey, an active member of the Acacia fraternity, died July 23 from injuries he received in an automobile accident on July 4, 1985.

He was born Jan. 24, 1966 in Aviana, Italy, and was a 1984 graduate of Cheney High School. Gracey, sophomore in pre-medicine, was a member of the Arts and Sciences Council and the Pre-Medicine Society.

It's difficult to write a column about a close friend who has died. In fact, the task made me so uneasy I hadn't planned on doing it. After all, I wanted my columns to be intriguing, and few people find the death of someone they don't know even remotely interesting.

And why should they? Travis was my friend, not theirs. Those students and faculty members who didn't know him don't care about Travis' unique ability to make a friend wherever he was. What can I possibly tell these people about Travis' life or death that would make some sort of impression on their own lives?

After all, who wants to read a column telling us to live every moment like our last? That's corny, and even worse, it sounds like something your parents or a pastor might say.

Speaking of parents, our generation doesn't need to be reminded to tell good ol' mom and dad how much we love them. Anyway, if we did, things would get all gushy and our families might get along better.

What would be even worse, even though Travis wasn't under the influence of alcohol, would be for me to tell you not to drink and drive. Lord knows Mothers Against Drunk Drivers and Bartenders Against Drunk Drivers take care of that.

No, our generation doesn't want to read things like this in a column. And even if we did, it wouldn't have an impact on our lives.

So why then did I change my mind? The answer lies in a single classroom, Denison 113A.

Travis and I had World Regional Geography together last semester. We could be found sitting within the pink walls of this classroom near the back almost every class period.

Perhaps it was those pink walls, or maybe all the good-looking girls that made us never lift a pen to take any notes. Instead we would talk the entire class, sometimes bursting out in laughter that would draw dirty looks from our instructor. When the bell rang we would casually stroll out and make the long walk up the hill to our fraternity.

Travis Gracey pulled me through World Regional Geography, and when it came time to enroll for this semester he quickly reminded me that I owed him one. We agreed on Introduction to Sociology, but this time, he said, we were going to sit in a different spot every time so we could meet all the girls. Who could argue with that?

Together we enrolled in sociology, a Tuesday and Thursday class at 11:30 a.m. At that time, however, I gave little attention to the fact that the class was to be held in Denison 113A.

On the first day of class as I walked into Denison Hall I wasn't thinking about Travis. It wasn't until I entered the classroom, sat down alone and saw those pink walls — those ugly, pink walls — that the thought of Travis entered my mind.

He is supposed to be here. I'm supposed to pull him through. We are to meet all the girls. The tears that filled my eyes were real, even as they are at this very moment as I feebly try to let words represent the feeling of loss which can only be experienced in the human heart. For the rest of the class period I put my head down and let memories of a dead man float through my mind.

Perhaps the whole purpose of this column can be summed up by a conversation I had with a good friend shortly after Travis' death.

"Wayne," he said, "it could have so easily been one of us," to which I simply replied, "Travis Gracey was one of us."

Sutton's methods welcome

A new trend seems to be forming at K-State which can only have a positive effect on the ills of our fine University.

As of late, the reasoning behind some of our administration's major decisions has been murky, if not opaque.

It seems deliberation and explanation have been discarded in favor of speedy implementation.

Some of our new administrators are beginning to act in an exemplary manner that shows the highest regard for students and employees of the University.

This move toward wise and well-informed decision making is spearheaded by one of the newest faces on campus — William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services.

Over the past four weeks, Sutton has done reasearch — reading reports from all the departments heads under his supervision, speaking with them individually — to devise a plan for the effective reorganization of educational and student services.

His plan is supported by Provost Owen Koeppe and President Duane Acker, but Sutton did not stop with their approval.

He conferred again with his subordinates to gather their opinions on possible problems and personal objections. His willingness to listen to opposing opinions dictates that he is not inflexible to change.

Sutton will also be explaining his proposal and asking students for their at tonight's Student Senate meeting in the Union Big Eight room.

It's refreshing to see an administrator go that "extra mile" to assure those whom he directly influences that the reorganization will be effective — especially when those influenced are students.

Athletic Director Larry Travis, will also speak at the meeting. Travis is also busily developing a reputation for listening to all the footsteps before picking a path to travel.

They'll be speaking at the beginning of the meeting, so students should be encouraged to go listen. These new administrators soon might be changing the way students think about K-State.

Students' input important

The method of soliciting applicants for the president search committee was haphazard at best and detrimental to the selection process at worst.

It raises several important questions. Why was the only publicity given to the openings presented on Wednesday when applications were due Thursday?

Why was the time span for application and selection so exceptionally brief?

And what does this say about the importance assigned to the student input in the selection process?

The whirlwind application solicitation and the minimal publicity afforded to it are causes for concern. When decisions are being made that will affect the future of the University, this lack of prior notification is unacceptable.

Student Body President Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and automatic member of the committee, said he did not receive the request for nominations to the committee until Aug. 16 from Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents.

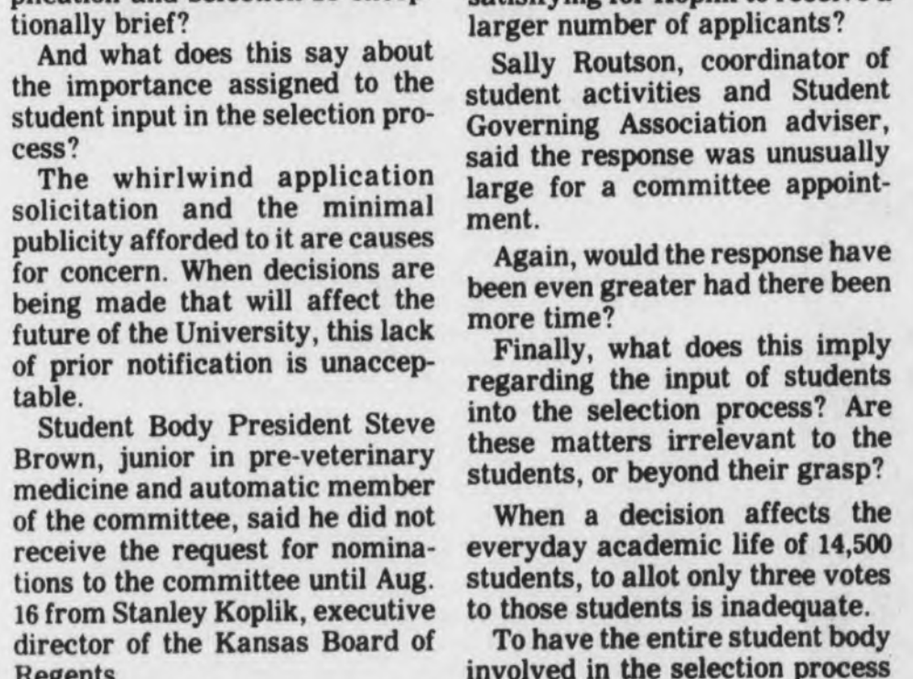
No notice of vacancies was given publicly until an article appeared in the Aug. 28 Collegian, the day before applications were due.

The "average" student is typified as disinterested, even apathetic when it comes to matters of administration. However, even with brief notice, 48 people applied for the two available seats on the committee.

Koplik was described as expressing "satisfaction" at the large number of applicants.

Would it not have been more satisifying for Koplik to receive a larger number of applicants?

Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities and Student Governing Association adviser, said the response was unusually large for a committee appointment.



Again, would the response have been even greater had there been more time?

Finally, what does this imply regarding the input of students into the selection process? Are these matters irrelevant to the students, or beyond their grasp?

When a decision affects the everyday academic life of 14,500 students, to allot only three votes to those students is inadequate.

To have the entire student body involved in the selection process is absurd, but to limit the input to relatively few students is unhealthy.

Student Senate to decide use of $700,000

MARK JONES
Guest Columnist

The students of K-State have a lot to thank our current University administration for. We have a great chance to make a difference once again. I am referring to the $700,000 which may become available to students if refinancing of outstanding student-financed bonds goes as planned.

During the past few months the administration, specifically George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, has been in step with new Internal Revenue Service regulations and state legislation in finding ways to save students more than $9 million through the next 10 years.

A great deal of time was spent making this possible during the spring and summer semesters. Let me remind you I'm talking about student dollars being saved, not University dollars.

In essence, what Miller did was take existing student bonds (Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex, Union Annex I and II and KSU Stadium) and used refunding procedures in order to free up approximately $3.9 million, while at the same time paying off this debt through the purchase of higher yielding government securities.

Through an optimization process it was discovered that $2.7 million of the $3.9 million would be the best figure to be used in retiring part of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum debt.

This leaves us with $1.2 million. Out of this, $500,000 will be used to fund a repair and replacement account for the recreation center and the stadium. Unlike before, however, this repair and replacement account will be interest bearing to help perpetuate these accounts.

There is $700,000 remaining out of the original $3.9 million. The administration decided the money should revert back to the students. It was paid by students and its use should be decided by students.

With the exception of the usual presidential approval, the students, through Student Senate, have been given full responsibility and authority for determining the allocation of the money.

During the next couple weeks, the senate will be asking you for ideas and suggestions. Please watch the Collegian for advertisements. By mid-October recommendations will be brought to the senate for final approval.

The bottom line is that all current student debt will be paid off completely by 1996. Originally it would have been 2005 for the coliseum and 2001 for the recreation center. This amounts to a savings of about $9 million.

While this will be a unique and exciting experience for students, it will also be a trying one.

It will be important that senate, as well as all students, remain steady with their past conviction of making a difference.

We have done it with our efforts for Nichols Hall, the recreation center and the coliseum, just to name a few. We need to continue on this path.

Our actions should be recognizable and identifiable not only to present students and friends, but also to future generations. We have to "make a difference."

Editor's note: Mark Jones is Student Senate chairman and senior in management.

University's fee cards should be itemized

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

Few things frustrate the frugal student as much as receiving a bill with the vague label "parts — $42.69."

The uneasy feeling of curiosity, bordering on distrust, over such vagueness has led most marketing strategists to adopt the tenet: "Itemization equals customer satisfaction."

The University, which should be well versed in such marketing tactics, has surprisingly left some of its "customers" with an uneasy feeling this year.

At issue is the $75.50 "special fees" category on the student fee card. In past years, special fees have been itemized so that students could see the separate bonds and programs to which they contribute.

Doug Ackley, an accountant in the controller's office, said "we weren't trying to hide anything," when first asked about the move to lump fees together.

The fee category, according to Ackley, was created so that each time a bond or program was discontinued, new fee cards would not have to be printed.

The "special fees" category is a "cost saving measure," Ackley said.

The actual amount of savings is uncertain. Last year, when one of the Union bonds was retired, the controller's office simply left that category blank in order to use the remaining fee cards they had ordered for the year.

This semester's fee card lists the incidental fee, the amount paid for the University education, at $495. The student health fee is $55 and the special fees of $75.50 make up the remainder of the total $625.50 in-state, full-time undergraduate fee. The total for out-of-state students, however, is $1,527.50.

The special fees, which have all been voted in by Student Senate, fall into five categories.

The student activity fee of $25.25 per semester funds a variety of programs each year. The total yearly fund is approximately $750,000.

The senate allocates this money. Nearly $380,000 goes to the Union, $95,000 to Student Publications Inc. and $79,000 to Recreational Services. The rest of the money is allocated to smaller groups such as Students for Handicapped Concerns and FONE Crisis Center.

Two categories comprise the Union fee of $11.50. The repair and replacement fund draws $1.25 per semester while $10.25 is payment on the Union bond. This bond will retire next fall.

The bond fee for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum is $20.75 this semester. Next fall when the Union bond retires, the coliseum fee will increase $10.25 to $31 per semester.

Recreation fees total $15; the bond for the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex is $12, and $3 funds recreational programs.

The student services fee of $3 finances the renovation of Holton Hall.

No doubt the statement, "we weren't trying to hide anything," is true. The decision to lump the fees together was probably made in a hurry with little thought given as to how money-conscious students might view the move.

The protest "we weren't trying to hide anything," though, acknowledges precisely students' first reaction to the lump figure — "What are they trying to hide?"

To avoid student skepticism, the University should make a concerted effort to explain the $75.50 fee.

Students who would like to see fees on future fee cards itemized, should call the Office of Administration and Finance.

Plant taxonomists preserve past

Herbarium aids research of evolution

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK
Collegian Reporter

When someone wants to study sunflowers, the most logical place to begin searching would be a plant library or — as botanists would call it — a herbarium.

The University's herbarium, located on the third floor of Bushnell Hall, is the result of many years of work by faculty and graduate students in the Division of Biology and its predecessor, the Department of Botany and Plant Pathology.

Ted Barkley, professor of biology, who has been with the University since 1961, works extensively with the herbarium. Barkley said he feels the touchstone of the University is not only teaching, but also being foremost in some area of knowledge through research and writing books or monographs.

"My job is more than just teaching. My job is to be the plant taxonomist. A plant taxonomist is the person who is concerned with different kinds of plants and how they got that way — in other words, what tells them apart, what their relationships are to each other," he said.

Barkley's task is to help people identify plants and define their genetic and evolutionary relationships.

"People will come to my door wanting to know how to breed a bigger and better what-you-may-call-it and what are the relatives of the what-you-may-call-it, so we know where to get the genes to breed into it. That is the kind of information I have," Barkley said.

To study plant taxonomy, collections are necessary, Barkley said. In a herbarium, plants are pressed and dried. The first plants that were pressed and dried for systematic purposes were done so during the late Renaissance. Once a plant is pressed and dried and put away the plant is essentially there forever and doesn't spoil.

Barkley said he has worked with specimens dating back to the 1700s and has seen specimens from the middle of the 15th century. The University herbarium has specimens from the mid-1800s.

There are two types of plant taxonomists; the floristicist and monographers. Floristicists are interested in obtaining information about the plants growing in a particular region. They collect information, catalog plants and name them. Then, they put together a flora — a book or a scholarly attempt to account for all the plants which grow in a particular region.

A monographer is interested in a particular group of plants, regardless of the region in which they grow.

"Everybody ends up doing a little bit of both. But you like to train people to be monographers. That way they understand the complete variation, no matter where it goes," Barkley said.

Barkley is considered a monographer for the genus senecio, a group of sunflower relatives. Barkley borrows specimens from the genus for experimentation and writes a monograph, (a book or journal) which describes the specimens and their habitat, appearance and other observations.

Car bomb in Lebanon kills 10 in market area

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A car bomb exploded Wednesday at a market in Zahle, a Christian enclave in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley. A Christian radio station said at least 10 people were killed and 50 wounded.

Israeli warplanes attacked a Palestinian guerrilla base about six miles southwest of Zahle three hours later, in their 11th raid inside Lebanon this year. The Tel Aviv military command said the base at Qabb Elias was a key post of the Palestinian Arab Revolutionary Committee, a Libyan-backed group.

In Beirut, Shiite Moslem militiamen and Palestinian guerrillas battled around a refugee camp in southern district. Police said five civilians were killed, including two Shiite children, and 27 were wounded.

The Zahle car bomb was the sixth in Lebanon since Aug. 14. At least 140 people were killed and 250 wounded by the five earlier explosions in Christian and Moslem areas.

Wednesday's bombing, at Zahle's vegetable market, occurred at 3:20 p.m. The Christian radio Voice of Lebanon said it also set a fuel depot afire in the Christian city of 100,000 in the predominantly Moslem area of eastern Lebanon.

It said Red Cross and civil defense teams pulled at least 10 bodies from the rubble, and 50 wounded people were taken to hospitals in the mountain resort city 25 miles east of Beirut.

Sutton closer to final student service reform

By The Collegian Staff

After little more than four weeks on campus, William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, is nearing a decision on the reorganization of departments under his direction.

In a closed meeting Wednesday, Sutton presented his proposal to heads of departments affected in the change.

"It's not an announcement (of) 'This is what's going to happen,' we prefer to outline some things and go in and talk to our people about them," Sutton said Tuesday.

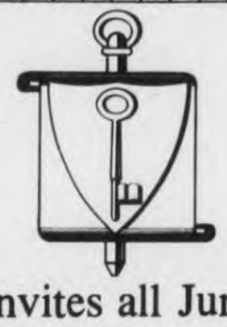
During the meeting Sutton planned to discuss and resolve any problems seen with the new organization, but said he is also open to suggestions and criticisms now, after the initial meeting.

"I think we have thought of most things. But I'm willing to say we can be convinced — if you're right," Sutton said.

In addition to interacting with his immediate staff, Sutton wilalso be talking to students.

"I can't sit here. Not everybody is going to come and chat with me. I won't get enough of a feel (for what students are going through).

"This is a tremendous institution. What is it that made us lose 2,000 within four or five years? I don't know, I just got here. But I'm trying to find out."



Sutton said changes will take place within days, although the proposal does require the approval of the Board of Regents. He anticipates President Duane Acker to take the proposal to the regents in October, along with proposed changes in the structure of University Facilities.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.

Reach out and touch someone.®

City redevelopment projects receive funds, authorization

By JONIE R. TRUED
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan City commissioners voted Tuesday night to increase the city's commitment to the downtown redevelopment project by $10,000.

Commissioners voted unanimously to increase the funding from $38,800 to $48,800 after a presentation from Richard Burke, chairman of the Main Street Committee.

After a lengthy debate, a motion to look to the city's general fund as the source of the additional funding was approved.

Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said the exact source would be at the discretion of the commission after evaluating cash carryover in the city budget.

Burke reported his committee was about $30,000 short of the total $97,923 needed to complete the project.

Burke said the committee was requesting only one-third of the amount needed. He said the remaining funds may be collected by separate fund-raising projects.

"We, the city of Manhattan, need the Main Street project," Burke said. "For the ensurement of investment and for the goal of working cooperatively with the mall, we need this project."

Burke said the entire central business district must service people and be people-oriented in its approach.

Benefits of the redeveloped central business district, Burke said, would include growth in business and sales taxes, positive state and national publicity about the city of Manhattan and community pride.

In other downtown redevelopment business, the Commission authorized the construction of the Leavenworth Street sanitary sewer and storm drainage improvements.

After a report on the city's Urban Development Action Grant and land acquisition activities by Gary Stith, community development coordinator, and a progress report by mall developer Gary Ceepo, of Forest City Rental Properties Corp. of Cleveland, commissioners authorized city staff to begin acquiring properties for mall site preparation.

Lindamood was alone in her objection to the action, stating there was no letter of credit for the staff.

Land acquisition was also authorized for the Service-Commercial Plaza, to be developed by Curtin/Bowman Enterprises. The project is to be located in the 300 block of Colorado Street.

In other business, the Commission approved Sept. 17 as the date of a public hearing for budgeting Community Development Block Grant Program funds.

Manhattan seeks endorsement

Program aids redevelopment

By The Collegian Staff

In an effort to provide coordination for a variety of redevelopment projects scheduled for downtown Manhattan, endorsement for participation in a national organization is being sought by local officials.

Brenda Spencer, coordinator of the Manhattan Design Project, is seeking to participate in the National Main Street program.

The program, began by the National Trust for Historic Preservation in 1977, provides assistance to 130 cities in 16 states.

The Kansas Department of Economic Development will select five cities in the state to participate in the program. Applications for the program are due by the end of September, Spencer said, and the five cities will be chosen at the end of October.

Spencer said participation would provide the following benefits:

— Different projects would be under one central manager, in an effort to develop a consistent program.

— Projects such as the downtown mall and plaza would be used for festivals, promotions and sales events to promote uses other than strictly retail sales inside the mall itself.

— The central manager would coordinate projects to ensure design compatibility for a unified appearance, such as between the Courthouse Plaza and redevelopment, and the mall.

— The goal in this sector would be to strengthen the existing economic assets of downtown while diversifying its economic base by recruiting new stores.

Spencer said the only actual change and expense would be in hiring a full-time design manager. The current Manhattan Design Project staff would become the Main Street program staff.

The program's major benefit to Manhattan, she said, would be in unified management and coordination of spending by various groups on downtown development. If Manhattan is accepted in the program, the organization's preliminary budget would be about $75,000 to $80,000 a year.

Scientist will return to Titanic site

By The Associated Press

WOODS HOLE, Mass. — The chief scientist whose expedition found the Titanic said Wednesday he plans to return to the site, possibly next summer, and inspect the wreckage close up in a small manned submarine.

Robert Ballard, a geologist, also said a remotely controlled camera yielded vivid color pictures Wednesday of wine bottles, undamaged plates and a small flagpole on the bow "still standing there totally pristine" on the upright ship, 2½ miles below the surface of the Atlantic Ocean.

Ballard told associates at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution on Tuesday that an unmanned submersible was doing only preliminary exploration of the ocean liner, according to a transcript made available Wednesday of a ship-to-shore telephone call with the Navy vessel Knorr.

"It's a very dangerous operation. We're leery of all the rigging" around the Titanic, he said.

He said he plans to examine the ship in the future from the Alvin, a three-man, deep-water research submarine. The first views of the Titanic are being taken by a video camera aboard the Argo, an unmanned vehicle developed by Ballard.

"What we're doing now is the hardest part. Going in on it with Alvin will be a very, very nice thing," Ballard said.

The Titanic was the most luxurious liner of its time and was thought to be unsinkable, but an iceberg cut a 300-foot gash in its side on its maiden voyage April 14, 1912.

KCC studies Wolf Creek rate hike

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Corporation Commission has scheduled two days next week to try and reach a consensus on how much of the cost of the $3.05 billion Wolf Creek power plant will be paid by ratepayers and how much should be absorbed by its three utility owners.

The three-member commission is expected to spend at least two full days deliberating on the utilities' requests to charge their 460,000 customers some $508.9 million in higher rates to pay for Wolf Creek. The meetings come after the commissioners digested three months of testimony and mountains of evidence and legal briefs in the case.

"I'm just guessing that it's going to last two full days but I don't know how fast it will go," said Gary Haden, spokesman for the commission. "They want to try and hammer it out Tuesday and Wednesday and I think we'll have a pretty firm idea where they are going when they're done."

By law, the commission has until Sept. 30 to issue a decision on the proposed rates.

Decisions reached at administrative meetings are tentative, pending the writing and signing of a formal, final order which in this case is expected to be several hundred pages in length.

Mark Sellens attaches a milking machine to a cow to begin milking.

Jose Rogers, a milker at the dairy barn for more than six years, records the pounds of milk produced by a cow.

From cow to counter, it's an...

Utter Delight

Going to the local ice cream counter can be a mind-boggling experience.

Take, for instance, the basic finicky ice cream eater who approaches the counter ready to try something really exotic.

"Let's try... a double scoop of... the coconut-pineapple," he says with a undecisive look on his face.

"Are you sure?" asks the girl behind the counter. She's seen his kind before.

"Well, now that you mention it, the peppermint really looks good," he says. "How does it taste?"

"Good," she says bluntly, as if she would ever tell him anything tasted bad.

It's a classic case for many people. Ice cream eaters have never had it so good.

Alexander the Great, for instance, had to settle for iced beverages, which graced the tables of the elite in the fourth century B.C.

Flavored iced drinks took another step during the first century A.D. when the Roman emperor Nero consumed a form of ice cream made from snow which was brought down from the mountains by slaves.

Even though history doesn't record the transition from iced drinks to the texture of ice cream today, it's known that King Charles I of England was extremely fond of a dessert which his chef had been making for himself and other gourmets in the early 1600s. King Charles enjoyed the "frozen milk" so much, he paid his chef 500 pounds a year to forever keep the recipe a secret and to reserve its use solely for the royal table.

As time passed, so did the recipe, and ice cream soon made its way across the Atlantic and into North America.

Since its American beginning in the early 18th century, ice cream has not only grown in popularity but has evolved into many different forms and flavors. Whether it is chocolate ice cream on a stick, rocky road in a sugar cone or homemade vanilla on a hot afternoon, ice cream is enjoyed and consumed by many throughout the world.

Making ice cream, to many people, goes no farther than the back yard.

Acquire the basic handcrank ice cream freezer, (electric motor optional), some salt, a bag or two of ice and a good recipe and the outcome is normally some pretty good ice cream. This method, of course, is for energetic people.

Otherwise, to get good ice cream most people will go to the nearest ice cream counter and order a scoop or two of their favorite flavor.

For many students, the ultimate ice cream counter is in Call Hall. Offering more than 40 flavors at different times during the year, the dairy counter sells ice cream year 'round to students and outside customers alike, said Phyllis Petty, food service supervisor and head of the dairy sales counter.

"Our flavors will change during the course of the year," Petty said. "During Thanksgiving we offer pumpkin ice cream. At Christmas time, we have eggnog ice cream, and during the spring, we have peach."

The ice cream is made from start to finish using on-campus facilities, full-time staff members and some students, said Harold Roberts, associate professor of animal sciences and industry and head of dairy processing.

Making ice cream, from cow to counter, begins at the dairy barns where cows are milked daily. The milk, is delivered four times a week, is pumped into a storage vat for later use in ice cream, cheese and other dairy products, Roberts said.

When making ice cream, the milk is prepared by combining whole milk, cream and whole condensed milk. It's then taken to a separate vat where other ingredients such as corn sugar are added.

"We like to add a small amount of corn sugar to give body to the ice cream," Roberts said.

Next, a stabilizer and an emulsifier are included to give texture to the mix and to prevent the ice cream from melting too quickly. Before freezing, the milk is pasteurized and homogenized to ensure safe consumption and to break up fat globules still in the milk. The milk is then stored until freezing time, which generally occurs once a week, Roberts said.

While most people use salt and ice as a refrigerant for homemade ice cream, the processors now use ammoniant as a freezing device for large ice cream freezers, many with the capacity to make more than 1,000 gallons per hour while in commercial use. The freezers at Call Hall have a 40- to 80-gallon-per-hour capacity, Roberts said.

As the freezing takes place, air is injected into the ice cream.

"Some people believe air cheapens ice cream, when actually, air is what gives ice cream its unique texture and body," Roberts said.

While the ice cream is in a semi-solid form, additives are mixed in

See ICE CREAM, Page 13

Bob Hoerner, dairy foods processor, carries a three-gallon container of ice cream from a 20-degrees-below-zero storage area. Behind-the-counter ice cream must be warmed to 5 degrees before it can be used for dipping.

Kara Cederberg, senior in elementary education, pours milk into a cup to make a shake for a customer at the Dairy Bar.

2 contenders for governor plan addresses

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Lt. Gov. Tom Docking and Attorney General Robert T. Stephan are scheduled to address an annual meeting later this month of the Kansas Association of Public Employees, the organization announced Wednesday.

Docking, a Democrat, and Stephan, a Republican, both have said they are seriously considering running for governor in 1986. In a statement issued from KAPE's Topeka headquarters, the organization said both men would appear at the group's Sept. 21 meeting at the Hutchinson Holidome.

The attorney general is expected to discuss legal pitfalls for public employees who become active in politics and Docking is planning to talk about various problems that affect public employees in the state.

Rep. Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita, who is a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, also is expected at the meeting to discuss state finances and other issues.

West German students learn American culture

By KAREN MEIS
Collegian Reporter

Forget the beer, bread and chocolate. Bring on the fruits, vegetables and peanut butter.

At least that's what Sabine Bock, a West German exchange student studying at the University, says. In only a few weeks, she and five other West German exchange students have acquired a "taste" for American life.

As part of the European Exchange Program, six graduate students from Justus Liebig University in Giessen, West Germany, are continuing their studies for one year in the United States. In return, six K-State students are studying at Giessen.

The European Exchange Program is one of the most successful programs in the country, said John Noonan, dean of the Graduate School. The program, sponsored jointly by K-State and Justus Liebig, originated in 1957 under the tenure of former University President James A. McCain.

"Not only does it bring together the students of two countries, but it also manages to bring together the faculties of two universities in a number of ways, including joint seminars and exchange visits," Noonan said.

Noonan said the University pays a stipend of $500 to the German students each month, and they are allowed to pay in-state tuition fees.

Gabriele "Gabi" Lunte, graduate in business administration, was the only German student who did not receive a full scholarship from the program. Because of cutbacks, only the cost of Lunte's in-state tuition fees is covered.

"I came because I wanted to improve my English and specialize my business vocabulary," Lunte said. "Also, I came to know some Kansans in Germany and was curious about their country."

Although finished with her studies at Justus Liebig, Baurbel Strothmann-Schmitt, graduate in business administration, came to the United States to improve her qualifications for a job. She said every employer in Germany strongly recommends, if not requires, a stay out of the country.

She considers her interest in foreign countries to be somewhat professional. Not only did she study business administration in Giessen, but she also studied English and French.

"I've been to France, so it was only logical to come here," Strothmann-Schmitt said. "I get the language automatically here, however, so I don't have to study it."

Bock also joined the program to better her job opportunities in Germany.

"I had the choice to get either a job or a Ph.D., and it is hard to get a job in geology as a woman," Bock said. "I came because I wanted to improve my knowledge in both geology and the English language."

The studying environment at K-State has been a culture shock in itself for the German students, they said. Bock said studying is not as organized in Giessen. At the German university, students have no reading assignments and no quizzes; rather, only one final is given at the end of the year. Also, each student selects his or her own books.

"It is incredible that American students do not resist the strong system here," said Gerhard-Schmitt, graduate in foods and nutrition. "A professor tells them to do something, and they do it. In Germany, students would resist against such a system. Not a bad resistance, but a constructive one."

The students said they believe one disadvantage of Germany's academic freedom is its lack of an advisory system.

"We have no student-adviser relationship in Germany as students do here," Strothmann-Schmitt said. "There is no control in that area."

Strothmann-Schmitt and her German peers highly commend the International Student Center for its efforts in helping them adjust to campus. Prior to the starting of classes, the students attended information sessions, where they were informed about everything from the enrollment procedure to banking programs offered in Manhattan.

As far as adjustments are concerned, learning to relate to others has been the students' major culture shock. They said on the average, American students are more friendly and polite than students in Germany.

"Of course, it is easier for us if the people are nice at first," Gerhard-Schmitt said. "But people are always friendly here."

Bock agreed, but said it is often difficult to differentiate between sincere and superficial politeness.

"We just need to get used to the language," Strothmann-Schmitt said. "Small talk is much more common, and we need to learn that people are just being friendly."

Concerning American social life, the German students consider the drinking laws to be the biggest difference. In Germany, the drinking age is 16, and liquor is sold by the drink.

"I like Aggie (Aggieville) very much," Lunte said, "but the drinking laws are ludicrous."

Despite whatever differences the students may encounter while studying in America, they consider their experiences to be fun, exciting and adventurous.

"I like the United States very much," Gerhard-Schmitt said. "It is good that it is so different from Germany. It would not be a learning process if the systems were equal.

"International understanding is the most important point of the entire program."

Conductor points way to musical path

Little Apple lures Bryttan to symphony

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Recently added to the University's music faculty ranks is Adrian Bryttan, conductor and professor. Bryttan comes from New York City and succeeds Ralph Winkler as director of the Kansas State University Symphony.

"We were impressed with his credentials," Al Cochran, chairperson of the woodwind and percussion division of the music department, said. "He's a fine performer."

Winkler and his wife left Manhattan to take jobs in San Francisco.

Bryttan holds degrees in violin and conducting from the Manhattan School of Music in New York, where he also held faculty and staff positions. He has also held positions at Memphis State University and the University of Notre Dame, where he founded the Notre Dame Opera Theatre.

"I directed fully staged productions of standard works and literature," Bryttan said. "We would get top artists from opera houses all over the United States and perform operas such as 'Ariadne Auf Naxos,' by Richard Strauss."

As concert master of the South Bend Symphony at Notre Dame for seven years, Bryttan played first-chair violin and was a frequent soloist.

While working on his master's degree, Bryttan received the Pablo Casals Award, given to the most outstanding musician in the graduating class. Bryttan had previously won the Concerto Competition playing solos with the orchestra.

"I always combine the academic with the professional experience," Bryttan said.

With input from the students, Bryttan's fall schedule is taking shape.

Staff/Jeff Tuttle

Adrian Bryttan directs the K-State symphony during practice Wednesday in McCain Auditorium. Bryttan, professor of music, succeeded Ralph Winkler as symphony director.

"We've varied the type of programs for the public," Bryttan said. "It's not just hard-core classical concerts. Some will be pop concerts or waltz evenings, the whole variety will make it more interesting.

"Students need to be flexible enough to play different types of music," he said.

"There's no reason why K-State's orchestra shouldn't be the very best in the state of Kansas. We're not just playing for ourselves, but for the audience. It keeps a high standard of playing.

"In a small community like this, there should be a tight relationship between the community and the musical orchestra," he said.

Bryttan said one reason for coming to K-State was because he was impressed with the music department.

"What I liked about K-State was that the administration and the department were on the same wavelength. We're giving students the best preparation for their musical life," Bryttan said.

"There's a strong drive to recruit. They're all geared in the same direction and they know what they're doing.

"The student body is tuned-in," Bryttan said. "Everything's right here for a musical explosion. There's a big potential for very fine music-making."

Music for this fall's concert season was carefully picked for the audience and there's something to satisfy everyone, Bryttan said.

"It's not just for musical snobs, I invite everybody to come," Bryttan said.

Bryttan was chosen from three people who auditioned for the job, said Warren Walker, professor of music.

"He's supporting the students in recruiting and implementing ideas," Walker said.

Coliseum refinancing Student Senate topic

By the Collegian Staff

Student Senate will hear an update on the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum refinancing plan at its first meeting at 7 tonight in the Union Big Eight Room.

The refinancing could conceivably provide senate with about $700,000 for student's use.

Senate will hear first reading of a resolution commemorating the 98th birthday of former Kansas Gov. Alfred M. Landon. The resolution states that because of Landon's progressive leadership during the economic Depression of the 1930s and the benefits the University accrued from his administration, the senate should express its gratitude. The resolution is sponsored by Mike Riley, junior in business administration.

The senate also will hear first reading of a proposal to re-evaluate the Business Council constitution. The bill is being sponsored by Sally Traeger, senior in business administration. Details of the legislation were not available.

Scratch-and-sniff cards save lewd, trashy film

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

John Waters is America's connoisseur of bad taste. He loves the lewd and the ugly, the perverse and the wicked.

Film Review

Waters' film, "Polyester," which he wrote, directed and produced, is a well-calculated piece of trash that, amazingly, is a lot of fun. Maybe it's an acquired taste best left unacquired, but Waters' mixture of low-camp and soap opera is so disgustingly awful that it's appealing in its own twisted way.

"Polyester" is the tale of a 300-pound-plus housewife, Francine Fishpaw, (played by transvestite Divine), who sees her life deteriorating. Her husband runs a pornographic theater, her son has a fettish for stomping on the feet of young women wearing high-heels and her daughter is a loud-mouthed brat who's pregnant by the neighborhood's punk leader.

This is too much for poor Francine to take, so after she catches her husband shacked up with his secretary, she dips into an alcoholic stupor. Eventually she finds redemption in the form of a new love, Tom Tomorrow. The question is, in a Waters' movie is it possible to have redemption? For Waters, redemption is only an illusion. Tom Tomorrow is actually a con out to get Francine's money.

It was a great bit of casting to give the role of Tom Tomorrow to Tab Hunter. He looks quite at ease in the leisure suit and beads. He dances across fields of clover, hand-in-hand with the enormous Divine, and somehow never looks embarrassed.

The real star of this movie, and the gimmick making it worth seeing, is "Odorama."

Instead of piping smells into the theater, Waters lets the audience smell all the "wonderful odors of life" by way of a scratch-and-sniff card. A number flashes on the screen, telling the viewer which spot to scratch. It starts off innocently enough, but beware — especially of number two (the most infamous of all common smells).

Without "Odormama," "Polyester" would be a very ordinary movie, — maybe a plain bad movie — but scratch-and-sniff makes it interesting. Every so often Divine storms through her house, her nostrils flared as she sniffs like a bloodhound on quaaludes. When she does, the audience will jump to attention with their scratch-and-sniff cards ready.

Amoco pursues rights to Hugoton gas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Amoco Production Co. would waive its right to seek exemption from paying Kansas' severance tax on natural gas produced from new wells if infill drilling were to be permitted in the Hugoton field, a company witness told the Corporation Commission Wednesday.

Under the state's two-year-old severance tax law, oil and gas produced from new pools are exempt from the tax for the first two years of production. Producers could claim that gas produced from infill drilling is "new" gas because, they contend, it will come from gas pockets in the earth presently untapped by existing wells.

However, David G. Wight, manager of Amoco's southern division which has headquarters in Denver, told the KCC his company would not apply for exemption from the tax if the commission permits additional wells to be drilled in the Hugoton field.

Willing to forgo tax exemption

One of the proponents' major arguments for infill drilling is the fact Kansas could collect millions of dollars more in severance tax revenue over the next two or three decades if the state would allow increased production from the Hugoton field.

However, opponents contend allowing the new wells also could raise the price of natural gas to Kansas consumers — perhaps tripling the cost to heat homes in some instances.

Wight spent almost all day Wednesday testifying in support of a request by Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. to be allowed to drill a second gas well on each 640-acre section in the Hugoton field.

Late in the day, another Amoco witness, Jack A. Babcock, a geologic researcher at the Amoco Research Center in Tulsa, submitted his prefiled testimony. He will be cross examined by intervenor attorneys Thursday.

Wight said farmers in southwest Kansas would not have the price of natural gas they use to run their irrigation systems increased under infill drilling as long as they maintained their hookups to existing gas wells.

"The irrigators can maintain their historical connections to the old wells and pay the same price," said Wight, who was Amoco's district manager in Liberal in 1970-73.

Wight, a petroleum engineer, addressed several major issues in the hearings which will determine whether the KCC changes a 40-year-old policy of permitting just one gas well on each 640-acre section in the Hugoton field.

Besides the cost of gas to irrigators, which has been one fear expressed about infill drilling, Wight also told the commission gas producers wouldn't force pipeline companies and distributors to take "new" gas which would be produced if a second well were allowed on each 640-acre section.

If the pipelines and the irrigators didn't want the increased production, Wight said, the production companies believe they can sell it to other buyers.

Opponents of infill drilling have contended, among other arguments against it, that there is no market for additional Hugoton gas.

If the pipeline companies didn't want to take the increased production, Wight said, "we would be amenable to their releasing that gas and selling it in some other market."

Gas from the present wells in the Hugoton field would not have its price increased, Wight said. Farmers who use it to irrigate croplands and pipeline companies now taking would continue to pay the same price they now pay.

Regents

done by determining the cost of the institution minus the family contribution.

"If this calculated need is greater than $1,000, then the student is eligible for the $1,000 maximum award," McCurdy said.

"After the spring semester of each academic year, the accumulative GPAs are compiled. The current minimum GPA is a 3.0 (on a 4.0 scale)," she said.

The regents were able to raise the scholarship limits after receiving more funds from the Kansas Legislature. The Legislature passed the bill in April 1985.

Merit

pay would not work. It should be more than the current single-salary schedule, a payroll device based on the teacher's years of experience and training, she said.

The booklet suggests sine most local districts only reward teachers for experience, level of training and extra training, the districts would need time to experiment with the merit pay.

She said problems exist in the merit pay system.

"If the plan is implemented poorly, it can cause problems for the school. It might set up a competitive system between the teachers, instead of a cohesion or team," she said.

Astuto said some places have experimented with rewarding a whole school on merit, instead of individuals. This provides incentives for the overall school system and might reduce competition among teachers.

Another problem is time, the booklet states. Changing from a single-salary schedule to a performance-based schedule would take time for negotiation, development of assessment criteria and processes, field trials of evaluation instruments and procedures and training of evaluators.

"Something that does what single salary does and pays teachers on their effectiveness, is hard to measure up to," she said.

All of the states have discussed the idea of merit, but only 10 are studying it. Thirty states have teacher incentive structure policies at some stage of development.

The states' experiences don't provide help for policy-makers because the plans in effect are too recent to be evaluated, Astuto said.

The Kansas State Board of Education was directed to conduct a study of performance-based salary plans and develop a model performance-based salary plan, she said.

She said a Commissioner's Task Force on Teacher Incentive Structures was set up consisting of representatives from the state professional education associations, state colleges and universities. Other representatives from the Kansas State Board of Education, the state legislature, businesses, industries and parents will also be included. Astuto and Janette Hewitt, graduate in education, represent the University.

The Task Force has reviewed the study.

Caring can help athletes succeed

DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

Coaches, athletic directors, academic counselors and professional team owners take note: A 21-year-old college senior is about to offer some advice to you.

I've been appalled recently by the number of stories involving drug abuse and academic ineligibility appearing on sports pages across the country.

The trend doesn't have to continue, but it will unless those involved in the day-to-day lives of the athletes whose mistakes are making news step forward and show these young people that they care about them as individuals — not just as athletes.

That is a bold statement, but one I can back up with personal experience.

I've been a baseball coach in Salina during the past five summers. I've encountered young athletes with many different family backgrounds and interests.

I've coached children who have seen their families rocked by divorce, children who have seen one of their parents die while they were still young and children who have turned to drugs and alcohol as a way to fit in with their peers.

There is one thing that all of these people have in common — they all have deep feelings and emotions. Although often not readily expressed, these feelings and emotions are what make these athletes tick — what make them the people they are.

That is the one thing that coaches, athletic directors, academic counselors and team owners are failing to remember today — their athletes are human beings and there is life beyond the playing field for these people.

My experiences this summer heightened my belief that coaches can make a difference.

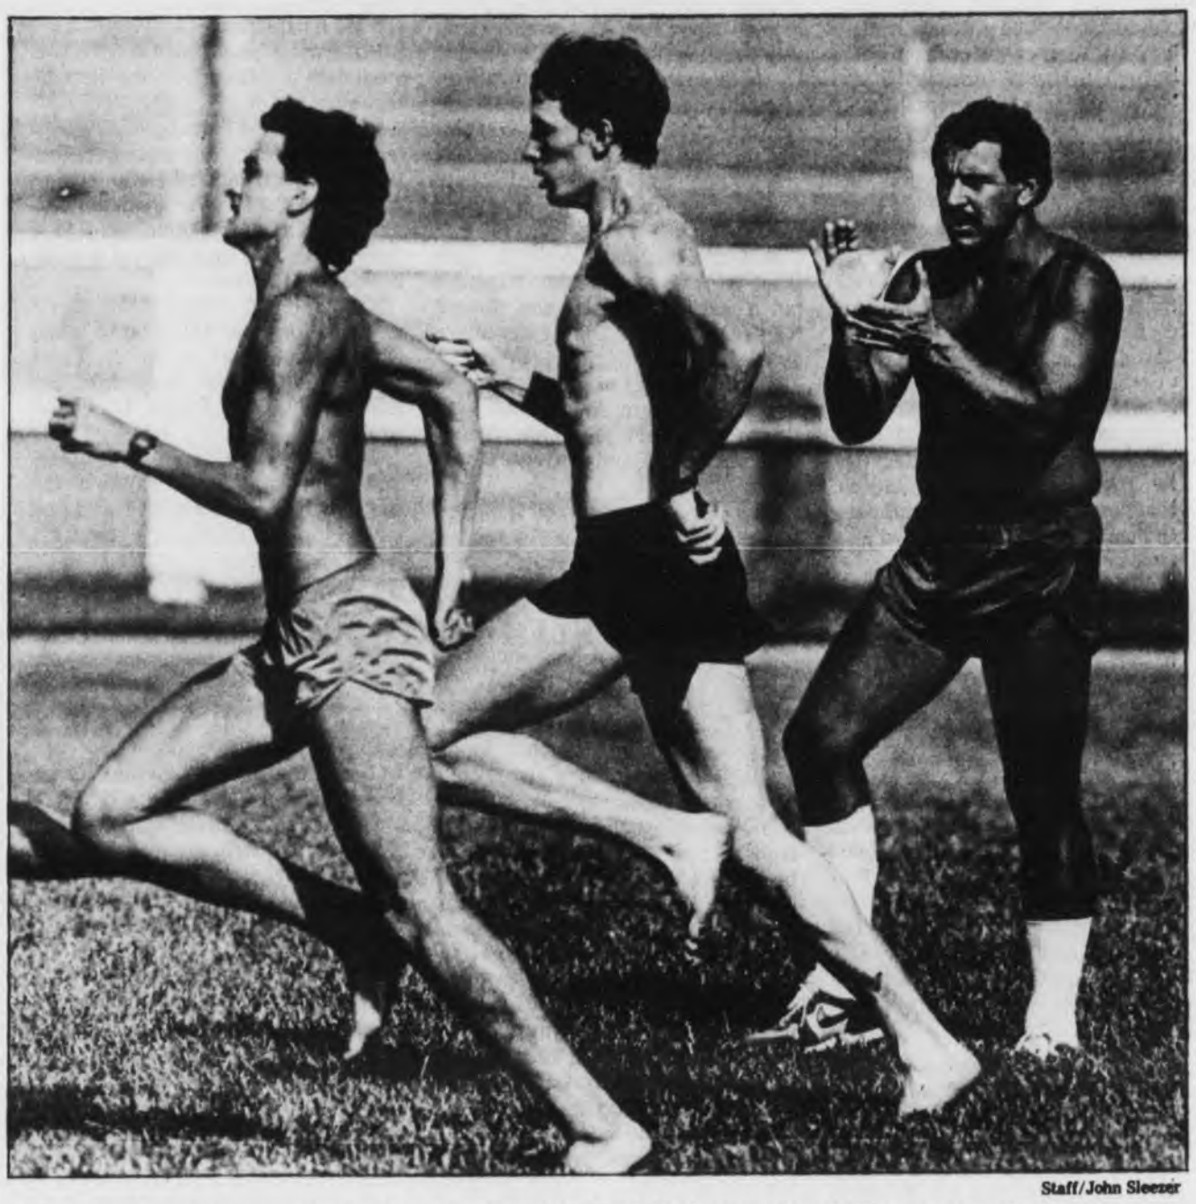
Before the season started, I found out that my top returning 15-year-old pitcher would be spending at least one month in an adolescent treatment unit in Salina. I decided I could play an active role in his recovery. The three months I would spend with him could make a difference in his life — not just in our season.

After he rejoined the team, I told him that I would be there if he needed me and not to be afraid to think of me as a friend as well as a coach. I've told players that before and will again, but it was important that I got the message across clearly in this case.

The season is complete, and although it brought some heartache, it also brought the joy of helping a young man turn his life around.

Today's coaches and athletic officials are often too tied up in their search for fame and fortune to realize that if they put a little time into helping their players, these goals would be more readily attainable.

College coaches need to see that their athletes are getting a good academic background. They need to take an interest in what their players do off the field to ensure those athletes don't become dependent on drugs and alcohol as an apparent answer to their problems. Simply stated, they need to care.



Granted, coaches are not the root of most problems athletes encounter, and they can't help athletes who don't want to be helped. But caring often can be just the spark an athlete needs to begin turning his or her life around.

The academic problems encountered recently by four football players at the University of Kansas may hurt the Jayhawks on the field. The apparent lack of interest in the academic endeavors of these players by their junior high, high school and college counselors, however, will hurt these young men even more. After all, what is more important — one winning season or the lives of four people?

It all comes down to spending time getting to know everything there is to know about the players you coach or counsel. I attempt to do this with the start of each new season, and my players respect me for it.

My best friend right now played shortstop for me on an all-star team this summer. He wouldn't be my best friend, however, if I hadn't taken the time to get to know him on more than just a player-coach basis.

Coaches, athletic directors, academic counselors and professional team owners take note: Caring about your players can make a difference in their lives. It also just might keep them from making the kind of mistakes that even caring can't completely heal.

K-State track and cross country head coach and assistant athletic director Steve Miller maintained a busy schedule this summer by being head coach for the United States track team in a dual meet with West Germany. Miller also coached a group of Jewish athletes in the Maccabiah Games in Tel Aviv, Israel in July.

Miller gains additional experience coaching overseas during summer

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Staff Writer

As K-State's track and cross country head coach and assistant athletic director, Steve Miller's job is never finished.

And to add to his already busy schedule, Miller coached two national teams in overseas meets this past summer.

Miller, an internationally respected track and field coach, was the men's head coach for the United States in a dual meet with West Germany. The 40-member team featured 21 athletes from the 1984 Olympics. Included in the field were former All-American pole-vaulter Joe Dial, who was on the Oklahoma State University track team, and triple-jumper Willie Banks.

The meet was held in June in Bremen, West Germany, and resulted in a victory for the U.S. men and an overall victory for the U.S. team.

After Miller returned from West Germany, he took a team of Jewish athletes to the Maccabiah Games in Tel Aviv, Israel, in July. The games were set in an Olympic format and lasted three weeks. Events included track and field and sports such as volleyball and softball. The games are exclusively for Jewish athletes from around the world.

Miller was selected through a vote of his peers, and this was his ninth international coaching experience. Last year, he coached a U.S. team that competed against East Germany.

"It's a great reward for me to be selected by my peers," said Miller, who is beginning his 21st year of coaching and fifth year at K-State.

Miller said it was interesting to see the difference between cultures and athletes in the two halves of Germany. Each international competition, he said, is a new learning experience.

"It's a great educational experience to get to travel to these countries," Miller said. "It's not just an athletic experience. I enjoy every opportunity I get to participate in these kinds of events."

Although the athletic program in Israel may be lacking, Miller said the Israeli athletes are dedicated to the sport.

"The athletic program in Israel is poor," Miller said. "They take kids right out of their prime to serve in the army. They have no continuum in their athletics, but they are very dedicated. Athletics aren't their main purpose and direction though.

"It was a phenomenal educational experience. Israel is a fascinating country. Whether you agree or not with their politics, you've got to admire their commitment."

Although no K-State athletes were on the team that went to Tel Aviv, two competed in West Germany. Michelle Maxey placed second in the 400-meter dash and graduate student Ron Waynes finished third in the long jump.

The international experience has also benefited Miller as a coach at K-State.

"Because of my involvement, I get insight not often seen. It brings greater diversity to my coaching here," Miller said.

He also believes his international experience has helped his recruiting.

"I want them (recruits) to come because I'm here. It's part of my madness," Miller said. "I can use my relative success to draw athletes."

Miller recently was nominated to be both the track coach for the U.S. team at the 1988 Olympics and the 1987 world championship team.

"The decision will be made in January," Miller said.

Currently, Miller is a member of the Olympic Development Committee.

As if his track responsibilities aren't enough, Miller's duties as assistant athletic director are keeping him busy also. But he's not complaining.

"We're complainers by nature," Miller said, "but we can't let it bother our performance. The athletic program at K-State has accomplished a lot of big things. We've done things in spite of the environment we've been given.

"I decided I could be a part of the problem or a part of the solution. Sometimes I feel like I'm not doing either job very well, but I'm in control of the situation, not the situation controlling me."

'Cats lose Howse, Morris

Players declared ineligible

From Staff and Wire Reports

Two recruits and one senior will not be members of the K-State basketball team this season, Coach Jack Hartman said Wednesday.

Anthony Smith, who played at Clark College in Atlanta two years ago before entering military service, won't join the team because the Army will not grant him the early release he expected, Hartman said.

Chris Morris of Houston, who averaged 24 points per game at Sam Houston High School last season, and Derrick Howse, who averaged 2.1 points per game for the Wildcats as a junior, are both academically ineligible.

"We were prepared for it," Hartman said of the loss of the players. "It came as no big surprise. It will have no effect on the team."

Hartman said it is regrettable the Wildcats will not have the services of the three players.

"We knew it was possible that Anthony Smith might not be able to get an early release. We thought and hoped he would," the coach said. "We also knew that Chris Morris had to take some summer work. And, of course, Derrick Howse did not qualify in his summer work."

Hartman did not indicate whether Smith, 6-8, will enroll at Kansas State after he is released from the Army.

Morris, 6-5, was the most valuable player in the Texas prep all-star game this year. Howse, a 6-foot-8 forward, came to Kansas State last season as a junior college transfer from Phillips County Community College in Helena, Ark. He appeared in 21 games for the Wildcats.

Tickets for Saturday's football home opener against Wichita State are still available, according to Carol Adolph, K-State ticket manager.

All reserved tickets for the 4 p.m. contest are priced at $14 and can be purchased at the athletic ticket office in Ahearn Field House from 8:30 to 4:30 today and Friday.

General admission tickets will be sold at the gate on Saturday and will be $8 for adults and $4 for children high school age and younger. Family tickets that admit two adults and two children of high school age or younger are $18.

The last time Wichita State was in Manhattan (1982), a crowd of 40,100 looked on as K-State beat the Shockers, 31-7. The attendance at that game still stands as the all-time high against a non-conference opponent at KSU Stadium.

Athletic department officials would like to remind fans that no containers will be permitted in the stadium this season in compliance with university policy.

"KSU Stadium is located on state grounds and the law forbids the consumption of alcoholic beverages on these grounds," Athletic Director Larry Travis said. "We are asking that all Wildcat fans join us in adhering to this policy."

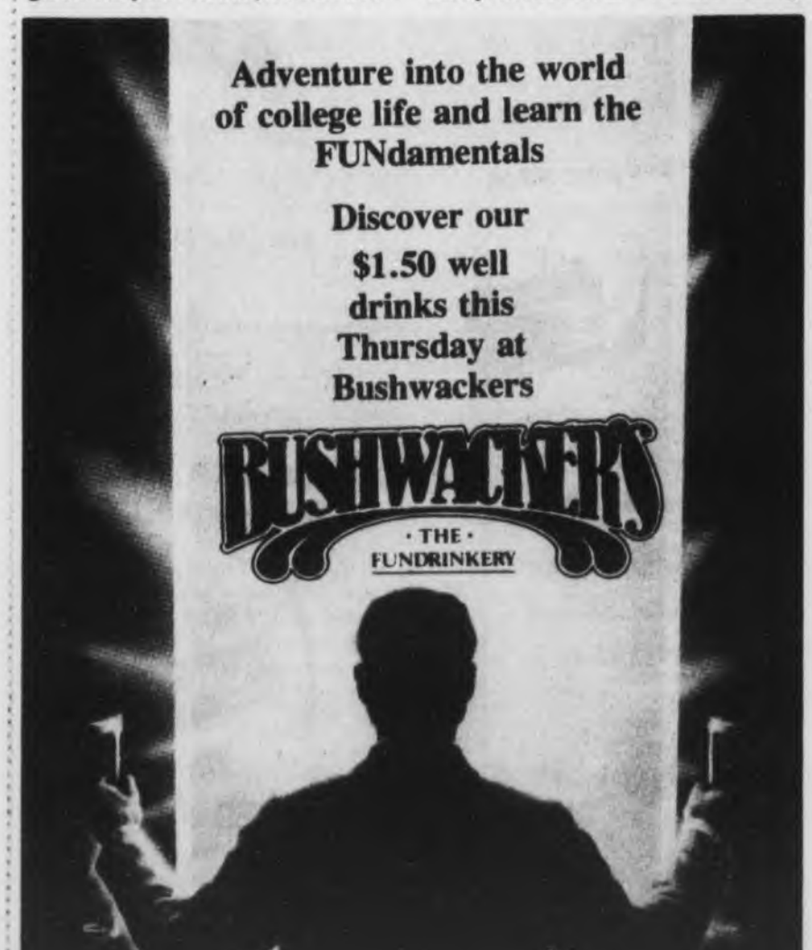
Two-way traffic will be in effect both before and after football games this season on Denison, Kimball and College avenues, the athletic department announced earlier this week.

Also, there will be no entrance to KSU Stadium off Denison Avenue this season because of construction taking place on Chester Peters Complex Drive.

Royals nip White Sox



By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chicago left fielder Luis Salazar misjudged Pat Sheridan's two-out fly ball in the 10th inning and Darryl Motley scored from third base to give the Kansas City Royals a 6-5 victory over the Chicago White Sox on Wednesday night.

The victory kept the Royals 1½ games behind California in the American League West.

Graf upsets Shriver at U.S. Open

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Young Steffi Graf of West Germany surprised fourth-seeded Pam Shriver, while Mats Wilander rode fellow Swede Anders Jarryd's upset stomach into semifinal berths Wednesday in the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

The 11th-seeded Graf, a 16-year-old who a year ago was knocked out in the first round of her first appearance in women's singles here, outlasted Shriver 7-6, 6-7, 7-6 — earning her the unenviable task of taking on Shriver's doubles partner, two-time defending champion, Martina Navratilova.

The other women's semifinal will pit top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd, going after her seventh U.S. Open singles crown, against No. 3 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia.

In the day's opening match, Navratilova, showing off championship form, crushed sixth-seeded Zina Garrison 6-2, 6-3.

Then Wilander and Jarryd began play on the Stadium Court with the temperature in the high 90s with high humidity. The No. 3 seed in the men's singles, who captured his second French Open title earlier this year, was leading 2-6, 6-2, 5-0 when his Davis Cup teammate retired with an upset stomach.

It appeared Jarryd began cramping midway through the third set, shortly before he retired. He failed to chase down balls he earlier had reached.

Still, the end came suddenly, one point into the sixth game. Wilander hit a service winner and Jarryd walked to the net, telling his fellow Swede that the match was over.

But the shocker of the ninth day of this Grand Slam tournament was Graf's two-hour, 46-minute victory over Shriver — and the way it was accomplished.

Graf hit 80 percent of her first serves and was almost perfect on her groundstrokes off both sides.

Graf broke Shriver's service to begin the match, then dropped her own in the second game.

It was Graf's turn in the 11th game as she broke Shriver's service, then served for the first set.

But Shriver broke back and the two went into a tiebreak — the first of three for the day — which Graf won 7-4.

Shriver jumped out to a 4-2 lead in the second set, and at 5-4 was serving for the set. But Graf broke in the 10th game and the two again went to a tiebreaker. This time Shriver won by an identical 7-4 score.

The veteran Shriver appeared destined for a semifinal berth when she took a 4-1 lead in the third and final set. At 5-3, she served for the match, but Graf fought back and broke her.

Again they went to a tiebreaker, and again it was 7-4. This time it was the young West German who came out on top and captured a semifinal berth.

Rose closes to within four in chase for mark

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Pete Rose is going through a mild batting slump that may delay his date with destiny and the all-time hits record of Ty Cobb.

In Wednesday night's 4-3 loss to the St. Louis Cardinals, the Cincinnati player-manager was 1-for-3 with a walk, leaving him four hits shy of Cobb's mark of 4,191.

While he is averaging .899 hits in each game he has played this season, that mark has dipped to .727 hits a game over the last 11 games, during which he has batted only .211. Since Aug. 18, when he went 2-for-4 at Houston, his overall average his slipped from .273 to .266.

"I haven't been hitting the ball hard in games," Rose said. "Even when I go 'oh-for,' I usually hit the ball hard two times out of three or three times out of four."

Rose benched himself for Tuesday night's game, snapping a string of six straight starts, his longest since mid-May. In those six games, he had five hits in 22 at-bats for a .227 average.

At that pace, he would need 26 or 27 at-bats to get six more hits, and since he has averaged about 3.666 at-bats per game over that stretch, he would need at least seven games to break the record.

If he continues to hit the way he has for the past week — and assuming he plays each game in Cincinnati this weekend — Rose would break the record next Thursday, Sept. 12 against San Diego or Friday, Sept. 13 against Los Angeles.

Rose has said he would like to break the mark in Cincinnati, where he played 16 years before returning last season after five years in Philadelphia and a half year in Montreal.

Dickerson, Brudzinski still among holdouts as season openers approach for NFL teams

By The Associated Press

Another National Football League holdout returned Wednesday when offensive tackle Greg Koch resumed practice with the Green Bay Packers. But with just four days to go until the NFL openers, Los Angeles Rams running back Eric Dickerson headed a large contingent of key players still away from their teams.

"I have a lot of mixed emotions," said Koch, a starter whose dispute with an assistant coach reportedly precipitated his Aug. 18 walkout. "My No. 1 priority is to play football and to play this year. I'll be happy here. I surely missed football and that's the man reason I'm back."

Miami Dolphins quarterback Dan Marino, who shattered the single-season marks for passing yardage and touchdown passes last season, reported back last Saturday after walking out in a move aimed at speeding up the renegotiation of his contract. A couple of other holdouts, Philadelphia Eagles wide receiver Mike Quick and Houston Oilers fullback Larry Moriarty also showed up in the past few days.

Dickerson, however, remained home in Sealy, Texas, where he has been since the beginning of August. The man who set a new NFL rushing record with 2,105 yards last season wants to renegotiate a contract he signed with the Los Angeles Rams ago just before the salary scale exploded in a bidding war with the United States Football League.

Also among the missing are cornerback Mark Haynes of the New York Giants and safety Todd Bell of the Chicago Bears, first and second-team All-Pros last season; linebacker Bob Brudzinski and strong safety Glenn Blackwood of the Dolphins; wide receiver Earnest Gray and defensive end Casey Merrill of the Giants and wide receiver John Jefferson of the Packers.

The reasons for the holdouts vary, but one common denominator is agent Howard Slusher.

"This is vintage Howard Slusher," says George Young, the Giants' general manager. "He has his clients withdraw services and put pressure on the team. He does it all the time. If he can sit and wait, why can't I?"

Slusher has not said much. However, on Tuesday he told Mike Lupica of the New York Daily News that he felt the Giants were trying to use Haynes to make an example of him.

"I have never in my life not negotiated. I sit and negotiate. I don't sit and wait," he said. "I know what it looks like: 'Howard Slusher, the holdout king.' "

Many college courses prepare you for a job in management. Sooner or later. But successfully completing Army ROTC will place you in a management job right after graduation.
It's definitely not a trainee job. You could be accountable for millions of dollars worth of equipment. And responsible for many of the Army's top technicians.
You might find yourself supervising a staff of computer programmers in Heidelberg. Missile technicians in Korea. Or satellite trackers in Samoa.
To qualify, you take a few hours of ROTC classes weekly, along with the subjects in your major. You'll receive financial assistance—$100 a month, up to $1000 a year—in your last two years. And you might even qualify for a scholarship.

When the ice cream is finished freezing, it's ready for the hardening room where it sits overnight in 20-degree-below-zero storage. Packaged ice cream can then be sold the next day while behind-the-counter ice cream must be warmed to 5 degrees before it can be used for dipping, Roberts said.

After ice cream is ready for dipping comes the big decision.

"OK, will it be peppermint or the coconut-pineapple?" the young lady behind the counter asks.

"Well...why don't you just make it a chocolate malt."

timed to coincide with the planned test. It accused the United States of "taking yet another step to escalate the arms race and spread it to space."

The U.S. statement said the American testing program was important "to re-establishing the balance in this area" with the Soviets.

It said the program was proceeding at a pace determined by technical considerations and suggested anti-satellite weapons tests were the sort of issue that should be discussed "without preconditions" by the two sides in Geneva.

Negotiations are due to resume Sept. 19 in the Swiss city on offensive weapons and space-based systems. There was virtually no progress in the first two rounds.

Responding to an account of the meeting by Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., Redman said the "Soviets are still posing preconditions for serious negotiations over weapons that exist today."

viding food service students with a strong curriculum.

Spears said it is important for food service students to be exposed to food management software because computer systems are quickly becoming commonplace in many restaurants and cafeterias.

This semester a special course has been developed by the department to give software exposure to junior and senior food service students. Gregoire said the class gives students the opportunity to become familiar with food service software.

By using the software, students are able to observe what professional food services use to plan their operations, said Gregoire, who is also coordinator for the incorporation of the software into classes.

"The software allows the user to do many things related to food service management," she said. "It can determine the cost of a menu, indicate what food needs to be purchased and in what quantity and adjust a recipe size, along with other capabilities."

In addition to the software package, the department will receive "full user-group privileges." The privileges include the available option of adding more software to the system, full system training and telephone assistance in case of a software question.

A five-day training session on the use of the software system was conducted by a CBORD representative for 20 faculty and graduate students this summer.

The software is "user friendly," Gregoire said. She said within two years graduates in dietetics, restaurant and institutional management will be computer literate and will have even greater potential for job placement than they now have.

explaining the harsh tone of his letter to Dole. "Unfortunately, I don't expect any major turnabout in farm policy."

Dole, John Block, secretary of agriculture, and President Reagan all are focusing on the short-term costs of maintaining the farm industry and ignoring the long-term costs to agriculture and the nations economy as a whole, Wyatt charged. The already bleak situation will deteriorate further if farm commodity loan levels and target prices are lowered.

"All solutions depend on the farm program and if we have the one Dole and the Reagan administration is advocating, I see a lot more problems for farmers," Wyatt said. "If they reduce commodity loan rates and target prices at the same time, they better not expect anything to be left in the rural part of this state."

The recent August break allowed members of Congress to view firsthand the agricultural situation and Wyatt thinks U.S. Reps. Pat Roberts, Jim Slattery and others were enlightened by what they saw.

"I don't think they realized the seriousness of the problems until they came out here in August," Wyatt said. "It was a rude awakening and a shock to find out how bad it is. Roberts found out on his listening tour and I think Slattery and others who actually visited working farmers now know. I don't think Dole had a lot of contact with working farmers last month."

Roberts, a Dodge City Republican who represents the First District of western Kansas, spent three weeks on the road, stopping in each of his 58 counties and covered 4,000 miles. The town meetings he held made it clear "there is no room t hide and we are out of time" when it comes to farm policy.

"The truth is our entire farm lending structure is under growing stress," Roberts said in a news release. "I am not talking about digging the credit hole deeper. I am saying Congress has 60 days in which to shore up and stand behind the farm credit system, including our commercial banks."

Roberts said the farm bill is being held "hostage" to a budget process that has been a failure, noting the current budget increases defense spending but reduces agricultural spending by $10 billion.

mortgage lenders, spokesmen said.

A statement issued by the system's New York funding arm, the Farm Credit Funding Corp., said the system as a whole is likely to post "a substantial net loss" for this year.

Farm Credit Administration spokesman Roger Stromberg said the system still is expected to be able to manage its problems for the immediate future. But he said worsening farm financial projections indicate that an infusion of cash will be necessary in 18 to 24 months.

According to various proposals, that could come as direct help from the Federal Reserve system or from a new entity, either government-sponsored or private, that would buy up problem loans from the farm credit system and from other farm lenders.

System administrators also would like to see Congress build strong income support provisions for farmers in a new long-term farm bill now being developed.

Several members of Congress, including Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, have advanced various proposals for federal aid to the system, and hearings on the issue are scheduled for later this month.

U.S. farmers owe some $212 billion, with $74 billion of the debt held by the farm credit system. It makes mortgage loans through 12 regional federal land banks, operating loans through 12 regional federal intermediate credit banks and farm cooperative loans through a system of banks for cooperatives.

The system raises money through the sale of bonds to institutional investors such as banks.

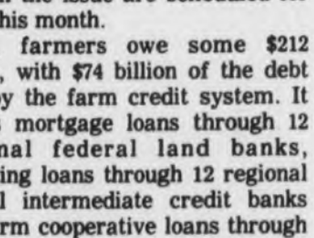
human dignity?"

And the Protestant-Jewish coalition, Interfaith Action for Economic Justice, called Reagan's plan "an assault on the progressivity of the tax system," the skewing of the system so wealthy people pay a higher percentage of income in taxes.

Those specific complaints concern a Reagan recommendation that the top tax rate for the richest Americans be lowered to 35 percent from 50 percent. The top rate was 70 percent until Congress passed another Reagan tax bill in 1981.



Both groups also said further help for the poor should not come at the expense of middle-income Americans.

The administration bill also aims to provide tax relief for the poorest Americans.

South African official warns U.S. sanctions could hamper reform

By The Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa — The government warned the United States on Thursday that proposed economic sanctions against this country will impede racial reform and harm all of the black nations of southern Africa before it affects South Africa.

Clashes with police and soldiers persisted into the night Thursday near Cape Town. At least 29 people have been killed in the sporadic, day-and-night battles over nine days. Youngsters throwing rocks battle security forces firing rubber bullets and live ammunition from shotguns.

No new deaths were reported Thursday.

Deputy Foreign Minister Louis Nel told reporters that economic sanctions would hurt South Africa's black nations before they affected South Africa's white minority.

"It is impossible for the United States to impose punitive measures against South Africa only. They will be imposing these measures against the whole of southern Africa," Nel said.

South Africa's currency, the rand, recovered slightly to 39.85 cents, up from Wednesday's close of 38 cents and above the record low of 34.80 cents set Aug. 27. That low prompted the government to suspend trading in the currency

Aide advises coliseum seating decrease

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The most viable solution to the budget problems surrounding the Fred Bramlage Coliseum is to eliminate 2,000 to 3,000 seats and reduce the cost of the project, a Board of Regents official said Thursday.

In a special regents meeting, Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the "only choice is to cut the size" to get the project within budget.

The lowest bid of $17.9 million was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita, but is $3.4 million over the estimated construction cost of $14.5 million.

Corman told board members the firm of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the 16,000-seat coliseum, should cut "at least 3,000 seats to save $2 million."

On Aug. 1, 1984, Bill Livingston, a partner in Gossen Livingston, signed a contract obligating the firm to redesign the coliseum — for free — if bids came in over their estimate.

Livingston said Aug. 23 that redesign of the coliseum would be "extremely expensive" for his firm. Corman estimated such a redesign would cost the firm $200,000 to $300,000.

Corman indicated that if Livingston fulfills the University administration's wishes and redesigns the coliseum for free, the architectural firm could go bankrupt.

"There is a chance that (Livingston) will go bankrupt or quit business," Corman said. "If he does, then we will be left with a bundle of drawings that we can just throw away."

Representatives of Gossen Livingston are to meet with University officials today to discuss what funding or redesign options are available.

The process of budget negotiation and rebidding is expected to push the ground breaking for the coliseum back at least six months. The ceremony was originally scheduled for Saturday.

Corman was uncertain exactly where the budget cuts would come from because, he said, the coliseum is basically a single-purpose facility which contains no classrooms, and is not suitable for quick revision.

"The bids are 25 percent over budget. This is a single-purpose facility; you can't just take the floor off, or lop off an end, Corman said. "It means you must completely redesign."

The quality of the coliseum as it is designed now is "good, but marginal," Corman said. He added that nothing remains to be sliced from the design. A list of building "alternates," or finishing touches, worth $500,000 cannot be eliminated, he said.

Alternates include the portable stage, coaches' and administrative offices, bleachers, entry drives and performance lighting.

While reviewing the coliseum planning to discover why budget projections were inaccurate, Corman said he discovered neither Gossen Livingston, nor contractors Gill Johnson, Colorado Springs, Colo., and Hensel Phelps, Greeley, Colo., — both alumni who volunteered their services to the University — reviewed the coliseum budget estimates after the project reached the 60 percent completion phase.

According to Donald Hess, head of the department of architecture, firms designing large buildings rely on an expert consultant to track cost estimates. If an estimate needs revision, the architecture firm will advise owners of the changes.

The University accepted the services of Johnson and Greeley, but Livingston also hired a consultant, thus responsibility for the miscalculation and the resulting financial burden for a redesign of the coliseum is not clear.

University officials will make an official report to the board in two weeks.

Manhattan crime rate shows 18 percent rise

By TOM SCHULTES
Business Editor

A recent report issued by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation showed an increase of 7.7 percent in violent crime in Kansas during the first six months of 1985, with Manhattan showing an increase and Junction City a decrease in overall crime rates.

The report showed an overall increase of 18 percent for the city of Manhattan, while Junction City reported a decrease of 22 percent. All percentages, unless otherwise noted, are for the first six months of the years listed.

Junction City Police Chief Jerry Smith attributed the decline for his jurisdiction to a number of things.

"Over the last three to four years, prosecution in Geary County has greatly improved," he said, in both city and county cases.

Smith also credited citizen involvement for the decrease, noting the public is becoming more responsive in reporting suspicious activities and more willing to testify.

"Residents have decided we don't want crime in Junction City anymore," Smith said, adding the organization of Neighborhood Watch programs and Ident-A-Kid programs have aided the effort.

Comparable worth issue suffers major setback

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Business groups Thursday praised a federal appeals court ruling as a crippling blow to the concept of comparable worth, while labor unions and feminist leaders said they would continue to fight for the pay equity idea in collective bargaining, legislation and the Supreme Court.

The decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco on Wednesday "makes our efforts (on the pay equity issue in Washington state) a little harder and a little tougher," said Gerald W. McEntee, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said Thursday. "We recognize it as a setback."

The union will appeal the ruling to the Supreme Court and "we believe that we have both the law and equity on our side," McEntee told a news conference.

In contrast, Virginia Lamp, a labor relations attorney at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said "comparable worth is an idea with superficial and political appeal, but which is now legally bankrupt" because of the court decision.

Comparable worth, also known as pay equity, is the concept of paying men and women similar wages for different jobs judged to be of similar value to an employer.

Merit system could cause legal battles

By TRISH MEHAFFEY
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the second story of a two-part series about merit pay. Today's story deals with the legalities of merit pay.

Merit pay is a system in which educators are paid according to performance evaluations and skill in the classroom. If implemented into the state education system, state and local boards of education will face the task of developing an evaluation system for teachers.

"A number of legal issues could be raised by teachers since merit is based on the evaluation," wrote Frank W. Shaw II in "Merit Pay" published in Educational Administration Quarterly.

Shaw said evaluations must be designed so all teachers receive due process — the right, fair and unbiased treatment from the law under the Constitution's 14th Amendment.

Article 5 of the amendment states, "nor shall anyone be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

The equal protection issue of the 14th Amendment has implications for the types of data used in the evaluations, Shaw said.

In Backman vs. Bateman, the Utah Supreme Court ruled, "Regulations pertaining to public employment cannot discriminate against individuals or be classed without a reasonable basis therefore related to the public good, nor deprive persons of their liberty or property without due process of law."

Shaw said the due process requirements affect non-tenured and tenured teachers differently.

In Board of Regents vs. Roth, the U.S. Supreme Court held that declining to renew the contract of an assistant professor without tenure doesn't entitle him to reasons for the ter-

Regents forgo plan to name 7 candidates

By A. SCHARNHORST
Managing Editor

The Kansas Board of Regents Thursday decided to delay naming the members of the University presidential search committee in order to take time to research the candidates.

Although a special meeting had been called for the board to name the committee — in addition to discussing the status of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum and entry of Washburn University of Topeka into the regents system — members of the board requested two weeks to review applications.

The search committee will recommend candidates to the regents for the successor to University President Duane Acker, who will step down from his post effective June 30, 1986. The regents will select two students, two faculty members, two alumni and one University dean to serve on the committee.

The board is expected to announce its decision at its regularly scheduled meeting, Sept. 19-20.

The regents were given their first opportunity to look over the credentials of the candidates at the Thursday meeting.

Student Body President Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, submitted Friday the names of two graduate students and two undergraduate students for consideration to the committee. Faculty Senate President Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy, submitted to the board the names of four faculty interested in the position. The same occurred with the Alumni Association. The Dean's Council submitted two names for consideration.

Brown and Reagan will serve on the board along with Elizabeth Oswald of Hutchinson, president of

Robot finds part of Air-India 747

LONDON — An underwater robot has found the severed nose section of the Air-India Boeing 747 that crashed into the sea off Ireland in June and the discovery strengthens the theory that a bomb caused the disaster, the Daily Mail reported today.

"The wreckage of the flight deck and first-class compartment was found more than (200 yards) away from the main debris of the rest of the Boeing 747. This strengthens the theory that Flight 182 was hit by an explosion at (31,000 feet)," the British tabloid said in what it stated was an exclusive report.

It added: "The nose section appears to have broken away just behind the plane's forward door. That points to a blast in the forward luggage hold a few feet away, which would have destroyed the electronic compartment, knocking out all the instruments and controls."

The plane, bound from Toronto and Montreal to a stop in London, and then Bombay, crashed into the sea about 120 miles off the southwest Irish coast on June 23. All 329 people aboard were killed. The wreckage sank in water up to 6,700 feet deep.

Regents reject Washburn proposal

TOPEKA — The State Board of Regents Thursday rejected the idea of admitting Washburn University of Topeka to the state university system but conceded that Washburn's admission as a state school is "inevitable."

Washburn officials have asked the Legislature to either increase state support for the municipal university or allow it to become a state school, much like Wichita State University did in 1964 after being a city-supported university.

However, the Board of Regents, which governs the state's six universities and Kansas Technical Institute, focused on the state's strained financial condition as it said no to Washburn on a unanimous voice vote.

The Special Committee on Washburn University, a legislative interim panel that is studying Washburn's future, has asked the Regents to present its position on the matter during a hearing scheduled for Sept. 18.

The Regents discussed the proposal after Donald W. Wilson, president of Pittsburg State University, said the Council of Presidents of the state universities has decided to oppose Washburn's admission.

Wilson said the presidents' decision was based on a consensus that Washburn would drain away tax dollars from the existing state institutions, which he said already receive about 20 percent less than they should from the Legislature.

Pit bull dog owners plead guilty

LIBERAL — Eight defendants pleaded guilty Thursday to misdemeanor charges in connection with an organized pit bull terrier dogfight that was raided July 27 near Liberal.

Seward County Magistrate Judge David Rinehart ordered each defendant to pay a $500 fine, contribute $500 to the Southwest Kansas Humane Society and pay court costs. He gave each a 30-day suspended sentence and six months probation.

County Attorney Linda Trigg said the pleas and sentences were a result of negotiations between defense lawyers and her office.

Each defendant could have received a possible maximum fine of $1,000 and a jail term of six months.

The defendants who pleaded guilty Thursday were Lee S. Cruz, Guymon, Okla.; Karl W. Hall, Liberal; Ronald R. Lewis, Guymon, Okla.; Calvin C. Newbaum, Granville, Ill.; Edwin E. Noll Jr., Liberal; Fred J. Rub, Shorewood, Ill.; Jesse A. Stone, Guymon, Okla.; and Darrel Gilbert, Plains.

Earlier this week, Associate District Judge Kin Raney ordered the 43 dogs confiscated during the raid held until all court proceedings are completed. Six people are awaiting trial on felony counts in the case. A seventh has jumped bond, authorities said.

The Humane Society contributions ordered Thursday were meant to defray the expenses the organization has incurred because of the impounded animals.

Sheriff's deputies and a Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent raided the dogfight on a farmstead about five miles outside Liberal and arrested 15 adults and a 9-year-old. The child was later released uncharged.

Seven dogs discovered during the raid were so badly injured they had to be destroyed.

Hughes' estate pays $25 million tax

AUSTIN, Texas — Howard Hughes' estate has made a second $25 million tax payment to the state of Texas in the final chapter of an eight-year legal battle over his fortune.

Attorney General Jim Mattox said Wednesday that Texas has received just over $50 million, the amount agreed on in a settlement reached last year with the Hughes estate and the state of California.

"This wraps up a complicated case that lasted eight years, with the state of Texas definitely getting its money's worth," Mattox said.

When the settlement was reached, Mattox called it probably "the most publicized and complicated probate case in this country's history."

The legal battle began on April 5, 1976, when the reclusive Hughes died aboard a private jet flying from Acapulco to Houston, where he was to receive medical treatment.

Texas and California each pursued inheritance tax claims on his massive estate, and the case went to the U.S. Supreme Court three times.

Jobs cause reproduction disorders

ATLANTA — Federal health officials said Thursday that job-related abortions, stillbirths and birth defects are a widespread and serious problem in the United States, but conceded that much more study is needed.

The extent to which on-the-job exposure to chemicals, radiation and other materials is responsible for reproductive disorders is largely unknown, the national Centers for Disease Control said.

But research by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, an arm of the CDC, indicates that millions of American workers are exposed at work to materials which have been shown to cause abnormal births or other reproductive disorders in animals or humans.

In a report published Thursday by the CDC, NIOSH researchers said an estimated 9 million U.S. workers are exposed to radio frequency or microwave radiation, which has been shown to cause impaired fertility and deaths of unborn offspring in animals, "but which has yet to be studied adequately in humans."

But the causes for as many as 70 percent of the birth defects that afflict 200,000 babies in this country each year are not known, the report said.

Mother to watch daughter's show

MANCHESTER, Maine — Samantha Smith's mother said she plans to watch the new television series "Lime Street," in which her late daughter co-starred before dying in a plane crash.

Samantha, who was cast in the ABC-TV series as a daughter of an insurance investigator played by Robert Wagner, died Aug. 25 when a Bar Harbor Airlines plane crashed in Auburn. Her father, Arthur Smith, and six others were also killed.

The first "Lime Street" episode airs Sept. 21.

"There are scenes I hadn't seen of Samantha," Jane Smith said Wednesday. "I hadn't seen her much in the last month because of the shooting, and I had been looking forward to it for a long time."

Smith said her daughter would have wanted her work aired.

Samantha, who was returning from filming in London when the crash took place, had completed five episodes.

The question of what to do about Samantha's part in future episodes will be decided later this month, said Linda Bloodworth-Thomason, the show's creator.

Mandrell files suit over accident

GALLATIN, Tenn. — Country singer Barbara Mandrell has sued for $10.3 million for injuries resulting from a two-car accident last year that kept her out of the recording studio for eight months.

The suit filed Wednesday in Sumner County Circuit Court names five insurance companies, the estate of the driver of the other car, Mark White, and White's father as defendants.

White was killed in the Sept. 11 accident in Hendersonville when his car collided head-on with a car driven by Miss Mandrell.

The performer suffered a concussion, a broken leg, broken ankle and knee damage, and was hospitalized until Sept. 30. Her two children, Matthew, 15, and Jamie, 9, sustained lesser injuries.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students should be furnished ahead of time when possible.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Senate commends Landon's leadership

By VICKI REYNOLDS
Government Editor

Student Senate approved a resolution commending former Kansas Gov. Alfred M. Landon for his years of leadership and also heard first reading of a bill to revise the Business Administration College Council at its first meeting Thursday.

The commendation to Landon was moved to special orders and was approved unanimously by senate. The legislation was sponsored by Mike Riley, junior in business administration. Landon's 98th birthday is Monday.

The Business Administration College Council constitutional revision, sponsored by Sally Traeger, senior in business administration and council president, is intended by members to clarify certain sections of the constitution.

The revisions in the constitution include the establishment of five committees, guidelines for membership selection in each committee and a statement of purpose for each committee.

The committees within the guidelines of the constitutional revision are: Executive Committee, Publications Committee, Elections Committee, Open House Committee and Finance Committee.

Traeger said the council decided to revise the constitution because it felt much of the wording was "stupid."

"It was a bunch of words that didn't make any sense," Traeger said. "We wanted to clarify it — get rid of some of the dead weight."

The revision also deletes the clause in the original constitution which makes a 2.5 grade point average mandatory for members.

"There's no way to really know that," Trager said, "unless we force each member to sign a release form."

The legislation also calls for the removal of the one vote per student clause. Traeger said this would provide for voting by proxy for members.

Mark Jones, senior in management, briefed senators about the new Internal Revenue Service legislation which frees $700,000 for student use. Jones also told senate about the Fred Bramlage Coliseum bids, of which the lowest was $3.4 million over the projected cost.

Suggestions for overcoming this setback, Jones said, include cutting the size and certain features of the coliseum, raising more money, a combination of these, abandoning the project and redesigning Ahearn Field House or putting the project on indefinite hold while more money is accumulated.

Senate also heard presentations from William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, and Larry Travis, athletic director.

Sutton stressed the importance of student recruitment and retention and said his office will be making every effort in this direction.

"You are fortunate you're here (at K-State)," Sutton said. "There are a lot of other students out there who should be here — at least 2,000."

Travis called for student support for the athletic program.

Revised guidelines aim for clean blood supply

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — In revised guidelines aimed at eliminating AIDS virus from the blood supply, federal health officials recommended Thursday that any man who has had sex with another man even once in the last eight years refrain from donating blood.

The national Center for Disease Control has for years considered homosexual or bisexual men with multiple sexual partners to be at increased risk for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

But the latest recommendation from the Food and Drug Administration, published by the Atlanta-based CDC, applies even to men "who may have had only a single contact, and who do not consider themselves homosexual or bisexual."

The FDA stopped short of saying that any man who has ever had gay sex is at increased risk for AIDS. "But we would certainly consider them able to be carriers," said Susan Cruzan, an FDA spokeswoman.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is an affliction in which the body's immune system becomes unable to resist disease. It is believed to be caused by an unusual virus discovered in France and the United States.

AIDS is most likely to strike homosexuals, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs. It can apparently be spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions, but not by casual contact. It has struck more than 12,000 people in the United States since 1979, and more than half of them have died.

Interviews with donors of AIDS virus-positive blood showed "homosexual contact" to be "the most common risk factor identified," the FDA reported.

So the FDA reworked its recommendations to blood centers, to include asking any man not to give blood if he has has had sex with another man since 1977 — the year preceding the oldest AIDS virus found in donated blood serum, Cruzan said.

Methods of teaching should be improved

KATHERINE HERMAN
Collegian Columnist

The quality of teaching methods is an issue which affects everyone, directly or indirectly.

Many students retain the prevalent high school attitude of preferring "easy" teachers whose teaching methods, regardless of the quality, require of the student a minimum of exertion, dedication or thought. College students who may be more concerned with the quality of education place importance on the quality of instruction.

If a college student has a sincere desire to learn, the downfalls of the teaching system at K-State become apparent. This can become quite exasperating to the student — not to mention the detrimental effect poor classroom experiences can have.

One major fault with many teachers at K-State is their method of conducting class using material solely from the textbook. The scene has become quite familiar: A teacher consistently spends the entire class period lecturing, and the only assignments given are from the textbook.

The ambitious student at first eagerly reads the assignments, only to find a longer, more detailed version of the lecture. Little or no additional material is presented, and while some of the teachers have the sense at least to add word variations, many of these "textbook teachers" conduct class word-for-word from the book.

Obviously there are problems associated with this teaching method. Is the textbook or the class more important to an understanding of the subject?

If the subset of materials presented in class is more important, why are students required to buy outrageously priced textbooks? (And the purchase is required, considering these clever teachers tend to enforce the repetition of the class material by including non-lecture test material on exams.)

If, on the other hand, the larger amount of information included in the textbook is crucial to an understanding of the subject, then why don't these teachers take a vacation and let the students concentrate entirely on the text, which contains the teacher's contribution in its entirety?

In this situation, the time of both the student and teacher is used inefficiently. Note taking becomes useless copying of printed material. Some people would argue that this type of course is not worthless because the pressure of the grading system motivates the student to study what he otherwise would not.

However, the student who sincerely desires to learn does not have to pay for his motivation. It comes naturally. Meriting these classroom procedures for their motivating abilities is similar to saying that the University is catering to normally unmotivated people and pushing aside the truly dedicated students by requiring enrollment in such courses.

When classes are taught using material entirely from one textbook, the question arises: Who is the actual teacher?

For example, imagine Professor Smith is my political science instructor, but his only function is relaying the words of Fred Harris, the textbook author. Would it not be more appropriate to call Professor Smith "Narrator Smith?"

Of course, there are some exceptions to this in that for some courses, teaching solely out of the textbook is preferred. The principles of the course remain exactly the same regardless of the source.

Basic economics is one such course. Things would get confusing if a demand curve was presented in different ways. Information would also get complicated if unnecessary material was given.

Many mathematics courses are also of this type. The mathematical procedures are the important aspect of the course, so they must be given during lecture in the same form as given by the author of the text.

However, teachers of these courses who demonstrate only the examples given in the text are being inefficient. Time could be used much more effectively if teachers used examples which supplemented the text rather than merely rehashed it.

If the teaching method using strictly the information from the book is unappealing and inefficient, what types of teaching methods are preferable? Two important considerations are innovation and the use of many sources for class material.

Innovation serves the purpose of helping students who want to learn. If unique ideas characterize a classroom situation, a student is more likely to take interest and attend class.

For example, although I dislike history and am interested in economics, I would much rather attend my history class where we participate in discussion groups, listen to music, watch slide presentations and take notes, than economics, where class consists only of lectures. Learning takes place in both situations, but the learning of the first type of course is more beneficial and well-rounded.

Using many sources for class material provides both variation and a wider perspective on a topic. The views of national leaders and local experts, as well as the instructor's opinions, could be incorporated into the lesson.

If these improvements cannot be made, perhaps the administration should consider an alternative to required classes, such as self-taught courses involving textbook reading and examinations. There are several solutions to this frequent problem affecting the quality of education.

Regents discuss coliseum

The white elephant escapade concerning the Fred Bramlage Coliseum continued at the special meeting of the Board of Regents Thursday.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, said the only choice in solving the budget problems is to reduce the size of the structure, which will mean restructuring the design. The University was supposed to be celebrating the ground breaking tomorrow, but now a six-month delay is certain.

Most interested students already know the lowest coliseum bid is $3.4 million over the $14.5 million construction budget. Corman said 3,000 seats would have to be eliminated from the current design to lower the cost by $2 million. Imagine, cutting 3,000 seats and still not meeting the budget!

Reducing the size is the only solution since the coliseum structure is "good, but marginal" now, according to Corman. The building is a single-purpose facility with all but the bare essentials eliminated. Any exclusions would further cut into the quality of the structure.

Gossen Livingston Associates, the architecture firm responsible for the design of the coliseum, is under contract to redesign the coliseum free of charge. The question is, can they develop a design to fit the rather exorbitant tastes of some coliseum supporters?

Corman said Gossen Livingston and the consulting firm with whom they were working failed to review budget estimates for the coliseum after the plans were 60 percent complete — a mistake the firm is surely regretting considering the enormous cost the redesign will mean.

Efficiency must not have been included in the original plans.

From this point on, officials in charge of the coliseum must deal in reality concerning the project, taking into consideration the possible effects of future delays on the overall cost of the project.

Aside from the coliseum, the regents should be commended for deciding to take the next two weeks to review the applications of the candidates for the University president selection committee.

Although applications for the positions were solicited in a rather hurried manner, the final decisions are being made with discretion. Questions have been raised over the regents' regard for student opinion.

The regents should be cautioned that the three student representatives could join to form more than a token vote on the search committee.

Along with two student representatives, the regents will be choosing two faculty members, two alumni and one University dean. From these candidates the most responsible individuals must be chosen — only a capable committee can represent the University in the search for a capable University president.

Justice department unjust

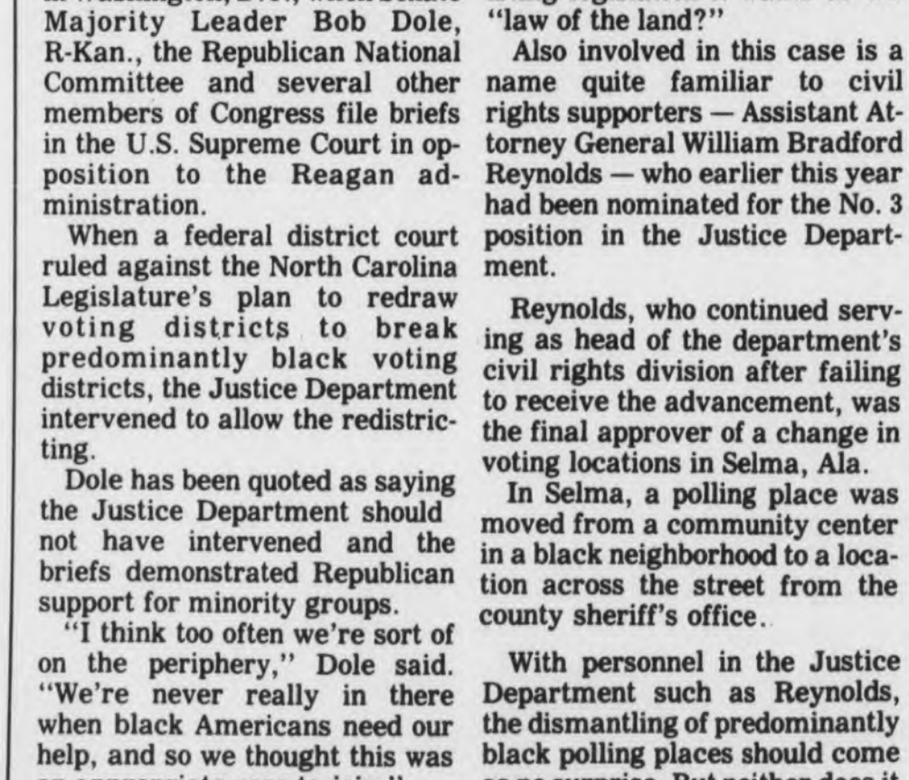
One can tell things are strange in Washington, D.C., when Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., the Republican National Committee and several other members of Congress file briefs in the U.S. Supreme Court in opposition to the Reagan administration.

When a federal district court ruled against the North Carolina Legislature's plan to redraw voting districts to break predominantly black voting districts, the Justice Department intervened to allow the redistricting.

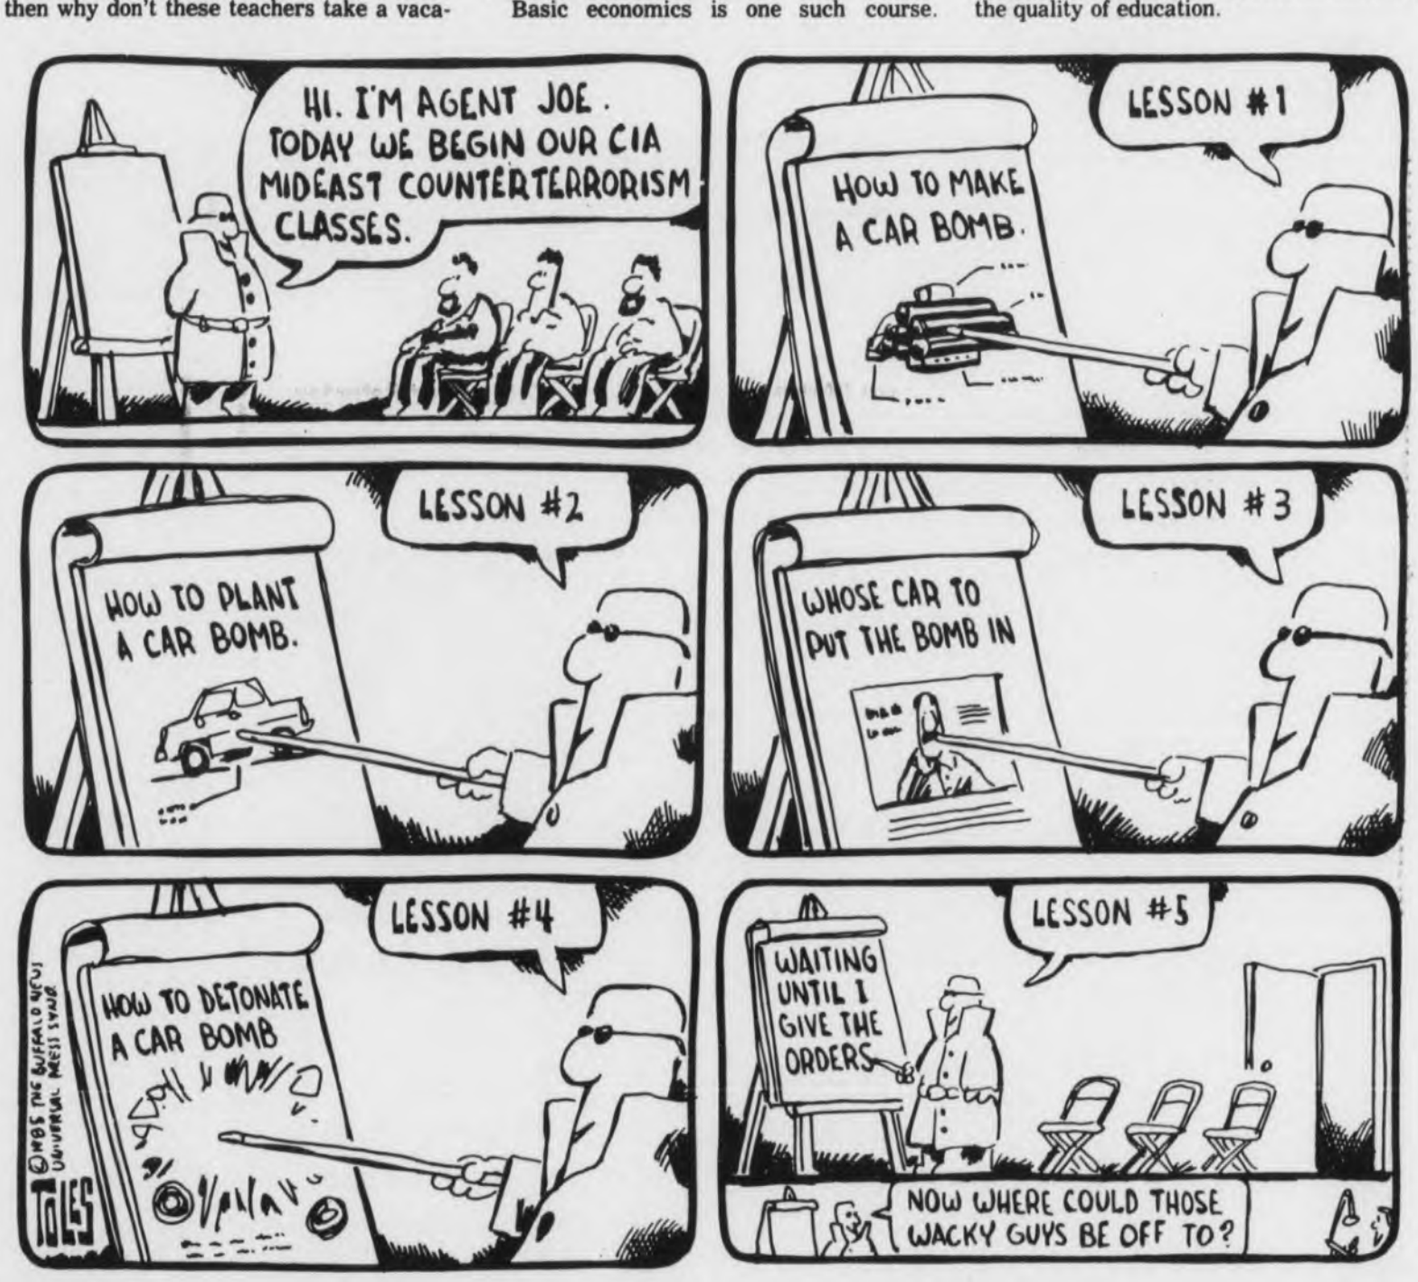
Dole has been quoted as saying the Justice Department should not have intervened and the briefs demonstrated Republican support for minority groups.

"I think too often we're sort of on the periphery," Dole said. "We're never really in there when black Americans need our help, and so we thought this was an appropriate case to join."

So, the question now arises: Is the Reagan administration in touch with the party's line or is it out free-wheeling, deciding what policies or interpretations of existing legislation it wants as the "law of the land?"



Also involved in this case is a name quite familiar to civil rights supporters — Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds — who earlier this year had been nominated for the No. 3 position in the Justice Department.



Reynolds, who continued serving as head of the department's civil rights division after failing to receive the advancement, was the final approver of a change in voting locations in Selma, Ala.

In Selma, a polling place was moved from a community center in a black neighborhood to a location across the street from the county sheriff's office.

With personnel in the Justice Department such as Reynolds, the dismantling of predominantly black polling places should come as no surprise. But neither does it make such callous gerrymandering excusable.

Letters

Professor's choice of words indicates insensitivity

Editor,

For some of you, this letter may be a harsh reality of days past and present.

My fear is knowing that for most of you this letter will represent no more than black over-reaction to a problem that doesn't exist.

At issue here is the use of the word "nigger" in the classroom.

This summer, during my history class, my "teacher" felt it necessary to use the word "nigger" to "emphasize and give clarity to" a historical period and point.

Yesterday, my English literature "teacher" used the word "nigger," and again I heard (from a student) how important "nigger" is as a word to emphasize a historical point.

To both these "teachers" and to those who would present themselves before me with this "historical" feeble argument, let me remind you that Webster has given us a dictionary full of terms to describe any point you wish to make. "Nigger" is not the only word available to teachers to describe any point in English, history or any other course of study.

As a black man, and as a student of higher learning, I dare say the word "nigger" has no place in the classroom.

If you wish to teach me a point in history, literature or race relations, ask me to read, ask me to discuss and ask me to formulate an opinion that will enable me to inspire others.

If you wish to teach me anger, ignorance and insensitivity, continue to use the word "nigger" in the classroom.

The true nigger will come to light.

History of human religion reveals underlying truths

Editor,

Re: Daniel Grubb's column, "Religion is a 'fairy tale' for believers," in the Aug. 27 Collegian:

In his study of the history of mankind and of religion, even Grubb admits that the two have been inseparable. Certainly man has done many terrible things throughout history, and certainly he is often most strongly motivated by religious ambitions, even in doing evil.

Nevertheless, rejection of religion is not necessarily the best, or most reasonable, solution. In fact, man's history of doing wrong, and of being preoccupied with religion, reveals some underlying truths that I think have been overlooked.

First, every person has a natural awareness that God exists, and that he must be holy and all-powerful. This may be referred to as superstition, child-like faith, logical response to reality, etc., but the preponderance of religion reveals this innate awareness.

The second vital truth is that all people do wrong, and that they know it. We all have a conscience — an innate awareness of our failure to live up to the perfect standards of the creator. Therefore, man invents means by which he may attempt to remedy this problem. This is where all the religions come in.

Because the root of humankind's sin is pride and independence — the rejection of God as the one who deserves all glory and honor — the religions that men have invented are inevitably stained with this independence.

However, Christianity is not an invention of man. It is man's obedient response and acceptance of God's act of reconciliation.

The wrong that has been done, even in the name of Christianity, is living proof that as often as man rejects God's guidance, and turns to his own "wisdom" and intellect, wrong will be done.

In his love for us, God has offered us a solution, Jesus Christ. He is not religion. He is not superstition. He is the way of salvation.

Free watermelon party optional for freshmen

By The Collegian Staff

To provide an alternative for students affected by the drinking law change, the city of Manhattan is sponsoring a free watermelon feed and pool party to welcome freshmen to Manhattan.

The event will begin at 4 p.m. today in City Park, near the swimming pool. This activity is especially for freshmen and is sponsored in part by the Office of Greek Affairs.

The party is a follow-up to Kickoff '85, a welcoming event held Aug. 24 at KSU Stadium, said Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs. Although the activity is designed for freshmen, no one will be turned away, she added.

"There is a need for some alternate form of entertainment for freshmen," Robel said. "If this is well received, this could be the beginning of a series of activities for freshmen."

Carnival will highlight several campus groups

By The Collegian Staff

More than 80 organizations will be represented Sunday at the Annual Activities Carnival sponsored by the Union Program Council from 5 to 8 p.m. in the Union.

"In the past, they've gone well," said Julie Stephens, special events committee chairperson, and senior in interior design.

"The purpose is to provide a day where all the clubs can be located in one area and the students can be introduced to them," Stephens said. "Students can learn what's available."

Registered campus organizations have the chance to show their wares. The carnival is a time to check into an organization, ask questions and sign up.

UPC's eight program committees will be represented. They are: Arts, Eclectic Entertainment, Feature Films, Issues and Ideas, Kaliedoscope Films, Outdoor Recreation, Special Events, and Travel.

Stephens said she expects participation to increase from last year.

Other organizations featured are: Association of the U.S. Army, Block and Bridle, Blue Key, Campus Crusade, Chimes, the French Club and the German Club.

The sporting clubs participating will be the K-State Flying Club and the Flint Hills Water Ski Club.

Union Program Council has sponsored this event for 28 years.

Students, residents serve time at UFM

Violators work in lieu of paying fine

By COLLEEN WILSON
Staff Writer

Students and residents of Manhattan have contributed "more than $10,000" worth of volunteer time to the University for Man while serving their community time for DUIs and other minor convictions, according to Julie Coates, director of campus and community programs.

The city of Manhattan often requires that persons convicted on misdemeanor charges serve volunteer time to the community in lieu of, or in addition to, paying fines. They receive no pay and work anywhere from 10 to 200 hours, averaging 30, said Michelle Winston, probation officer for the City of Manhattan.

Probation officers and those required to serve community time work together to decide where the person will serve the volunteer time. Winston said probation officers try to place the volunteers where they are "best suited."

Those serving community time at UFM are supervised by Coates or Bob Habiger, coordinator of the appropriate technology program.

"We try to place them in an area they are interested in, depending what their skills are," Coates said.

She said most of those who choose to serve community time at the UFM are students. Therefore, placement is easier because they usually have a declared interest.

She said a large number of people interested in construction did some uplifting of the UFM building. This included painting, repairing broken concrete on sidewalks, some rebricking on the front of the building, sheetrocking some of the old interior walls and repairing and maintaining the grounds.

"There's no question we (UFM) could never have afforded to repair and upgrade the building without them," Coates said.

Coates declined to release names of the individuals involved in the DUI program. But she said a K-State student, majoring in family and childhood development, served her community time by helping develop the "Latch Key" Day-Care Program for UFM.

Coates said the day-care program is for young children who have nowhere to go after school, and usually end up alone at home. The term "Latch Key" originated from the fact that most of the young children carry a key on a chain around their necks.

Two other student workers spent approximately 200 hours computerizing various UFM documents relating to classes taught since 1981.

"This was a chore. Even at minimum wage we're talking about $700," Coates said. "They've done an exceptional amount of work for us."

Four or five students did a statistical analysis on the number of participants in the various programs offered at UFM. Coates said they drew up a visual map of where the people using UFM services live. The map enabled UFM to pinpoint the areas from where UFM attracts its public.

Students and Manhattan residents have been serving community service at UFM for nearly two years.

Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration and Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design have been nominated to represent the Dean's Council.

Faculty nominations are: Jerome Frieman, associate professor of pyschology; Richard Gallagher, professor of electrical and computer engineering; David Schafer, professor of animal sciences and industry; and L. Van Withee, professor of agronomy.

Alumni nominations include: Wichita banker C. Q. Chandler; Nelson Galle, head of a Hesston farm equipment company; Gilbert E. Johnson, a Colorado construction firm owner; and Manhattan physician Roger Reitz.

Jill Hummels, graduate in journalism and mass communications; and Adrienne Hyle, graduate in education, were selected by Brown as candidates for the graduate student position. Tami Barham, senior in social sciences; and Mark Jones, senior in management, were selected as undergraduate candidates.

Seat belt safety club to show 'Convincer' at football game

By The Collegian Staff

A demonstration at the KSU Stadium may convince some football fans to wear safety belts on the drive home Saturday evening.

The Saved by the Belt Club will demonstrate the Convincer, a unit used to simulate low-speed car crashes, outside the stadium Saturday from 2 to 4 p.m., and after the game.

The Convincer is a movable bucket seat attached to the top of a ramp. Volunteers are asked to sit in the bucket seat and buckle up. The seat and volunteer are then released at a speed of 5 to 8 mph.

The purpose of the Convincer is to show how a person can walk away unhurt from a car crash by wearing a seat belt.

"The demonstration will be given to help promote the wearing of seat belts by Kansas drivers," said Sherry Blair, extension media coordinator for safety belt education.

The Saved by the Belt Club is a state-wide organization with 38 members. The club was formed in May and has the largest membership of any of such club in the United States.

During halftime at Saturday's football game, seven club members will receive certificates signed by Gov. John Carlin and Secretary of State John Kemp. The honored members were involved in auto accidents, had on a seat belt and walked away from the accidents unharmed.

Kathy Burke, charter member of the club, has a positive feeling about seat belts after surviving an accident.

"I was involved in a serious accident a few years back, and if I had not had my seat belt on, I would have either been seriously hurt or killed," Burke said. "Instead, thanks to my safety belt, I walked away from the accident with only a bruise across my abdomen where the belt had been."

Alive and well with the DEAD

Bumper Sticker: Nothing Left To Do But...Smile, Smile, Smile

For a few hours Tuesday night, peace, drugs, and free sex took out a blanket and sat down on the grass outside Starlight Theatre in Kansas City, Mo.

The Grateful Dead, a 20-year-old cult rock group, and their tie-dyed following of fans — Dead Heads — had invaded Swope Park.

There was a festive feeling as people renewed aquaintances from years past, some now wearing a suit and sporting styled hair while others still preferring the long hair, the cutoffs and the leather sandals.

It was 1965 again. Rock 'n' roll had meaning. Long hair and beads were fashionable and the only responsibility one had was to have a good time.

"Where's the Dead Head with the extra tickets?" one man yelled as he walked through the parking lot outside the amphitheater. The concert was a sell-out, something local Dead Heads said rarely happened in Kansas City. The hundreds of people hoping to buy tickets at the gate found themselves depending on the greed of a stranger or on the "over-the-fence" budget plan.

One man successfully tested the ground for the latter choice and quickly became the hero for a couple who missed out on a ticket bid. The man helped his companion over the fence but was unsuccessful himself, as a policeman riding a horse stopped him midway over the barbed wire topping the chain-link.

The two exchanged heated glances reminiscent of a generation gap gone by and decided to play out the game.

"You'd better get your tail back to Texas instead of trying to break in this god damned place," the policeman said.

But the man frowned, breathed some quiet profanities and left knowing he would soon be on the other side of the fence. The policeman knew it too. If he arrested everyone trying to sneak in the concert free, he'd have a jail stocked with Dead Heads and probably be out of a job.

Bumpersticker: JFA — Jodie Foster's Army

In the many interviews given over the years by Jerry Garcia, Grateful Dead's leader, he's continuously asked why the band has such a unique and faithful following. Garcia, and the other four members of the group, said they are oblivious to the reasons.

One Dead Head said simply, "It's their music." What about their music? "I don't know. It's just their music."

It was 1965 again. Rock 'n' roll had meaning. Long hair and beads were fashionable and the only responsibility one had was to have a good time.

One enticement of following the Grateful Dead might be economics — a far cry from the assumptions one might get from the "brotherly love" atmosphere of the concert. It's Dead Head capitalism with the gold standard being the band's trademarks: a skull and a rose.

It's this aspect of a Grateful Dead concert which makes it similar to a Turkish street bazaar.

"Tickets or a job?" one man yelled against the salesmen chants of two other people, who seemed content to peddle T-shirts and posters and enjoy confusing the already confused, "Why buy the best when you can buy these? Buy now and save later."

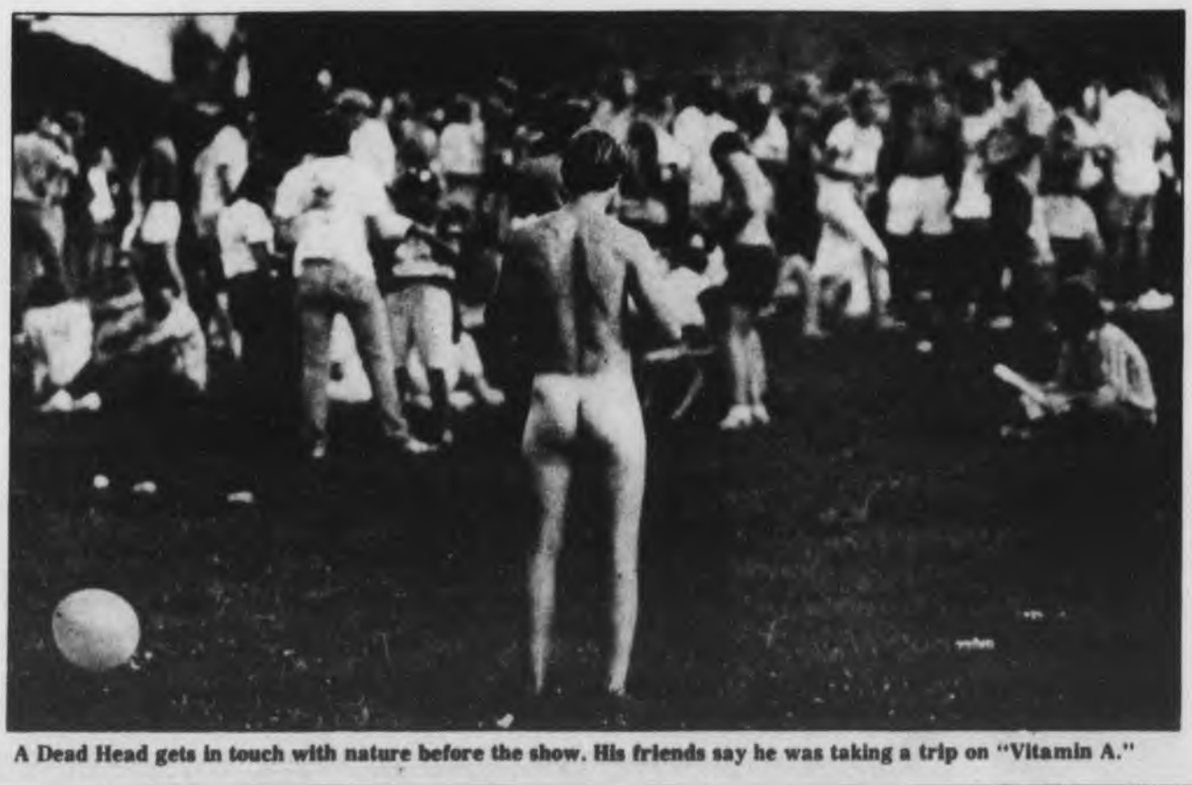
Gerald Rappold, a 1984 K-State graduate who now sells insurance in Kansas City, agreed. Feeling somewhat embarrassed after buying a $9 T-shirt, he justified his purchase like this: "The way I look at it, I just paid for some guy's gas to Colorado (The Grateful Dead's next concert)."

In some cases that's true. A barter system provides a means to follow the band from coast to coast but as Larry Leal, a 45-year-old man from Auburn, Calif., explained, "There are 1,200 people on permanent tour with these guys and one guy sells 40 to 50 T-shirts a day at $10 a shot. That's $400 to $500 a day tax free."

When asked what the groupies would do if the Grateful Dead ever disbanded, Leal laughed and said, "I don't know. They would probably go back to where the concerts had been played and just hang out. Kind of like going back to Jerusalem."

When the concert began, the front of the amphitheater cleared and scattered groups of people stood outside the fence and slowly danced by themselves. The grass was littered with beer bottles and one man lay naked by a tree.

Bumpersticker: U.S. out of North America — Nobody for President in 1984



A Dead Head couple walks the Starlight Theatre grounds — man on the right, woman on the left — hoping to find a way into the show.

Dead concerts resemble a bazaar where nearly anything tie-dyed can be bought and sold.

Finding a "ticket" into the show can be as simple as climbing through a hole in the fence while a buddy keeps watch for the "cops."

Media mixing for impact

Artist finds immediacy in art

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

An artist can experience a new sense of immediacy if a wide array of media are mixed together, said John Thein, assistant professor of art at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb.

A showing of Thein's paintings and drawings is on exhibit in the Union Art Gallery.

Thein has made a life of printmaking, illustrating books and, now, working with watercolor and ink. The artist studied in the United States before traveling to Paris to finish his formal art education.

"Education in the United States is more formal," he said. "In Europe, there are very energetic people from all over the world working in the studio with you.

"I worked for 16 years in etching and printmaking and enjoyed it. Then I began working with watercolor and ink and tremendously enjoyed it."

Thein said the mixture of mediums allows him to explore areas denied to him in printmaking.

"By mixing the ink with the watercolor, I can explore the medium, and that increases the immediacy and the freshness. That's something I hadn't experienced in printmaking.

"I can do things on a scale that I couldn't do with printmaking," he said. "I can be more aggressive, because I don't have to go through the number of processes, as you would in printmaking."

Working with color has allowed Thein to "rediscover" the world.

"Color is lush. It comes out and grabs you," he said. "Before, I wasn't seeing the everyday world in color, I saw it in values. Now I can explore color and orient it to my work."

Thein said as an artist, many everyday experiences come to the forefront and are evident in his work.

"Artists are like children," Thein said. "They say things like 'Let me see it,' and then hold out their hands and store the sensations."

Thein's love of art has been with him since he was a child. He remembers watching his father paint from old photographs during World War II.

"I've never had to chose to be an artist," Thein said. "It's a natural thing, because it's always been there. I love it.

"By studying other artists, you can find your own heritage. Your body retains what it needs to retain and discards the rest."

The human figure is most fascinating to Thein.

"I love doing the human figure," he said. "By cutting the face or figure up, you can bring in a new dimension. And I love it in its classical form."

More recently Thein has been exploring a new dimension by incorporating a triptych, a three-sided piece, in his show.

"When it's opened up entirely, it looks different than when it's not. Sometimes the wall is the background," Thein said. "And the three panels can be brought together to form one.

Thein's show is open for viewing during gallery hours until Sept. 13.

K-State to debut new offense in opener against Shockers

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

The waiting is over.

K-State fans finally will get a look at the 1985 Wildcat football team in regular-season action Saturday at 4 p.m. in KSU Stadium against the Wichita State University Shockers.

Wildcat Coach Jim Dickey has touted the K-State defense since spring practice. Now, people will have a chance to see that defense in action.

A new pass-oriented offense has been installed by new K-State offensive coordinator Al Sandahl. Fans at KSU Stadium will get their first look at the new Wildcat aerial show as well.

Dickey, whose job has been rumored to be on the line if the 'Cats don't produce a winning season, said he feels his team has something to prove against Wichita State.

"Our players seem very anxious and very hungry to prove themselves to our alumni, fans and friends," Dickey said.

Shocker Coach Ron Chismar looks forward to the opportunity to meet K-State on the football field for the first time since the 1982 season when the Wildcats beat Wichita State 31-7 at KSU Stadium.

"To open it with Kansas State, a cross-state rival of ours," Chismar said, "is a great opportunity for our kids.

"(We're) very, very pleased to have the opportunity to play those people. They're a very good football team from a first-class conference."

Offensively, K-State is expected to put the ball in the air. Sophomore Randy Williams is expected to get the start at quarterback. Although Williams has remained in the No. 1 spot, he has received competition from John Welch, a junior who played defensive end last year.

"We have been pleasantly surprised to have John Welch, a newcomer that has come on and pushed Randy Williams. We are really pleased with the work habits of both of these young men," Dickey said.

Dickey said he believes a game situation will be able to make a real distinction between the two quarterbacks.

"We've seen them (Williams and Welch) in practice every day and they do well, but how they play when there's a crowd and a situation out here, we're just going to have to put them in that situation and turn them loose," Dickey said.

K-State's offensive line will try to take advantage of a smaller Shocker defensive front. The average member of the K-State offensive line weighs 274 pounds compared to 247 pounds for the average defensive lineman for Wichita State.

Offensively, the Shockers return both junior quarterback Brian McDonald, the team's most valuable player in 1984, and senior running back Eric Denson, Wichita State's all-time leading rusher.

McDonald accounted for 1,302 yards of total offense last season to lead the team. Denson, who was hampered by an injury in 1984, also seemed to have trouble last season making the adjustment from an option-style offense to a pro-style. His 473 yards in '84 were his least ever as a Shocker. He gained 988 yards as a freshman and 1,017 as a sophomore.

Another top Shocker player is place-kicker Sergio Lopez-Chavero. Lopez-Chavero tied an NCAA record last season for most field goals of 50 yards or more in a game with three against Drake University.

Kansas State's greatest strength appears to be its defense, where 10 starters return, including All-America candidate Barton Hundley. While the Wildcats are favored in the game, Hundley still has respect for Wichita State.

"We know Wichita State is going in fired up," Hundley said. "It's going to be a tough game all the way."

Injuries have not been a major problem for K-State in early practices. Only split end Gerald Alphin, fullback Charles Crawford, offensive tackle Guy Huggins will not play. Flanker Jay Wade is questionable. Hundley missed Thursday's practice with a cyst just below the elbow but is expected to be in the lineup Saturday.

Lendl, Connors win at U.S. Open

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and Jimmy Connors rolled into the semifinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships Thursday — Lendl during the heat of the day, Connors during the heat of the night.

And the roads they took, although both ended in identical 6-2, 6-2, 6-4 victories, were as different as night and day.

Lendl, his power game as hot as the 112-degree on-court temperature, demolished seventh-seeded Yannick Noah of France. Connors, in a lackluster performance, was never tested in his easy victory over Switzerland's Heinz Gunthardt.

It is Connors' record 12th straight trip to the semifinals of America's premier tennis event, which he has won five times. He also increased his men's singles record match victory total to 77.

On Saturday, Connors will play Lendl, who advanced to the semis for the fourth consecutive year. The last two times they have met on the hard-courts at the National Tennis Center were for the title in both 1982 and 1983, Connors capturing them both.

Lendl, ranked No. 2 in the world and seeded second here behind defending champion John McEnroe, has reached the final of this Grand Slam tournament the last three years. He has yet to win the title.

McEnroe and third-seeded Mats Wilander will meet in the other semifinal.

Lendl was awesome in taking apart the game of Noah, the 1983 French Open champion and winner of the Italian Open earlier this year. The athletic Frenchman was never in contention, even though he easily won the opening game of each set.

He took Lendl to deuce in the second game of the match as the crowd in Louis Armstrong Stadium at the National Tennis Center settled in for an epic struggle. They never got it, however, as Lendl smothered his opponent as much as the humidity.

The Czech broke Noah in the third game when the Frenchman double-faulted at break point. He broke his service again in the fifth game, this time at 15.

And in the second set, it was Lendl once again breaking away from a 1-1 deadlock, breaking Noah's serve in the third and seventh games en route to a two-set advantage.

At one point, late in the match, Noah flung his racket in exasperation at another backhand cross-court passing shot that dipped drastically to nip the sideline, knowing he couldn't reach it. When he held serve at love in the fifth game of the third set, the Frenchman triumphantly raised his arms into the air, sensing it was a hollow victory, but a victory just the same.

And in the next game, he broke Noah at 30, moving to break point with a backhand volley down the line and wrapping up the service break when Noah's backhand sailed long.

Noah fought off three match points in the next game, the ninth, to hold service. But four points later, Lendl sealed his trip to the semifinals when he rocketed a forehand that landed right in the corner of the sideline and baseline.

Moreno leads KC to win

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Omar Moreno, who was out of baseball three days ago, hit an inside-the-park home run in the first inning and then lined a two-run triple that capped a three-run eighth Thursday night and led the Kansas City Royals over the Milwaukee Brewers 4-1.

The victory pulled Kansas City within one game of idle California in the American League West.

Moreno, signed as a free-agent after being released by the New York Yankees, lashed a line drive down the left-field line leading off the Kansas City first that eluded left fielder Ed Romero and went for an inside-the-park homer.

Charlie Leibrandt, dueling Moose Haas, made the run hold up until the eighth when Paul Molitor walked, was sacrificed to second and scored on a single by Cecil Cooper.

Steve Balboni led off the Royals' eighth with a double and went to third on John Wathan's single. After Balboni scored on Jorge Orta's pinch-single, Moreno hit his two-run triple into center.

Haas, 8-7, gave up eight hits while Leibrandt, 14-7, gave up just six.

The game was a makeup of a contest rained out seven days before in Milwaukee.

Wilson may return soon to KC lineup

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City center fielder Willie Wilson says he hopes to be running this weekend and to return to the Royals in less than the two weeks it is expected he will need to recover from an allergic reaction to penicillin.

"I hope I'll be well enough by this weekend to get out and run a little," Wilson said Wednesday from his hospital room. "I just need to get the swelling down so I can move on it. The way the leg is now I don't know if this weekend is possible.

"The thing is, I know I'll play again this year. I just don't know how soon yet."

Wilson has missed four games since he took a penicillin shot Saturday night to relieve a nagging cold. He had surgery Monday to relieve swelling caused by the shot.

"It's real disappointing," he said. "We're in a stretch drive or pennant drive, and something funky like this happens. It probably hurts me more than anybody else.

"I couldn't understand why it happened. I know I wasn't on anything or doing anything to make it react. The best the doctors can figure out is I was allergic to penicillin."

Wilson was leading the major leagues with 19 triples while batting .285 for Kansas City. The Royals' leadoff hitter led the club with 40 stolen bases.

The shot of penicillin was administered by Texas Rangers' team physician Dr. B.J. Mycoskie during a weekend series in Arlington, Texas. New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin suffered a punctured lung after being given a shot by Mycoskie earlier in the season.

"He asked me if I was allergic to anything," Wilson said. "As far as I knew, I wasn't allergic to anything. He said he was going to give me a shot.

"He stuck it in there. After a few minutes it didn't feel right. The back of my leg started to hurt. My toes started to tingle.

"I don't know whether there was a mistake made. The mistake was maybe me wanting to get a shot. Or me wanting to get better right away. But I don't know whether there was a mistake made on his part or not."

Perez' bat slows Rose in hit bid

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — No matter which way he turns, Pete Rose seems to run into a minor blockade on the road to Ty Cobb's all-time hits record.

Rose, player-manager of the Cincinnati Reds, went to spring training this year planning on playing every day.

But, after being reunited with his old teammate, Tony Perez, Rose found himself in a platoon situation at first base — the switch-hitting Rose starts against right-handers and the right-handed hitting Perez starting against left-handers.

Now five hits away from breaking Cobb's mark of 4,191 hits, Rose is stuck in a bit of a left-handed slump, batting just .220 in his last 12 starts, going 9-for-41.

Hitting right-handed, meanwhile, Rose has 11 hits in his last 15 at-bats, and there is the dilemma.

"I am pretty hot right-handed," Rose says. "Of course, two of those hits were bunts, one a game-winner I might add. But the other one was supposed to be a sacrifice.

"I'm swinging the bat pretty good right-handed, but I can't worry about that," he says. "Tony is hitting .330 (.336 actually)."

Smith says he used drug with Andujar, Hernandez

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Kansas City Royals outfielder Lonnie Smith, the first of six players scheduled to testify against drug defendant Curtis Strong, said Thursday he had used cocaine with former Cardinals teammates Keith Hernandez and Joaquin Andujar.

Smith said he repeatedly made purchases and that one transaction took place three weeks before the 1982 World Series which the Cardinals won, with Andujar the winning pitcher of the final game.

Smith said Strong sometimes delivered the cocaine to his hotel room and would often stay to use the drug with Smith and other players.

"Did you use cocaine with Keith Hernandez?" U.S. Attorney J. Alan Johnson asked Smith.

"Yes," the player said.

The Royals outfielder said he has not used the drug since leavng a St. Louis rehabilitation center in July 1983.

Hernandez, now the first baseman for the New York Mets; Cincinnati Reds outfielder Dave Parker; Enos Cabell of the Los Angeles Dodgers; outfielder Jeff Leonard and retired Pirates utilityman John Milner would also testify that they bought cocaine from Strong, said Assistant U.S. Attorney James J. Ross.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's office said comment would be inappropriate now, but spokesman Chuck Adams said, "We are monitoring the proceedings."

"If you are a baseball fan this testimony may surprise and upset you. But major league baseball is not on trial. Curtis Strong is on trial," Ross told the jury of nine men and three women in the prosecution's opening statement.

"Major league baseball is on trial," said defense attorney Adam O. Renfroe Jr. "The testimony you are going to hear is from people I used to idolize and people your kids may still idolize.

"To many people these baseball players are so-called heroes. But some of these heroes are also heavy drug users ... they are junkies," Renfroe said.

Strong, 38, of Philadelphia, briefly worked as a clubhouse caterer for the Phillies. He is on trial before U.S. District Judge Gustave Diamond on charges that he sold the white-powdered narcotic on 16 occasions between 1980 and 1984 on dates when the Pirates were at home.

mination or to a hearing on the decision not to hire him because he is not protected under the tenure law or the 14th Amendment.

In declining to reemploy him, it didn't harm his employment opportunities elsewhere.

The law states teachers with tenure can be dismissed only upon a showing of sufficient "cause" after they are terminated and given a hearing, Shaw said.

Shaw said the 14th amendment should come into three areas of evaluation for tenured teachers:

— Evaluation procedures should include provision for giving teachers advance notice of what is expected, of any unfavorable action in terms of reduction of salary or status, a notice of intended action and an opportunity to challenge the evaluation.

— Evaluative criteria must be related to legitimate educational goals and objective enough for a court to determine whether or not there is evidence to support the conclusions drawn in the material.

— All teachers meeting the same required evaluative criteria must be classified and treated the same way regarding merit pay increases.

"Tort law," that relating to defamation of character and the right to privacy, also has implications for the types of data used in evaluations, Shaw said.

Shaw said any evaluative system can be over-generalized or misrepresented, which can be defamatory and involve libel or slander.

If any statements made against a person affect his or her business, trade, profession, office or calling, by damaging credibility, the statements are held accountable. If harm is caused, no proof is required.

The criteria for evaluation should be specific, Shaw said. Some of the defamation suits brought by teachers come from using vague and broad terms such as, "incompetent," and "inefficient."

Secondly, the statements should be based on observable data rather than the evaluator's feelings.

Finally, the results should be strictly confidential with publication limited to the people involved.

Shaw said a tort action for invasion of the right to privacy will occur when private facts are publicly disclosed.

"Liability in such an action is conditioned upon the disclosure of private facts, such that the disclosure would be offensive to a person of ordinary sensibilities," Shaw said.

Since teaching is a public act, the disclosure of details regarding the teacher's performance couldn't be made public if there were no false statements, Shaw said. But unauthorized release of evaluations to parents could give reason for a tort action for invasion of the right to privacy even if the information is true.

Shaw said a practical reason for keeping strict confidentiality of evaluations would be to reduce parents demanding their children be taught by a specific teacher who scored high in merit evaluations.

In 1983, U.S. District Judge Jack Tanner in Seattle held the state of Washington liable for damages to 15,500 of its employees after a study commissioned by the state showed a 20 percent salary gap between workers in predominantly female and male jobs that required similar levels of skill, mental demands, accountability and working conditions.

the Riley County Police Dept., said the increase for Manhattan was due largely to increased occurrences of aggravated assaults and burglaries.

In 1984, there were 88 burglaries of businesses and residences, with 141 reported for the first six months of 1985. French said several of these were accounted for by a burglary ring in the city which was responsible for some 30 burglaries in a three- to four-week period.

Aggravated assaults reported to the RCPD for the first half of 1985 totalled 35, compared to seven reported in 1984.

French said more people were reporting crimes due to the public being more aware they have the right to report these things. He also said more "after-school" fights were being reported, which would cause an increase in crime rates.

Although the 18 percent increase is compared to the previous year, French noted 1984 was "a very low year for reported crimes...(and) an increase gets us back to the actual norm."

RCPD reports indicate a 29 percent decrease in crime for January to September of 1984 as compared to the same period in 1983 and a decrease of 17 percent for the entire year of 1984 compared to 1983.

Other crime statistics for Manhattan, comparing the first six months of 1984 and the same months for 1985, include no murders in '85, one in '84; one robbery for '85, four in '84; 64 simple assaults for '85, 63 in '84; 366 thefts in '84, 380 for '85; and 22 auto thefts in '84 compared to 18 for '85.

There were three rapes reported in the first six months of both 1984 and 1985.

State-wide, the increases were led by a 43 percent rise in the number of murders, from 42 during the first half of 1984 to 60 the first six months of this year.

Other crimes reported as increasing were the number of reported rapes, up 9.5 percent from 304 to 333; aggravated assaults increased 7.7 percent, from 2,553 to 2,749; and robberies were up 9.5 percent, from 850 to 895.

The KBI compiles crime figures from reports filed by 260 local law enforcement agencies from around the state.

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Raiders' camp an experience for Willis

By BUTCH LACY
Collegian Reporter

To some people, place kicking is an art. To others, it's just a game. But to former K-State place-kicker Steve Willis, kicking a football is just plain fun.

"I love kicking, I love performing and I love the game. I honestly can't think of anything more fun," Willis said in a recent telephone interview from his parents' home in Shawnee.

Willis, who graduated last year, holds K-State kicking records for the most extra points in a career (89) and for the most consecutive extra points (69). He also holds the record for the most field goals kicked during a single season (13) and career (37).

Despite the college records, Willis was not drafted by any professional football teams. He did, however, get a tryout this summer with the Los Angeles Raiders of the National Football League.

Willis remained in the Raiders' camp for two months before he was cut. Willis did manage to beat out several other aspiring kickers during his stay at the Raiders' training camp. Former All-American and New England Patriots kicker Joaquin Zendejas was one of his victims.

But the final showdown for the kicking spot was between Willis and 10-year veteran Chris Bahr.

"With Bahr coming back off such a bad season, I knew I had an excellent chance to beat him out," Willis said. "The Raiders are a very loyal organization and they are very good to their players. I don't think (Raiders owner) Al Davis was ready to go with a kicker as young as me."

Although he didn't make it with the Raiders, Willis got a valuable taste of the NFL. It is that kind of experience he hopes helps him land a job with some other pro team.

Staff/Jeff A. Taylor

Steve Willis relaxes at his parents' home south of Kansas City, waiting to see what the future will bring for him in professional football.

It was the Raiders, ironically, that hindered Willis' chances of latching on with another team.

"I couldn't understand why the Raiders kept me around for such a long time if they weren't going to use me," Willis said. "It cost me a few opportunities to try out with other teams because I stayed with them for over six weeks.

"When I finally got released I flew to New York to try out for the Giants. But on the day I was supposed to kick, I came down with the flu."

But Willis doesn't hold a grudge against the Raiders. The experiences he encountered while in California were invaluable. One thing Willis learned about the Raiders is that they are not the type of team he had originally thought.

"I always thought the Raiders had a real tough-guy image. But the players and management were very sincere and treated the rookies really nice," he said. "I was a little concerned about being from Kansas City and the rivalry the Raiders have with the Chiefs, but it didn't cause any problems.

"One day in the locker room, defensive tackle Howie Long told me he hated Kansas City," Willis said. "One look at 280-pound Howie and I decided it would be a good idea to hate Kansas City, too."

Willis said he was star-struck for about the first three days of camp.

"I remember one day in the dessert line," he recalled, "Lyle Alzado cut in front of me, but I didn't make any waves."

Willis, whose locker at the Raiders' camp was next to quarterback Jim Plunkett, also had fun while in California.

"On off days we (players) rented cars and caused trouble on Sunset Strip," he said.

Willis, who received his degree in marketing, said he plans to stay in shape because he could be called on at any time by an NFL club if its kicker were injured or needed to be replaced. He's also considered continuing his education.

"Actually, I'm thinking about coming back for a master's degree in business," he said. "Being in school would keep me in an ideal environment for conditioning, kicking and training.

"Right now I have a few tempting job offers in the marketing field, but I just don't know if I can risk losing touch with my kicking game."

Even though Willis' future is uncertain, he knows he has a full life awaiting him.

"I plan on sticking with the game. I'm young and I'm unattached," he said. "Football is not my only outlet and that helps me keep the pressure off. It's just a game and would be a fun way to make a living."

Sooners, Cornhuskers look to dominate

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

Oklahoma and Nebraska. Nebraska and Oklahoma.

Fans of the other six Big Eight football teams are bound to be sick of seeing the Cornhuskers and Sooners in the top two spots in the conference every year.

While optimism abounds as usual in the camps of the other Big Eight teams, the University of Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska again look ready to dominate the 1985 conference race.

Not since 1976, when the University of Colorado won the title, has a team other than Oklahoma or Nebraska received the Big Eight's automatic bid to the Orange Bowl. The automatic bid annually is awarded to the conference's champion or co-champion.

Here is a look at each of the Big Eight teams:

OKLAHOMA

The Sooners are looking as strong as ever, maybe even stronger, this year and have received the preseason No. 1 national ranking from The Associated Press' poll.

The Sooners have 15 starters returning from last year's Big Eight co-championship team. The 1984 team defeated Nebraska to earn the right to represent the Big Eight in the Orange Bowl, where they lost to the University of Washington, 28-17.

As usual, football talent abounds on the Norman campus. Perhaps the most notable player on the Sooner roster is nose guard Tony Casillas, the 1984 Big Eight Defensive Player of the Year. Casillas, a 6-foot-3-inch, 272-pound senior, is a strong candidate for the Outland Trophy, given to the top lineman in college football.

Other key returning starters for Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer include halfback Spencer Tillman, fullback Lydell Carr, defensive end Kevin Murphy and linebacker Brian Bosworth. Bosworth was the Big Eight's Defensive Newcomer of the Year last season.

If the Sooners' inexperienced secondary can develop quickly, Oklahoma stands to have one of the top defenses in the country.

Sophomore quarterback Troy Aikman will need to perform consistently to keep the Oklahoma wishbone offense running. If Aikman does his job, the talented Oklahoma backfield will roll.

NEBRASKA

Cornhusker Coach Tom Osborne will field one of his most inexperienced teams ever, with just two starters each returning on offense and defense. Nonetheless, Nebraska figures to be in the thick of the Big Eight race once again.

Numbers can be deceiving, though. While the number of 1984 returning starters is low, Nebraska, with several redshirt players, still will begin the season with no less than six players who have started at one time or another for the 'Huskers.

Although not listed as a returning starter, Doug DuBose is regarded as the top offensive back for Nebraska. DuBose, a first team all-conference selection in '84, is the returning Big Eight rushing champion. DuBose, a 5-foot-1-inch, 185-pound junior, gained 1,040 yards with a 6.7 yards-per-carry average last season.

Defensive tackle Chris Spachman, linebacker Marc Munford and fullback Tom Rathman are other top returnees for Nebraska.

Nebraska lost the vast majority of personnel from the nation's No. 1 defense last year. But while returning starters are few, the '85 Nebraska defense looks to be strong again with last year's talented backups stepping into starting roles. Like Oklahoma, the Husker defensive backs appear to be a question mark.

Travis Turner, who started six games at quarterback in '84 for Nebraska, should add to an already strong and experienced offensive backfield. The offensive line, on the other hand, appears to be the weakest area. It is depleted by the loss of five senior starters. Tight end Todd Frain is the only returning starter.

OKLAHOMA STATE

Oklahoma State University last year gained official status as a "challenger to the throne" that has been held by perennial Big Eight champions Oklahoma and Nebraska for the last 12 years.

Coach Pat Jones led the Cowboys to a 10-2 record in 1984. The Cowboys' only two losses were at the hands of Nebraska and Oklahoma. A 21-14 win against the University of South Carolina in the Gator Bowl helped the team to a No. 5 ranking by United Press International.

The Cowboys return seven defensive starters from a unit that last year finished fourth in the nation in scoring defense and eighth in total defense. Heading the class of returnees is All-America and All-Big-Eight defensive tackle Leslie O'Neal. O'Neal is regarded, along with Oklahoma's Casillas, as one of the two top defensive players in the league.

O'Neal, a 6-foot-4-inch, 249-pound senior, made 134 tackles last season to easily outdistance the rest of the Big Eight's defensive tackles. Last season, O'Neal also made 16 stops behind the line of scrimmage for 112 yards in lost yardage.

Returning offensive tackles Paul Blair and Chuck Shanklin, guard Derek Burton and center David Tucker head an experienced Cowboy offensive line. The line will try to provide protection for quarterback Ronnie Williams, an untested freshman, and tailback Thurman Thomas, the Most Valuable Player in the Gator Bowl win.

With six starters returning, the Cowboy offense could excel if a receiving corps that lost all three starters from last year can come of age. This year's receivers are short on experience but are bigger, stronger and faster than the players they will try to replace. Williams' development at quarterback will be essential for Oklahoma State to achieve success.

The Cowboys' defense looks very strong — possibly the strongest in the Big Eight. However, Oklahoma State's defense is short on depth, and any injuries could pose a problem.

KANSAS

The University of Kansas got a big boost from last season's 28-11 upset win against Oklahoma. Jayhawk faithfuls are hoping that the momentum gained in that big win, which pushed KU to a fourth-place conference finish, will carry over to the '85 season.

With experience like the Jayhawks have, optimism is high in Lawrence. Coach Mike Gottfried returns 18 starters from a team which, with a few breaks in close games last year, could have received a bowl bid.

Sharing top billing for KU this season are linebacker Willie Pless and quarterback Mike Norseth.

Pless, a two-time All-Big Eight choice, is the No. 1 linebacker in the league. A preseason All-American, Pless has 442 career tackles.

Norseth is the Big Eight's top returning quarterback. The 6-foot-3-inch, 205-pound senior passed for 1,682 yards last season and completed 57 percent of his passes. Norseth, also a threat to run with the football, threw only six interceptions in 1984.

Norseth will have the conference's most experienced and talented receivers to latch onto his passes. Split end Richard Estell and flanker Skip Peete both return. Ditto for starting tailback Lynn Williams.

The Jayhawks also return their defensive front-three in tackles Robert Tucker and Phil Forte and nose tackle Eldridge Avery.

With improvement from a defensive secondary that allowed nearly 200 yards a game in passing last season, KU could have a formidable defense to match its offense.

K-STATE

Wildcat Coach Jim Dickey will place his hopes on a defense that returns nine starters. Offensively, with six starters coming back, Dickey hopes a new, wide-open passing attack can cure the ills that caused K-State to finish last in the Big Eight in total offense a year ago.

Free safety Barton Hundley will lead an experienced Wildcat defense. Hundley, an all-conference pick a year ago, was the fourth leading tackler in the Big Eight, first among defensive backs. He is K-State's best candidate for postseason All-America recognition.

The defensive line is in experienced hands with tackles Renneth Reed, Les Miller and Curtis Hughes, all returning lettermen. Defensive end Grady Newton, honorable mention All-Big-Eight a year ago, is another key returning starter. All four starters return in the secondary as well.

Offense is still a question mark for K-State. Passing will be the focus with quarterback Randy Williams throwing to receivers Dick Warren, Gerald Alphin and James Witherspoon. At tailback, Dickey will choose from John Kendrick, Tony Jordan and returning starter Todd Moody. A battle also looms for the fullback spot with Ray Wilson, the outstanding player from spring practices, currently on top of the depth chart.

For a position breakdown on the Wildcats, see Pages 8 and 9.

MISSOURI

The University of Missouri has something new and something old.

The new is Coach Woody Widenhofer, formerly an assistant with the Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League and head coach of the United States Football League's Oklahoma Outlaws. Widenhofer brings with him a whole new system.

Also new at Mizzou is the artificial turf that will be broken in on Sept. 14 in the Tigers' season opener against Northwestern University.

The old is the battle for the starting quarterback position between Marlon Adler and Warren Seitz. Adler and Seitz, both Kansas natives, have battled for the No. 1 Mizzou quarterback spot for the last three years. Adler attended high school in Winfield, while Seitz is a graduate of Topeka West.

Unlike past years, when former Tiger Coach Warren Powers never quite decided between the two, Widenhofer has promised to pick either Adler or Seitz as his No. 1 signal caller. The other player will move to the defensive backfield.

Missouri lost all three receivers from last season. Of the returning receivers, Adrian McBride is the most experienced. All-Big Eight choice John Clay, a 6-foot-5-inch, 280-pound junior, is an Outland Trophy candidate at offensive tackle.

Missouri will switch from the 4-3 defense they played last year to a 3-4 this year. Five starters return for the Tigers, and experienced players man most positions. The defensive backfield appears to be the weakest link.

COLORADO

The University of Colorado has been the unquestioned doormat of the Big Eight for the past few years, including a last-place finish in '84.

Buffalo Coach Bill McCartney has hasn't had a respectable season in his three years in Boulder. If Colorado doesn't show some improvement this season, McCartney may be in the job market at season's end.

McCartney will rely on 10 returning offensive starters and a newly installed wishbone offense to reverse the fortunes of the Buffaloes.

Colorado returns one all-Big Eight performer, tight end Jon Embree. Embree, who caught a school-record 51 passes last season, started the year at halfback but stepped in at tight end after an injury to former starter Ed Reinhardt.

With Colorado's switch from the passing attack they used last season, Embree's chances to better his school record may be slim.

Defensively, the Buffaloes will need an inexperienced front line to perform well. Two starters ran out of eligibility and their replacements are an inexperienced sophomore and a converted linebacker. Other areas appear to be sound.

Linebacker Barry Remington, considered one of the conference's best, will lead the defense. Despite playing much of the season

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

with a pinched nerve in his neck, Remington, 6-4, 225, still led Colorado in tackles.

IOWA STATE

An inexperienced defensive line may play an important role in the success of the Iowa State football team.

The Cyclones lost both starters from last season's line. It is hoped that two former back-up defensive linemen, Bill Berthusen and Greg Liter, can occupy opposing linemen, so the solid corps of Iowa State linebackers can perform at their best.

Linebackers Dennis Gibson, Jeff Braswell and Tim Iverson all return from last year. Braswell, 6-1, 224, was the Big Eight's third leading tackler with 146 last season.

Offensively, six starters return, including the entire offensive line, one of the biggest in the country. Tackle Kevin Eggleston is the biggest at 6-8, 339.

The other offensive starter is quarterback Alex Espinoza. Espinoza missed the final three games of the '84 season with a broken foot. He passed for 1,500 yards in the first eight games before the injury.

A talented receiver corps still exists, despite the loss of All-America split end Tracy Henderson. Cyclone Coach Jim Criner booted Henderson off the team in the off season for academic and behavioral reasons. Michael Posey will lead a strong and fast stable of receivers and take over Henderson's old spot.

Iowa State's running game was 98th in the nation and will need to improve if the Cyclones are to finish respectably in the Big Eight. Last season's starters are gone and new recruits may have to make a contribution.

At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Jim Dickey will begin his eighth year as K-State's head football coach with 40 returning lettermen and 16 starters — 10 on defense and six on offense.

Below is a look at each of the 22 positions on offense and defense as well as the kicker and punter. First, a look at the offense.

Offense

QUARTERBACK

With the graduation of Stan Weber, the quarterback position has the least amount of experience in the offensive unit going into the 1985 campaign.

Dickey has decided to give sophomore Randy Williams the start in the season opener Saturday against Wichita State University. Williams emerged from spring practices as the No. 1 quarterback and has held his ground despite a strong challenge from Cedar Vale junior John Welch, a converted defensive end.

"I think our players have confidence in him," Dickey said of Williams, a Jacksonville, Fla., native. "He's got a good arm. He's got a lot of poise and doesn't get rattled very easily."

Williams and Welch, both passing quarterbacks, are well suited for K-State's new, pass-oriented offense.

The quarterback spot could be one of the weakest areas on the team, though. Williams, who played in five games last year, is the only quarterback on the roster with any college experience.

RUNNING BACKS

The running backs are the most experienced players on the Wildcats' offense. Three of the top five rushers from 1984 are back, and all three are tailbacks.

Junior Todd Moody, senior John Kendrick and sophomore Tony Jordan give K-State three tailbacks capable of starting. Moody is the top returning rusher. He gained 288 yards last year in five games. Included in his total was a 141-yard effort against the University of Colorado. All three should see plenty of action this fall.

"I really do feel like, talent-wise, John Kendrick, Todd Moody and Tony Jordan are really excellent runners," Dickey said. "I know sometimes we expect them to make something out of nothing. Backs have to do that to be great backs."

The tailback position could have been even stronger, but will begin the season without the services of seniors James Ricketts and Charles Crawford.

Ricketts was declared academically ineligible and will not be able to play, while Crawford suffered a pulled leg muscle early in preseason practices. He will miss the Wichita State game but should be able to return to the lineup soon.

At fullback, sophomore Ray Wilson has had the edge in preseason practices. The McPherson native, who missed five games in 1984 with a separated s

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

PLACE-KICKER

The kicking game was the biggest question mark going into fall drills. Standout Steve Willis, who holds numerous school kicking records, has graduated, leaving the kicking spot unoccupied.

A three-way battle is going on between sophomore Danny Helmer, freshman redshirt Mark Porter and Silver Lake freshman David Kruger. Dickey had not made a decision as to who the starter will be, but preliminary indications are that Helmer has the inside track.

Defense

DEFENSIVE LINE

With 10 starters returning on defense, there should be little reason for much of a change from last year. And that is the case.

About the only change that has occurred since 1984 is adding a position in the secondary, thus eliminating the nose guard spot in the defensive line. Ironically, the only departed starter from last year's defense was senior nose guard Mark Newton.

Dickey said that the key on defense will be how well the defensive line can control the line of scrimmage.

"The defensive line is made up of some big and physical people," Dickey said. "The way they play and the intensity they show will be very important to us.

"I really feel for us to be successful, we have to have some domination."

Junior Les Miller, a 6-foot-7-inch, 266-pound left tackle, spearheads a defensive line that also is thick on experience. Six of the top eight lineman are juniors or seniors.

It really doesn't look like there will be any freshman playing down lineman positions this year, Dickey said.

The one exception could be freshman redshirt Jim Oehm, a 6-foot-2-inch, 235-pounder from Marysville. Oehm is currently the second-team defensive left end behind two-year letterman Jeffery Hurd.

The other defensive end position is filled by junior Grady Newton. Playing second team behind Newton is Kevin Humphrey, a junior transfer from Dodge City Community College.

At tackle opposite Miller is Cimarron junior George Fowler. Senior Renneth Reed, who began fall practice as the first-team tackle, is now on the second team. Expected to relieve Miller are junior Curtis Hughes and freshman Roderick Stansell.

LINEBACKERS

The biggest question mark on defense entering fall drills was at linebacker.

Of the eight linebackers on the team, seven are freshmen or sophomores. But the five sophomores all saw playing time last year and Dickey has heaved a big sigh of relief since fall drills began.

"We have good competition at linebacker," he said. "These guys have really grown up."

Currently running first team are Tim MacDonald and David Wallace. MacDonald led the returning linebackers in tackles last year with 55.

Dwayne Castille and Matt Wallerstedt should provide plenty of help at linebacker, along with Scott White and freshman Alfred Hutchins.

SECONDARY

Even though K-State has added a defensive secondary position this year, the Wildcats have plenty of talent to fill the extra spot.

The fifth secondary spot, the KAT position, will give the defense another person to help with pass coverage. Senior Jack Epps, a starting strong safety last year, and sophomore Kenneth Anderson are the first- and second-team KAT backs, respectively.

Epps is only one of four returning starters from the 1984 secondary. This year's group of defensive backs is even more experienced with five seniors. Dickey calls the group "very intelligent and very smart."

Leading the way is all-Big Eight free safety Barton Hundley. Hundley, who was a walk-on as a freshman from Clay Center, led the team in tackles last year with 133 and has received some press as a possible All-America candidate.

Hundley, picked by his peers as the defensive team captain, has made vast improvement since sitting out the 1983 season with grade problems.

Fighting for the No. 2 spot behind Hundley are senior Pat Hall, a two-year letterman, and freshman redshirt Andy Schrag.

The starting strong safety spot was up for grabs after Epps moved to KAT back. Seniors Don Cliggett and Scott Wentzel will both see plenty of time at strong safety.

The only area of the secondary that may be thin on experience is at cornerback.

Senior David Ast and sophomore Brad Lambert are back as the starting cornerbacks. Both made a strong contribution last year.

Lambert was third on the team in tackles with 79 — 54 of which were unassisted. But Lambert is known best for intercepting passes.

As a freshman walk-on in 1984, Lambert had four interceptions, including three for touchdowns, to tie a Big Eight record. For his efforts, he was picked second-team all-Big Eight by the United Press International and honorable mention by The Associated Press.

However, after Lambert and Ast, the experience at cornerback drops off. The second-team cornerbacks, Tim Jackson and Steve Compton, are both freshmen.

PUNTER

Like the place-kicking spot, the punter will be new at K-State this year. Gone is four-year starter Scott Fulhage. While both punters on this year's squad are juniors, neither has seen any varsity action for the Wildcats.

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Volleyball team to vie for top-20 status

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

K-State Coach Scott Nelson likes what he has seen of this year's volleyball team.

"We have more depth, more experience," the fifth-year coach said Tuesday. "And when you look at those two things, you're going to have a lot of leadership, be in a lot of matches and be improved as a team.

"Just on our experience and depth, I think we'll be the best team I've had at Kansas State."

K-State loses just one starter from last year's team that finished with a 19-14 record and placed fifth out of six competing teams in the Big Eight.

Nelson used as many as three freshmen in the lineup at the same time last season — middle hitters Kelly Carlson and Kristy Jacquart and outside hitter Mary Kinsey. And all spent time in the starting lineup.

"You can compete more in this conference with experience than having good athletes as freshmen," Nelson said.

With the experience Carlson, Jacquart and Kinsey gained last season, each will contend for starting roles again this season.

Senior co-captains Renee Whitney, a setter, and Donna Lee, an outside hitter, both of whom will play important roles for the Wildcats, are expected to contend for postseason individual honors.

Whitney, a first-team all-Big Eight selection last season and All-America candidate this season, has set goals for herself but fits her goals into the team plan.

"Everybody should set personal goals. That's just something for themselves," Whitney said. "But they should look and see how their personal goals can help the team. The better the team does, the better chance you have at individual awards."

After losing just one player from the 1984 season — Lisa Gross, who transferred to Ball State University, Muncie, Ind., — Nelson believes K-State can contend for an upper-division Big Eight finish.

Other returning players include junior middle hitter Helen Bundy and Michelle Majerus, a sophomore outside hitter and backcourt specialist who joined the team last spring.

Nelson said he expects outside hitters Shawnee Call and Val Kastens and setter Mary Mignano, all freshmen, to vie for playing time as the season develops.

"They're all going to play throughout the course of the season. They won't be sitting. They will be getting some playing experience," Nelson said.

Nelson said he expects the University of Nebraska to win the conference. After the Cornhuskers, however, the race could be wide open. Nebraska has been ranked as high as fifth in the nation in preseason polls.

"The teams I see vying for second are Missouri, Iowa State, Oklahoma and K-State," Nelson said. "Those four have legitimate shots."

The University of Kansas is the other Big Eight school to compete in volleyball. Oklahoma State University and the University of Colorado do not field teams.

While Nelson views Nebraska as the class of the Big Eight, he said he feels the conference is strong from top to bottom.

"I wouldn't be surprised if Oklahoma or Iowa State or Kansas State broke into the top-20 sometime this year," Nelson said.

This year's Wildcat schedule is one of the toughest ever and with victories over top teams, K-State could well break into the top-20.

In addition to a home and home Big Eight schedule, K-State has away matches scheduled with such top-20 teams as Northwestern University, Colorado State University and the University of Wyoming.

"I think we'll compete with top-20 teams," Nelson said. "If we play one of our better matches, there's a likelihood of upsets."

Whitney said she enjoys meeting top competition.

"When you play the better teams, it kind of brings out the best," Whitney said. "They're playing at such a high level, they make you have to play better."

"It's a great opportunity to show what you can do," Lee said.

With a home schedule that includes an the Ninth Annual K-State Invitational and home matches against each Big Eight school, Nelson hopes to attract more students to volleyball matches at Ahearn Field House.

"This year, we are going to be highly successful, but we need the (student) support," Nelson said.

For the first time in recent years, no admission will be charged for home matches.

"If you like to see people getting balls smashed off their bodies and stuff, you should come watch us play, because we'll be doing the smashes and our opponents will be doing the face digging," Nelson said.

Nelson cited the gold medal-winning U.S. Olympic men's volleyball team as being a good example of what a crowd can do for a team.

"The best way to beat a top team is to have a home court advantage," Nelson said.

Staff/Jeff Tuttle

Barton Hundley prepares for the 1985 season with great anticipation after being named to the AP and UPI All-Big Eight teams during the 1984 season. Hundley, a free safety for the Wildcats, was also named as K-State outstanding player by the coaches for the 1984 season.

Hundley hopes for improvement in '85

By TODD NIGHSWONGER
Sports Editor

The 1984 season was a banner year in many ways for K-State free safety Barton Hundley.

The starting defensive back was selected last year by the coaching staff as K-State's outstanding player of the season. The Clay Center product had a team-high 133 tackles (97 unassisted), including 22 against Oklahoma State University. He had one pass interception — returning it 25 yards — broke up seven passes, recovered a fumble and even blocked a kick.

After Hundley made 15 tackles, including 14 unassisted, against the University of Oklahoma, Sooners Coach Barry Switzer said, "Hundley is as fine a free safety as there is in the league."

Others agree with Switzer's assessment. Hundley was picked first-team All-Big Eight in '84 by both The Associated Press and United Press International.

Hundley did not have a lot of fun last year as the 'Cats finished with a 3-7-1 record and a fifth-place spot in the Big Eight Conference.

The reason Hundley was less than pleased with the 1984 season is that he and his teammates had hoped for a winning season. But thanks to a non-conference schedule that saw three of the four opponents have their best season in years, the Wildcats got off to a 1-3 start and never really recovered.

And as the hopes of a winning season disappeared, so did the winning attitude.

"It really was frustrating for me last year," Hundley, a fifth-year senior, said in a recent interview. "We want to win so bad around here and it just seems like the attitude that we can win just wasn't there."

Hundley was also disappointed by the performance of the defensive secondary. Despite an experienced unit that included Hundley, strong safety Jack Epps, free safety Pat Hall and cornerbacks Brad Lambert and David Ast, K-State finished fourth in the conference in pass defense. Hundley said he thought K-State should have done better in that category.

This year, K-State has gone to a defense featuring five defensive backs instead of four, a move that Hundley is pleased with.

"A lot of the problem last year was that we were getting tired on the field," he said of the defensive backs. "This year it won't be a problem."

The added position is called a KAT back and will be filled by Epps and sophomore Kenneth Anderson. With the extra secondary player there will be four down lineman instead of five.

In all, 10 starters return on defense. Nose guard Mark Newton is the only starter lost to graduation, but that position has been eliminated.

"I don't know how good our defense was last year, but I just know we're going to be a lot better this year," Hundley said. "We've got a lot more depth and the players are a year older."

Hundley and offensive tackle Tim Stone were voted by the players as team captains for the 1985 season, an honor that Hundley puts in proper perspective.

"The way I see it is that we've got a lot of defensive captains," he said. "My leadership is by playing on the field."

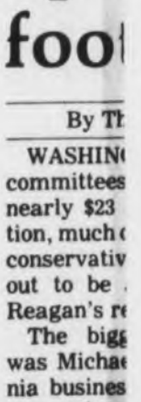
With five starters gone, including quarterback Stan Weber, the offense is considered a question mark going into Saturday's season opener against Wichita State University. But, as Hundley puts it, the offense and defense have to help each other to achieve success.

"The offense and defense work together," he said. "If the defense gives the offense the ball in good field position, then the offense is going to score.

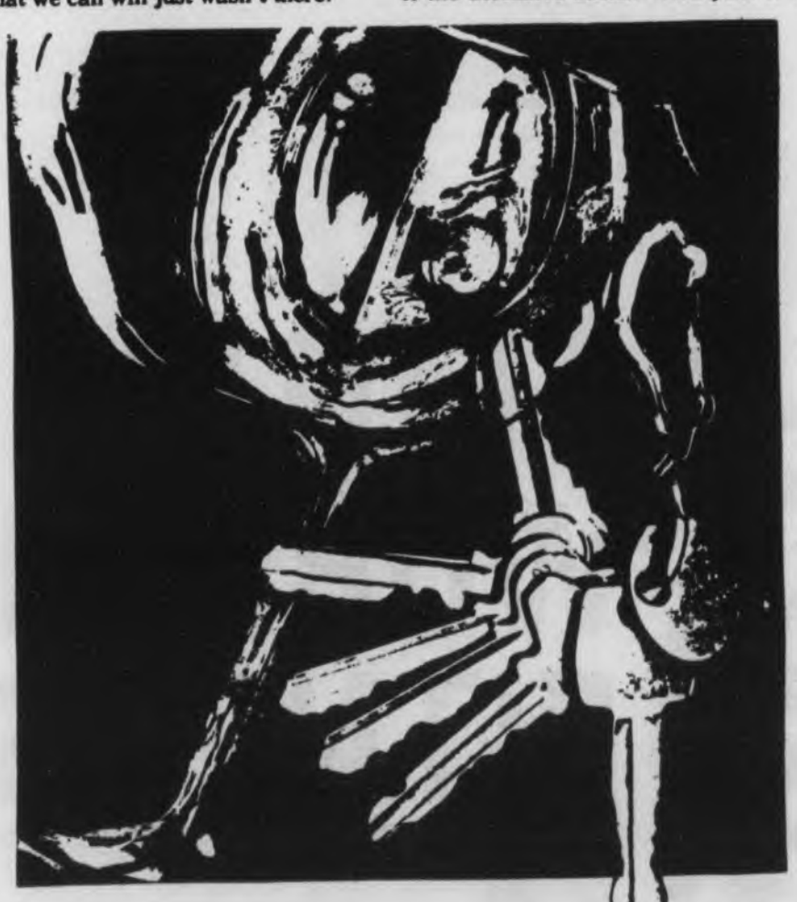
"A lot of negative things have been said about our offense, but I don't think that's the case. I think they've made about a 110 percent improvement since this spring. I'm real encouraged by their progress."

A lot of the team's success may depend on how K-State does against the non-conference opponents. A 4-0 or 3-1 start would give the team confidence going into the Big Eight schedule, Hundley said.

"We're just going to have to go out and give 100 percent and let the wins take care of themselves," he said. "Hopefully, we can get on a roll and stay on it."



After one of the most extensive off-season conditioning programs ever at K-State, the players have added strength and durability to go with their experience. That, Hundley hopes, will produce more wins than losses in 1985.



"The reason the dedication is increasing," he said, "is because people are getting tired of losing around here."

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Junior Troy Faunce, should see action as the K-State punter after replacing graduating senior Scott Fuhlage.

By DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

When K-State's football team began its spring drills earlier this year in preparation for the fall 1985 season, Head Coach Jim Dickey knew that he had two holes to fill on special teams — two big holes.

He lost the third-leading scorer in K-State history, kicker Steve Willis, and the Big Eight's third leading punter in 1984, Scott Fulhage, to graduation. Who would step in and take over for two of the most successful kickers ever to lace up cleats for the Wildcats?

The answer to that question was still in doubt earlier this week as Saturday's opener with Wichita State University approached. But Dickey saw this as a good sign.

The Wildcats weren't having any trouble finding anyone who wanted to step into the roles vacated by Willis and Fulhage. They were, however, having trouble deciding which of several good kickers they should go with.

"They all have good legs, but there's not a proven one here," he said. "We've tried to put a lot of pressure on them — clapping for them when they make it, booing them when the don't. It all comes down to who can be accurate and who can do it in front of a packed house."

Kickers Danny Helmer, Mark Porter and David Kruger and punters Troy Faunce and Matt Jacobs look forward to the possibility that they might be called upon to face that pressure.

Helmer summed up the feelings of the three.

"We're not Willis and Fulhage, and we're not going to try to be. We're just going to try to be as good as we can," he said. "There is not real pressure to do what they did. The only pressure we feel is what we put on ourselves.

"And the competition between us is making us all work harder."

Big Eight title, ranking goal of women harriers

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Staff Writer

One of the goals of most every college team is to be one of the top 10 teams in the nation. And one of the goals of every university and its fans is to be able to boast a top-10 team.

Especially at K-State, a school that has had few teams ranked nationally in the last several years, one would expect to hear about a top-10 team. But few Wildcat fans last year were aware that the women's cross country team finished eighth in the nation.

"The women are one of the better teams in the country and they're hardly given any attention. If it were something like football, people would be going crazy," Head Coach Steve Miller said.

The women return five of the seven runners from last year's team and are expected to contend for the Big Eight title this fall after placing second in 1984.

"We're the team to beat in the Big Eight and one of the top 10 in the nation," Miller said, then added the prediction, "Next year we'll be NCAA champs."

If Miller plans to see the women win the NCAA title, they'll have to do it without Betsy Silzer, last year's No. 1 runner for the 'Cats.

"I decided to redshirt Betsy so she could recover from a foot injury," Miller said. "Over the last two years, she's had a series of nagging injuries. And this year, instead of having her spend the season catching up, we're just going to let her take her time to make sure she's fully recovered."

This year's team, which has no seniors on it, will be led by Jacque Struckhoff, the Wildcats' first cross country All-American. Struckhoff, a junior from Grinnell, placed ninth in the NCAA District 5 qualifying meet. Running No. 2 will be Salina sophomore Alysun Deckert. Junior Anne Stadler of Prairie Village will be the No. 3 runner. Freshman Lisa Wakem, the No. 4 runner from Scarborough, Maine, is the only out-of-state runner on an otherwise all-Kansas team.

"I can't tell you how good we'll be," said Miller, who is beginning his fifth year at K-State. "I am very optimistic. We're going on the fifth year of a program that's seen sensational success."

Miller expects men to challenge for title

By DOUG SCHEIBE
Staff Writer

Although the men's team may not have been as successful as the women harriers, the men had their share of success last year, qualifying for the NCAA Championships.

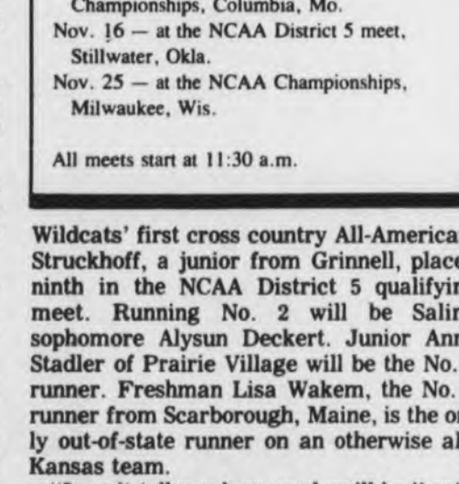
The men's cross country team also plans to compete for the conference title.

"They could possibly be the Big Eight champions," Miller said. "I'll be very disappointed if we don't challenge for the one, two or three spots in the Big Eight."

After a disappointing sixth-place finish in the Big Eight meet, the men finished last year on a positive note by placing fourth out of 30 teams in the District 5 meet.

This year's optimism has been subdued by the preseason injury of Bryan Carroll, who has a severely inflamed right foot due to some type of animal bite. The injury, which occurred last week, was originally thought to be a broken bone.

Miller said a decision on whether to redshirt Carroll, who is seeing a doctor daily, is expected by the end of this week.



"He's pivitol," Miller said of Carroll, who finished sixth at the district meet. "He's our No. 1 guy and we need to have him intact. I'm pretty optimistic of having him come back."

If Carroll is redshirted, Manhattan senior Mike Rogers and juniors Ron Stahl of New Lenox, Ill., and Bryon Lopez of Hutchinson will be expected to lead the men harriers this season.

With seven of the 10 runners either juniors or seniors, Miller will count on depth and experience to carry the team.

"We're very, very, very strong on depth, and we have outstanding front runners who can run with anybody," Miller said.

The cross country teams open the season Sept. 14 at the University of Nebraska Invitational. The only home meet of the season will be Sept. 28 at Warner Park.

Staff/John Sleezer

Manhattan senior Mike Rogers, left, will help lead the men's cross country team this season if Bryan Carroll's injured right foot prevents him from running this year.

Architects to eliminate 2,500 seats

By TIM CARPENTER
Editor

The architectural firm responsible for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum agreed Friday to redesign the arena and eliminate 2,500 seats in an attempt to save the $16.1 million project.

Representatives of Gossen Livingston Associates, Wichita architects for the facility, coliseum donors — including Fred Bramlage, Junction City, who has donated a reported $1.7 million to the project — and University officials discussed the issue during a two-hour closed meeting before agreeing to reduce the size of the coliseum, Charles Hein, director of communications, said Friday.

The architects must redesign the 16,000-seat, single-purpose facility because all construction bids opened Aug. 20 in Topeka were at least $3.4 million over the anticipated construction cost of $14.5 million.

The lowest construction bid, $17.952 million, was turned in by the Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita. The highest bid of $22.7 million came from E.W. Johnson Inc., also of Wichita.

Hein cautioned that the coliseum's size reduction from 16,000 seats to 13,500, "will in no way compromise the quality or safety of the building."

Any revisions of the coliseum program must be approved by the Board of Regents, Hein said. President Duane Acker is scheduled to make a detailed report of redesign options at the Sept. 19-20 regents' meeting.

The decision came one day after Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, instructed the board during a special session that the "only choice is to cut the size" and "completely redesign the facility" if the project is to proceed. At least 3,000 seats should be eliminated, Corman said.

Gossen Livingston is required to redesign the coliseum for free, because the firm signed a contract in August 1984, obligating them to go back to the drawing board if construction bids came in over budget.

Manhattan has the smallest population of any city hosting a Big Eight school. If the University would have built a 16,000-seat coliseum it would have been the largest facility of its kind in the conference. Ahearn Field House, where the K-State basketball teams now perform, seats 11,500.

The reduction in coliseum seating will make it the fourth largest basketball facility in the Big Eight. The University of Kansas has the largest arena, which contains 15,200 seats. The University of Nebraska Cornhuskers play basketball in a building that seats 14,438 and the Iowa State University teams play in an arena that accommodates 14,020 fans.

University officials had hoped to finish construction by August 1987. The ground breaking ceremony for the coliseum was originally scheduled for last Saturday, but redesign and rebidding may delay the project's ground breaking until early 1986. Hein refused to estimate when the project will be completed.

The coliseum will be located at the northwest corner of campus at the south end of KSU Stadium. The coliseum will be paid for with $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, $7.1 million in private gifts guaranteed by the KSU Foundation and the remaining $7 million is covered by student fees.

South African executives may meet with guerrillas

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Sunday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths rampaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral Saturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, a Afrikaans Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

Defense spending issue tops Congress' agenda

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The fight over next year's Pentagon budget — which seemed settled weeks ago — is back at the top of the congressional agenda through the efforts of a group of angry House Democrats.

"Gutted," "Gutted," "Gutted" screamed a letter the angry Democrats sent to their colleagues last week. The group argued in the letter that the pending compromise drafted by a House-Senate conference wiped out their efforts at reform for a "sound, basic, streamlined defense."

The disaffected House members, who are mostly liberal, want a new conference committee to start over again on the $302.5 billion military spending bill.

During a series of closed-door meetings last week, the House Democratic leadership agreed to permit a floor vote on the liberals' efforts to cut the defense budget by $10 billion.

All 253 House Democrats have been invited to a closed-door party caucus Wednesday morning to discuss the rising anger of some of their colleagues about the proposed Pentagon budget.

That could be followed as early as Thursday by a vote by the full House to order renewed Senate-House conference committee talks on the Pen-

17-year-old to be tried as adult in rape case

By The Collegian Staff

A Riley County District Court judge ruled Friday that 17-year-old Michael Bell of Manhattan will be tried as an adult on charges of rape, attempted first-degree murder, aggravated sodomy and aggravated burglary of a 26-year-old Manhattan woman.

The ruling, from District Court Judge Harlan Graham, came after testimony from the victim, police and experts in juvenile psychology.

If Graham had ruled Bell be tried as a juvenile, treatment at a youth rehabilitation institution would have been possible.

Assistant County Attorney William Kennedy, in favor of trying Bell as an adult, noted the extent of injuries the victim suffered during the reported nearly five-hour attack, including a fractured skull and four-inch deep stab wound.

Arguing against the adult status, Bell's court-appointed attorney, Bill Frost, said the system could lock his client up for as long as possible, but after his release "we'll have an individual who is every bit as dangerous as he is today.

Bell is being held in Riley County jail on $100,000 bond.

Special interest groups foot '84 campaign bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Political action committees and individuals spent nearly $23 million on the 1984 election, much of which was disbursed by conservative groups for what turned out to be a sure thing — Ronald Reagan's re-election.

The biggest individual spender was Michael Goland, a rich California businessman who staged a one-man advertising campaign to help unseat former Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill. Goland spent $419,573, according to a report on independent expenditures released Sunday by the Federal Election Commission.

The National Conservative Political Action Committee, which won a Supreme Court victory over the FEC last March ensuring its right to spend unlimited amounts independently, shelled out $9.8 million for President Reagan.

NCPAC also spent $289,995 against Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale and $116,000 against 14 other Democrats and Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, a liberal Republican.

All told, conservative PACs spent $15.8 million promoting Reagan's re-election, while liberals spent only $803,923 on their own trying to elect Mondale. There was $343,835 worth of negative expenditures against Reagan and $445,240 against Mondale.

A campaign expenditure is considered independent if the activity it finances is not organized by or coordinated with a candidate's campaign.

James C. Moore, a real estate investor from Dripping Springs, Texas, was the second biggest individual spender by virtue of the $79,934 he spent in a losing cause: the U.S. Senate race of former Democratic State Sen. Lloyd Doggett against Phil Gramm, the Democrat-turned-Republican winner.

Another Texan, Houston businessman Cecil Haden ranked third in individual expenditures by spending $40,386 to promote Reagan's re-election.

It was widely reported last year, based on reporters' scrutiny of FEC

Bush to speak at 70th Landon Lecture

Vice President George Bush is scheduled to deliver the 70th Landon Lecture at 11 a.m. today in Ahearn Field House.

Seating in Ahearn will be general admission with the exception of a reserved area for Landon Lecture patrons and top state officials. The east doors to Ahearn are scheduled to open for the public at 9:30 a.m. No briefcases, backpacks or food will be allowed into the building.

A big screen projection will be placed in Forum Hall to accommodate any audience overflow. The speech will also be telecast live by WIBW-TV of Topeka.

Bush, 61, assumed the second-in-command position following the 1980 presidential election, and is the second vice president to appear in the lecture series for public issues. Walter Mondale, in 1979, was the first vice president to appear in the series.

Bush's career in politics began in 1964 in Texas with an unsuccessful bid for the U.S. Senate. In 1966 and 1968, he was elected to represent Texas' 7th Congressional District in the House of Representatives.

In 1970, Bush again attempted to win a seat in the U.S. Senate. Bush lost the election by a margin of 150,000 votes.

Vice President George Bush will deliver the 70th Landon Lecture Monday in Ahearn Field House. The address begins at 11 a.m.

The month following his election loss, Bush was named permanent representative of the United States to the United Nations. Bush served in that position until early 1973 when President Richard Nixon appointed him chairman of the Republican National Committee.

In October 1974, Bush assumed his duties as chief of the United States Liaison Office in China. More than a year later, Bush returned to the United States to head the CIA. Bush resigned from that position when Jimmy Carter won the 1976 presidential election.

In May of 1979 Bush announced his candidacy for president. During the Republican primary race, Bush referred to opponent Ronald Reagan's tax proposals as "voodoo economics."

One year after announcing his candidacy, Bush ended his bid to enter the White House because of reports that Reagan had enough convention delegates needed for the Republican nomination.

Pope calls abortion 'repulsive'

ESCHEN, Liechtenstein — Pope John Paul II vowed Sunday that the Roman Catholic Church will never relax its strict teachings on sex, divorce and abortion and he condemned those who "kill the child in the mother's womb."

The denunciation of abortion was one of the pope's most vehement attacks to date, and he repeated it in three speeches during his one-day visit to this mountain principality.

"Abortion and taking the child's life are repulsive crimes," the pontiff said late in the afternoon in an address to government officials.

The pope spoke in the medieval castle of 79-year-old Prince Franz Josef II, overlooking the nearby capital of Vaduz.

This tiny, predominantly Roman Catholic country, squeezed between Austria and Switzerland, has kept its ban on abortion, unlike many other European nations.

The pope raised the issue of abortion and other moral questions earlier in the day at an outdoor Mass before 30,000 people, about 4,400 more than the population of 61-square-mile Liechtenstein. Many in the crowd were pilgrims from Switzerland, Austria and nearby West Germany.

"The Catholic Church will not stop repeating all these fundamentals, unabbreviated and without restriction," John Paul said during his morning homily at the mass.

He repeated the church's condemnation of living together outside marriage, "unfaithfulness in marriage, the increasing divorce rate, the misuse of marriage and abortion."

Right after Mass, during the weekly Sunday blessing, the pope returned to the issue of abortion.

He called for valuing the anti-abortion movement above environmental concerns, saying: "Save the unborn human being from the threat of the born man, who usurps the right to destroy and kill the child in the mother's womb."

John Paul's visit, his 38th foreign trip, came on the Feast of the Birth of the Virgin Mary.

Mountain climbers set up camp

KATMANDU, Nepal — Indian climbers on Mount Everest have set up their first high altitude camp at the top of the Khumbu icefall at 20,000 feet, the base camp reported to Katmandu on Sunday.

Six members of the 34-man Indian army expedition and four Sherpa guides were staying in the camp, the report added.

The progress report followed heavy snowfalls Thursday, when temperatures reportedly dropped to 6 degrees below zero at night.

The climbers now were opening a route to camp two, at 21,300 feet, on their way up the 29,028-foot mountain, the world's tallest.

Distraught man sets himself on fire

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A man distraught over a family quarrel died after soaking a bedroom of his house with gasoline and then setting himself on fire, authorities said Sunday.

Two police officers trying to coax Alan G. Stubbs, 44, of Kansas City, into surrendering attempted to extinguish the fire but the flames spread rapidly and forced them from the home, authorities said. Stubbs died in the blaze.

Police officers Wilson Brown and Matthew Jordan responded to a report of a family disturbance about 4 p.m. Saturday at a one-story home in the Ruskin Heights area of south Kansas City.

Stubbs had emptied a can of gasoline on his bed and the rest of the room by the time the officers arrived, police said.

Brown said Stubbs was stretched out on the bed and smoked a cigarette as the two officers talked to him for several minutes.

The two officers tried to smother the fire with a rug and blanket, but flames quickly engulfed the room and smoke filled the house, police said.

The officers called for firefighters at 4:16 p.m. and the blaze was extinguished within 10 minutes, said Capt. Roy Clark of the Kansas City Fire Department.

Stubbs' wife and teen-age son had left the house just before the fire was set but were not injured, police said.

The fire caused about $15,000 damage to the wood-frame home and its contents, Clark said.

Runaway tire strikes, kills woman

NORTH EAST, Md. — A runaway tire from a truck or bus on Sunday struck and fatally injured a 28-year-old woman who was standing outside her car on the shoulder of Interstate 95, state police said.

Robin Bennett, of Revere, Mass., died at Union Hospital in Elkton about one hour after she was hit by the tire and rim, officials said.

Bennett, who was traveling north with a companion, had gotten out of the car because she was feeling ill, and was starting to get back in when the accident occurred, police said.

The driver of the truck or bus apparently did not immediately notice the loss of the tire and continued traveling north, said police, who were searching for the vehicle.

Hundreds to congratulate scientists

WOODS HOLE, Mass. — An admiral and hundreds of oceanography workers are expected on the docks of this tiny seaport today to greet the 25 scientists who found the remains of the mighty ocean liner Titanic.

"I would certainly like to be there when their ship pulls in, and I can imagine so would everybody else," said Nancy Green, a spokeswoman for the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution whose researchers led the expedition that found the 73-year-old shipwreck.

More than 1,500 passengers went down with the Titanic, believed to be unsinkable until an iceberg slashed a 300-foot hole in its steel-armored hull on its maiden voyage. Other passengers were rescued from the liner's lifeboats, which could fit only 700.

The ship was found Sept. 1 about 560 miles off Newfoundland in water about 2½ miles deep.

The discovery, made while researchers were testing a remote-control submersible or unmanned submarine being developed for the U.S. Navy, was "the biggest thing ever to hit this office," said Gordon Glass, executive assistant at the institute, the largest private center of its kind in the nation.

SOMERSET, Ky. — Tiny Tim, the shaggy-haired, falsetto-voiced performer whose rise to stardom in the 1960s bottomed out in the '70s, regards his current circus tour as show-biz history.

"There has never been a name singer who performed with the circus this long," he said as the Great American Circus was winding up a weeklong tour of Kentucky.

"Elvis sang with the circus, but not after he made it big."

For his circus act, the performer sports sneakers and a mock tuxedo of blue satin for a 10-minute medley of songs ranging from pop to jazz to gospel.

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Singer-actress Diana Ross has her eye on a Bluegrass horse farm, the property owner said.

The 41-year-old entertainer visited 146-acre Lann-Mark Farm on Paris Pike a few weeks ago and had it appraised at $4.5 million, owner Russell Michael said.

"She stayed half a day, had it appraised and left," he said.

Michael said he had not talked to Ross since the visit.

A woman who answered the phone at Ross' RTC Management of New York said any information about the farm would have to come from the entertainer, who was in Europe.

LAKE OZARK, Mo. — Willard Scott says if a television pilot he filmed over the weekend in the Ozarks becomes a hit, his days on the "Today" show may be over.

"Great Scott" a one-hour pilot taped Saturday before an audience of about 100 people at a lodge, will spotlight good deeds done by Americans, said the affable weatherman on NBC's "Today" show.

The network agreed to take a look at the pilot, Scott said, and if NBC does not pick it up, a producer at Columbia Pictures hopes to sell it to other television executives, he said.

PLO leader wants help with land, peace plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat offered to exchange "peace for land" with Israel on Sunday and expressed hope his plan would get the Reagan administration's support.

Arafat, speaking via satellite hookup to the annual convention of the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee here, summed up what appeared to be a new joint PLO-Jordanian initiative for peace with Israel, based on what he called "peace for land."

"We hope this initiative will be accepted by all of international public opinion, by the United Nations, and especially by all the democratic and advanced forces inside Israel to accept our initiative — peace for land."

"I hope that the American administration will work with us in this," he said.

In Jerusalem, an Israeli government official said Israel could not issue a formal response until the full text of the PLO leader's remarks was examined, but that "Arafat says what is convenient for him to say. There is nothing new in it."

"The principle of land for peace is brought up from time to time, it looks moderate to the Americans, but it's just another example of his (Arafat's) doubletalk," said the official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified.

With U.S. diplomatic efforts in the region stalled, some State Department officials have recommended discussions between U.S. Middle East troubleshooter Richard W. Murphy and an aide to Arafat.

A LOT OF CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY STARTED OUT AS SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

How can you get the experience you need to succeed in business?

These top executives started out as Army officers. Right out of college, they were given the kind of responsibility most people in civilian life work years for.

If you begin your future as an Army officer, you could further your career plans.

How do you become an Army officer? A great way to get the training you need is in Army ROTC.

ROTC is a college program that will teach you leadership and management skills, and train you to handle real challenges.

If you want to prepare for a promising future in business, begin your future as an Army officer, with Army ROTC. You too might wind up a captain of industry!

Lafene clinic helps snuff out seasonal sneezes

By BECKY WILEY
Features Editor

There are a lot of noses running on campus this time of year.

The cause probably isn't hay and the runny noses aren't usually accompanied by fevers, but forget the misnomer. Hay fever season is in full bloom and the owners of those noses are suffering.

According to the American Lung Association, hay fever should be called allergic rhinitis because it's a sensitivity to an ordinarily harmless substance, such as pollen or dust, which results in swollen nose tissues. Hay fever affects about one in 20 Americans, and about 30 percent of those people develop asthma

"Each individual will be affected differently (by hay fever)," said Cindy Culver Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center. "Some will have runny noses, headaches or runny eyes." Other major features of hay fever include itching of the nose, throat and mouth and breathing difficulties at night due to clogged nasal passages.

Some common causes are trees, grasses and weeds, particularly ragweed, which have windborne pollen. Burke said the hay fever season is in full force now because the plants are pollinating.

"Some people are allergic to mold spores, and the large amounts of rain we had this summer have caused a lot of mold to grow," she added.

Various over-the-counter drugs will treat hay fever and other allergy symptoms, but to get to the root of the problem one needs to build up their immunity to the allergy, Burke said.

Lafene's allergy clinic will test patients for allergic reactions to about 56 different items. There is a charge for the test, but because symptoms may indicate the need to test for only a certain number of allergen sources, cost may vary.

Burke said two types of allergy testing are done at Lafene. The first test is done by making an skin indentation with a blunt-tipped instrument and then putting a serum on the marks to see if redness occurs. The serum contains a small amount of the allergen which is being tested, such as tree pollen.

"The doctor will rate the sensitivity of the skin to each allergen and then make a diagnosis based on the reaction as to whether shots would be beneficial (to treat the allergy)," Burke said.

The other test is a blood serum test. Nurses take small blood samples which are then sent to a lab to test allergic reactions, she said.

If serum shots are prescribed, they are administered anywhere from once a week to once a month to control the allergy.

"The first serum is in minute amounts," Burke said, "but we gradually increase the amount to build up that person's immunity to the thing he is allergic to."

Jan Carl, registered student health nurse, said about 250 students per week come in for shots during the late summer hay fever season. The students must pay for the serum, but the shots are administered for free, Carl said.

"After the nurse gives them their shot, the student is required to set in the hall for 20 minutes in case an allergic reaction takes place," Burke said.

Burke said it isn't really known why people get allergies, but said they could be inherited or are thought to be caused by stress, an unhealthy body or environmental factors such as humidity.

"In order to keep the immunity up, some people may need to take shots all through the year," Burke said.

If you recently discovered you have hay fever or other allergies, don't despair. Burke said sometimes treating the symptoms with doctor-prescribed medicine may be all that's needed to stop a runny nose.

Sikhs assassinate man during violent protest against Rajiv Gandhi

By The Associated Press

AMRITSAR, India — Sikh terrorists assassinated a Hindu campaigning in a Punjab village Sunday, and in Amritsar more than 25,000 slogan-shouting Sikh militants thronged to the Golden Temple to demand state elections be boycotted.

Estimates of the crowd inside the temple complex, the Sikhs' holiest shrine, ranged up to 50,000. No violence was reported.

Many demonstrators attending the six-hour rally shouted, "Death to Rajiv Gandhi!," India's prime minister. Thousands screamed separists slogans for an independent Sikh nation to be called Khalistan.

State police said two Sikhs killed Subash Billa, a village leader of Gandhi's Congress Party, as he left his house to help campaign in Jullundhar district. The shooting occurred in Adampur.

He was carrying pamphlets saying, "For a bright future, vote Congress." Police said Billa, not up for office himself, was getting into an auto rickshaw decorated with Congress banners when gunmen fired at him from a motor scooter.

The assassination, the first during campaigning for the Sept. 25 election, occurred despite the presence of more than 100,000 troops and police deployed in Punjab for election security.

Opposition parties and moderate Sikhs had urged Gandhi to delay calling Punjab elections, warning of possible violence.

The central government has governed Punjab directly since last year, after dismissing the state government for failing to halt Sikh violence.Campaigning officially started Friday, but most parties formally launch their campaigns Monday.

African Student Union plans apartheid protest

By The Collegian Staff

The 70th Landon Lecture will not pass without protest.

While Vice President George Bush delivers his lecture, a demonstration sponsored by the African Student Union will be staged in the area between Seaton Hall and the Union today beginning at approximately 9:30 a.m.

Davidson Munodawafa, junior in health and secretary of ASU, said the demonstration would be geared toward the distribution of information.

"It will be almost like an educational demonstration," he said. "We will try to explain to people exactly what apartheid is."

Speakers from several anti-apartheid groups, including a group from the University of Kansas, will discuss various aspects of the South African situation. Munodawafa said the speeches will be the main attraction of the day. They will begin at noon in the area between Seaton and the Union.

Pamphlets distributed by demonstrators throughout the day will supplement the speeches. The pamphlets contain information about apartheid and other African issues. Munodawafa said one pamphlet concerns Nelson Mandela, a South African political prisoner for the past 23 years.

ASU is also planning a mock funeral when people are leaving the Bush lecture.

The funeral is to "bring to the attention of the people the continuation of death in South Africa," Munodawafa said.

Black armbands will also be handed out by demonstrators to those who wish to protest during the lecture without disrupting the lecture.

Munodawafa said the armbands are "a symbol of death...they express our sadness and mourning at what is going on in South Africa."

records as well as a statement by Goland's attorney, that the California developer had spent more than $1 million on negative commercials, mailings and billboards against Percy, then chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Goland, a staunch supporter of Israel and pro-Israeli politicians, accused Percy of being "a chameleon."

But Sharon Snyder, an FEC spokeswoman, said the $419,573 "was all the man reported." Goland could not be reached for comment Friday at his construction company in Chatsworth, Calif.

The FEC said that $17.4 million of the $22.8 million in independent expenditures in 1983-84 went to the presidential race. Four years earlier, when NCPAC began flexing its direct mail fund-raising muscle to oppose the Carter-Mondale ticket, some $13.7 million of $16.1 million in independent expenditures was spent on the White House race.

Independent expenditures in congressional races actually fell, from $5.75 million spent in the 1982 elections to $5.3 million in 1984. But that was still more than double the $2.3 million spend independently in the 1980 House and Senate race.

In past elections, the bulk of independent expenditures in congressional races was spent on negative campaigns. But in 1983-84, almost two-thirds of the money was spent to promote favored sons and daughters, from Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to Gramm in Texas to such successful Republican challengers for House seats as Robert Dornan in California, Jim Kolbe in Arizona and Helen Delich Bentley in Maryland.

Helms had $583,310 spent independently for him and $812,590 against him. The North Carolina Campaign Fund, a group hoping to see then-Gov. Jim Hunt overcome Helms, accounted for $765,936 of the negative expenditures.

The National Rifle Association Political Victory Fund, the American Medical Association PAC and the Realtors PAC — all longtime major direct contributors to congressional campaigns — each rang up hundreds of thousands in independent expenditures, free of the $5,000-per-election limit on direct PAC gifts.

tagon budget, which could result in the Defense Department starting the new fiscal year on Oct. 1 without a formal budget.

"There's a broad feeling of House members that we've been snookered," explained Rep. Charles S. Schumer, D-N.Y., one of the most vocal opponents of the $302.5 billion Pentagon budget now on the House floor.

The dispute began earlier this summer when the Republican-controlled Senate voted for a bill authorizing the Pentagon to spend $302.5 billion in fiscal 1986. The Democratic-run House voted for a $292 billion spending plan.

A conference committee was called to resolve differences because both chambers must pass identical bills.

Wellness Week beneficial

Wellness. Although the subject has been gaining interest, few people know what it is, exactly.

As "Wellness Week '85" unfolds today, so does the opportunity to become aware of ourselves, and how we can learn what it takes to be healthy.

The concept of wellness involves the whole body; how the physical, emotional and mental conditions interact with each other and the environment.

It is important that each of these three components is given equal attention, so whatever the performance — a test, a sport, a crisis — the body can be at its peak.

"Wellness Week '85" is the product of an enormous effort coordinated by Cindy Culver Burke, health educator at Lafene Health Center.

Burke has scheduled speakers whose topics are as interesting as they are diverse. One may learn how to chose the proper running shoes and how to avoid running injuries. One may also gain an understanding of the role of stress in overall health and the importance of risk-taking in our lives.

Wednesday, the fourth annual Health Fair in the Union Ballroom features health screening for vision, blood pressure and hearing; and educational materials on alcohol and other drugs, mental health and related issues — and more!

This schedule of outstanding programs is an example of the what benefits can come from attending this university.

For this week we are individuals, with human characterists, being given the opportunity to learn about ourselves instead of some event or property that we see as less important, because it doesn't influence how we feel about ourselves.

Ultimately, we can make the commitment to better ourselves physically, mentally and emotionally, and use this knowledge to have a positive effect on those around us.

Teachers learn sex equity

Elimination of sexual inequality begins in the classroom.

According to statistics quoted by Patti Lather, professor of women's studies at Mankato State University, Mankato, Minn., only 10 states require sex equity programs in schools of education. Of the top 24 textbooks used in colleges of education, 23 contain less than 1 percent sex equity material.

In other words, students in education are not learning how to teach in an unbiased manner.

Sex equity is an attempt at unbiased teaching from both a male and female perspective. To be effective, sex equity must begin in kindergarten and continue through college.

K-State's College of Education is moving in the right direction after receiving a $145,000 grant this summer by the Women's Education Equity Act. The college is using the money to develop a monograph for sex fairness within their regular classroom curriculum. All students within the college will learn unbiased teaching methods whether or not they take women's studies courses.

In the past, women's studies courses provided the basis for understanding of female perspectives. Many students may not have been exposed to teaching from a female perspective if they did not take such a course. Now, they will receive this female perspective in all their coursework.

Faculty within the college are also stepping out as national leaders in sex equity implementation. The monographs produced by the professors can be sent to universities across the nation where similar subjects are taught. For example, a math professor who develops a sex equity program could send monographs about the program to other math professors.

This semester, the professors are integrating sex equity into their classes. In December, the program will be evaluated and sent to the U.S. Department of Education.

The College of Education already has a multicultural task force which deals with ethnic, gender and exceptional child equity. The faculty is receptive to the idea of sex equity and the program should prove to be innovative and beneficial to the future of education.

Sex equity need not be limited to the College of Education. If implemented throughout the University, the roles of women would be better understood and equality throughout society would become more feasible.

Kansans benefit from Alf Landon's work

MIKE RILEY
Collegian Columnist

Today K-State is playing host to Vice President Bush. There are perhaps many reasons why Bush is here (i.e., helping to sell future Reagan plans, laying groundwork for his 1988 campaign). But, without a doubt, the primary reason he is here is in tribute to Kansas' elder statesman, Alfred M. Landon.

Most students recognize Landon only by the lecture series which bears his name. What many don't realize is that the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues is only the frosting on the cake for what Landon has done for Kansas.

Alf Landon was born Sept. 9, 1887, in Middlesex, Pa. The Landon family moved to Independence, Kan., after Alf's graduation from the Marietta (Ohio) Academy in 1904. His father was lured by the promising oil fields springing up in Kansas.

Alf enrolled that fall at the University of Kansas to begin pursuing a legal career. At KU, Landon cut a profile as a student leader, becoming president of his fraternity where he stood for order and economy for the chapter.

Upon receiving his law degree, Landon surprised those who knew him well by entering the banking field as a bookkeeper for the Independence State Bank of Commerce. He later moved down the street to work for the First National Bank. After three years he quit to become a full-time oilman.

Using money he had saved, and by maximizing some of his part-time oil ventures, the Landon name became synonymous with Kansas oil. Although oil was his family livelihood (his father was still involved in the business), Landon became interested in politics and began to make a name for himself, working up through county precincts and volunteering to help candidates he felt would serve in the best interests of Kansans.

In 1932 his hard work paid off as he was elected governor and served two terms, from 1933 to 1937.

Landon decided to return one-fourth of his $5,000 yearly salary to the state treasury. The state judiciary followed suit by accepting a cut, and wages of state employees were reduced 5 percent to 25 percent.

In the four years as governor, Landon instituted many policies that are still as effective and crucial to the state as they were the day he signed the bills.

One of these was the revolutionary budget-balancing, pay-as-you-go law. The law made it illegal for any state agency to purchase or contract for something they planned to pay for later. Many state offices were placing Kansas in debt until the law eliminated deficit spending. One only wishes the federal government would adopt such a policy.

Landon was also responsible for forming the Kansas Highway Patrol. He realized the outbreak of bank robberies had to be curbed and that small town enforcement agencies weren't equipped to handle the growing problem. The number of Kansas bank robberies dropped from 61 in 1933 to eight in 1935.

In 1936, Landon was the Republican Party nominee for president of the United States. The campaign adopted the Kansas sunflower as its symbol, but the wisdom of this strategy was questioned when the Democrats rebutted, "sunflowers don't bloom in November." As the history books show, Landon lost a landslide election to Franklin D. Roosevelt, who served as president until he died in 1945.

When his final term as governor was finished, the last thing Landon had on his mind was retiring from politics. His opinion on issues ranging from post-war Europe to the Vietnam conflict were sought after and respected.

The governor had one more contribution he wanted to give Kansans and that was a prestigious lecture series able to bring the current policy makers and opinion shapers of the world to Kansas.

In the early '60s, Landon approached the head of his alma mater to set up the lecture series, but the administration failed to act on it quickly enough. Landon then brought his endowment to K-State where President James McCain set things up to the governor's liking.

On Dec. 13, 1966, he began the series with a lecture addressing the "New Challenges in International Relations."

The series has drawn three U.S. presidents, foreign heads of state, Republicans and Democrats, conservatives and liberals.

Kansans should celebrate the 98th birthday today of one of its leaders. Thank you, governor, and yes, have a happy birthday.

Steve Brown neglects campaign promises

CATHERINE SAYLER
Collegian Columnist

"Excuse me," complained a disgruntled applicant. "Where do I get my club card? No, I don't mean my Aggieville club card; I mean my student government club card."

That reaction to Student Body President Steve Brown's choice of four students for the University presidential selection committee was shared by several of the 48 applicants.

The qualifications of the chosen four have not come under question. The controversy that has surfaced, though, is whether Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, with his unorthodox "Joe student" campaign, should have established such rigid criteria for the applicants to meet.

Those who voted for Brown and who remember Brown's campaign promises were both surprised and disappointed to learn that his selection decision was based on involvement in a wide variety of activities both on and off campus, experience working with the administration, knowledge of the University system of government, knowledge of the University educational system, and time spent at the University.

Supporters of Brown remember what prompted him to run for the office. As stated in the Feb. 1 Collegian, "One of the main reasons I'm running is because I've been here for a year and a half — and I've talked to people who have been here for a lot longer — and nobody really knows what student government does."

Brown's constituents also remember the advertisement in the Feb. 12 Collegian: "Give the job to a man who won't say 'OK' to tradition but instead ask 'Why?' Consider this: Did any of the other candidates sound different than the same political nonsense?"

To many of the applicants, it seems that Brown has now said "OK" to tradition and has established criteria that, if not political nonsense, are certainly packed with the same old bureaucratic phrases that persist in any government.

The four students chosen for the presidential selection committee met Brown's "experience" criteria well. All have been involved in student government or administration — traits which Brown now considers essential.

During the student body presidential campaign, though, Brown and his campaign manager Kevin Elmore, senior in computer science, warned against the "experienced" type.

In the Feb. 1 Collegian, Elmore stated, "People who have participated in student government for a long time are so tied down in the day-to-day operation of the office that they're not interested in changing the focus of things. A lot of things seem out of scope, and they shouldn't be."

The procedure Brown used for the selection process also left many of his supporters discontented. Brown, who knew of his responsibility on Aug. 16, was slow to publicize the position and set up guidelines for the applicants.

Brown did not advertise the position, but instead relied on the Collegian to report the story and on the efforts of members of Students for Educational Awareness to place posters on campus notifying students of the opportunity.

Brown's weak effort to publicize the position contrasts with his campaign promise in the Feb. 1 Collegian: "We (party members) know nothing about student government, but we aim to find out and let other people know."

Since the criteria for the decision was not stated on the application form, many of the applicants believed they were unfairly judged.

On the application form, applicants were asked to state "honors, awards and activities" and "What interested you in the positon?" From those questions, few knew to write down such things as experience working with the administration and number of years at K-State. Those with the advantage were those whose personal histories were already known by Brown.

The most curious choice of the four chosen for the committee is Brown's selection of Mark Jones, senior in management and Student Senate chairman.

Jones ran against Brown in the student body presidential race. When Jones lost in the initial vote, he teamed up with run-off candidate Keith Westervelt, May 1985 graduate in agriculture education, to try to defeat Brown in the final race.

Jones placed an advertisement in the Collegian notifying his supporters that he was supporting Westervelt, and Westervelt spread the word in a Feb. 14 Collegian article: "I think I'll pick up a lot of Mark Jones' votes because we're (Jones and Westervelt) pretty concerned we get somebody that's been involved in student government. I don't know where (Brown's) votes came from."

Apparently Brown, too, has forgotten where his votes came from.

From a strictly political sense, Jones should have been about 48th on the list of political favors, and some of the more "average" students should have been first.

In the Feb. 14 Collegian, Brown acknowledged that the "average Joe" was his base support.

"It's probably what I stand for," Brown said. "You can look at me and say I'm the average student."

The "average student" applicant has reason to be unhappy at Brown's criteria. In February, Brown pleaded with students to vote for him because he was an average student, ignorant of the detailed workings of the administration and student government.

In September, though, Brown is no longer an "average student" and now believes the average, inexperienced student is unqualified to fill a role in student government.

One group of his constituents is so angry at his apparent turnaround that they have considered ending his unorthodox campaign in an unorthodox way — by starting impeachment proceedings.

Things may get very lively in student government in the next few weeks. Or, the uproar may all die down. Who knows? Student unrest is an unpredictable thing, as Brown, who was elected because he was "Mad as Hell," can tell you.

Brown has kept one campaign promise, though, as stated by Elmore in the Feb. 1 Collegian: "I think a moral victory will be earned just by getting students angry about the things that happen on this campus."

Science museum raises funds from sale of moon property

By The Associated Press

BOSTON, Mass. — How would you like to buy that little piece of moon you've always dreamed about?

Prices start at $25 for a small crater 30 miles in diameter and go as high as $1,000 for the Sea of Tranquility, Apollo 11's landing site.

"Neil Armstrong walked on it," says the brochure from the exclusive real estate agent, the Boston Museum of Science. "Now you can own it."

The tongue-in-cheek listings are meant to raise money for the museum.

"We started selling moon craters about two weeks ago," said Barry Burlingham, the museum's director of development. "We've had over 100 inquiries, but we've sold just a handful, really. We're just getting going."

Medium-sized craters cost $50, larger craters are $75, the seven biggest craters go for $100 each and honeymooners can purchase a pair of adjacent craters for $150. Seas and oceans sell for $500.

Burlingham said all lunar parcels are on the sunny side of the moon with a full view of the Earth's surface.

Burlingham said he chose to sell the moon because the museum already has sold the sun, the planets — Saturn's rings were sold seperately — and numerous stars in previous fund-raising campaigns.

"It's a gimmicky kind of thing that brought in a little money," he said, estimating that the sale of celestial real estate brought in about $175,000 over the years.

In return for donations, lunar landowners receive a deed certifying their claim as well as a moon map and chart showing the exact location of their property.

A landowner's rights include "landing, moon walking, flag planting, settlement and habitation, earthwatching and hitchhiking" as long as the person obeys "all space statutes, lunar legislation, orbital edicts and astronomical axioms which are or may be in force in the solar system."

In addition, property holders agree to "liberally dispense any and all Swiss cheese in his or her domain to hungry space travelers, stowaway mice and cows jumping over the premises."

UPC hosts 28th activities carnival

By The Collegian Staff

Students were given the opportunity to become aquainted with 87 campus organizations at the 28th annual Union Program Council activities carnival.

The Union was the scene of Sunday's activities. At the carnival students met with representatives from organizations registered with the Student Governing Association.

UPC Special Events Council is primarily responsible for organizing the activities carnival, but the other UPC committees take part as well. Planning for the carnival began this summer.

"UPC sponsors this to make students more aware of what is available on campus and to help the organizations gain new members. We do have a high percentage of groups that are eligible to attend actually take part in the carnival," said Julie Stephens, senior in sociology and UPC special events chairperson.

Attendance was about the same this year as last year, according to Janice Kiser, program adviser for UPC special events. Attendance was estimated at 650.

"I am really happy with the turnout so far today. Although it is really hard to estimate the number of people in a moving crowd I think that we have had a really good turn-out," Stephens said. "We do really need to get the word out better to the residence halls. I know that we have had a really good turn-out from the greek organizations, but we really need to target the residence halls."

The clubs and organizations represented at the carnival covered all aspects of campus. Participation is up from last year, when 70 groups took part in the carnival.

Clubs included pre-professional organizations such as Pre-nursing Club, special interest groups such as K-State Sailing Club, supportive groups such as U-LearN, and honoraries such as Golden Key and Chimes.

The K-Laires, the University square-dancing club provided entertainment in the courtyard throughout the carnival.

"We're very happy with the success of this year's carnival and we're looking forward to our next event, an all-campus dance on Friday the 13th in the Catskeller," Stephens said.

Faculty evaluations

Reforms may cause unrest

By ROBERT CLASEN
Collegian Reporter

A proposed change in the faculty evaluation system may bring controversy for faculty at Board of Regents schools.

The Student Advisory Committee and the Associated Students of Kansas are working on a proposal to improve the faculty evaluation system for regents schools, said Kevin Elmore, senior in computer science and ASK campus director. This proposal is scheduled for presentation to the regents in October 1985.

One of the important changes suggested in this proposal is the utilization of a single evaluation form by all institutions and their departments, Elmore said. This would create a comparable data source that would be universal in the evaluation of all teachers, tenured professors, graduate teaching assistants and other faculty members.

Another proposed change is the posting of teacher evaluation ratings where students can see them. Posting evaluations could influence students' choices of courses and instructors.

Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy and faculty senate chairman, pointed out that many things on the proposal are already being done. He also said he disagrees with some of the proposed changes.

One of the changes he said he dislikes is the posting of students' instructor evaluation results.

"People should enter a class with an open mind," Reagan said. "An instructor that seems bad to one student may seem great to another.

"We have a good drop/add system," said Reagan. "If you don't like an instructor, you have nine weeks to drop the course."

Reagan also said he disagreed with the single form for all institutions and departments.

"We've tried all this before," Reagan said. "We (the philosophy department) adopted our own evaluation form because we didn't think the single form was applicable to our teaching methods."

One of the fears many students have concerning current evaluation methods is the effect on a course grade if the instructor finds out which students gave a bad evaluation, Elmore said.

To counteract that problem, an anonymity clause was added to the proposal. Students will have the right to complete the evaluation without their name attached to the form.

The anonymity clause also suggests that evaluations not be released to the instructor until final grades for the class have been submitted.

Reagan said he also disagreed with the proposed changes in the faculty evaluation system because the proposal provides anonymity for the student but not the instructor.

This works both ways, Reagan said. He explained that students are afraid the evaluation they give might affect their grades and teachers are likewise fearful the evaluations they receive might affect their jobs.

"Should teachers wait to give grades until the students have evaluated them?

"We don't differ in the basic goal, improved instruction," Reagan said, "just the means to get there."

Arguments from faculty members against the proposal can be expected, Elmore said.

"The only problem we see is getting it approved by the faculty senate," Elmore said. He said he thinks that if the regents endorse the proposal, it will be enough to accomplish that.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.

Freshmen melon feed has few participants

By The Collegian Staff

The city of Manhattan threw a party and nobody came — at least not invited guests.

The party was planned to give freshmen something to do in lieu of going to a bar on a Friday afternoon. The city had arranged for the swimming pool to be open and had purchased about 90 watermelons. The weather was ideal for an afternoon swim with the temperature in the upper 90s. The only element missing was freshmen.

The lack of turnout was blamed on several factors.

"There are a lot of greek functions this afternoon, and this is also a state fair weekend," said Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs. "It was just poor timing."

Even though no freshmen showed up for the activities, Manhattan Parks and Recreation Director Terry Deweese didn't let the poor turnout stop the party. He recruited a group of about 20 third-grade girls who were having a back-to-school party to eat some of the watermelons.

The party's lack of success won't deter the city from sponsoring other events for students, DeWeese said.

Musicologists find music's cultural role

Students remake native instruments

By JANET MATTHIAS
Collegian Reporter

Music plays a role in nearly everyone's life. In her ethnomusicology class, Harriet Ottenheimer illustrates the importance of the interrelationship between music and its culture.

"There is music in schools, in churches, in the Union — it is almost everywhere," said Ottenheimer, associate professor in social anthropology and social work. "My class helps students develop a better understanding of our culture through the study of many types of music."

Recently enrollment in the class has dropped from a high of 30 students, several years ago, to the current four students. Ottenheimer noted the drop in overall enrollment as one of the reasons for the drop in her class size.

Because of the lack in enrollment, the course is not offered every year, but only when there is student interest expressed for the class, she said.

"But, I believe another reason for the drop is that students are not encouraged to experiment. They only take the classes that are supposed to be practical," Ottenheimer said. "However, I believe that all students need a well-rounded understanding of many cultures, especially their own. That understanding can come through the study of a culture's music."

This semester Ottenheimer's class will focus on five types of music: African, African-American, American Indian, Eastern European peasant, and South Asian. In addition to the study of these forms of music, the students will do an individualized research project. Each student will deal with some aspect of their choice, dealing with music and culture. The papers will involve interviews, research and actual particiation by the students in listening and reacting to music.

As well as the research papers, each student will also have an extra project to complete.

"The students have expressed an interest in making native instuments, according to the directions in our text," Ottenheimer said. "Right now, making the instruments is in the experimental stages. We will be getting advise and assistance from Chris Banner (a technician in the music department.)"

Students have the choice of making nearly any musical instrument, from an ancient African drum to a modern day guitar.

Although the ethnomusicology course is offered through the anthropology department, Ottenheimer said students with a variety of majors enroll in the class.

"This would be a good course for just about anyone," she said. "It helps people see how much music is a part of our lives. Then by looking at other cultures, and making comparisons with our own, we are better able to understand ourselves. That is what ethnomusicology is all about."

Potent, smelly chemical leak found in West Virginia plant

By The Associated Press

NITRO, W.Va. — A poisonous chemical with an "extreme rotten smell" leaked at a chemical plant here Sunday, sending four people to hospitals, officials said.

An unknown quantity of methyl mercaptan, a sulfur-based compound, leaked from the Fike Chemical Co. plant about 2 p.m., said Nitro emergency officials.

The area near the plant was blocked off, said Kanawha County Commissioner Doug Stump. He said no evacuations had been ordered.

"There are no visible fumes, but an extreme rotten smell," Stump said. "Nitro firemen have water on it.

Elmer Fike, 65, the owner of the plant, and his son-in-law, Thomas Beal, 32, who works at the plant, were taken to Thomas Memorial Hospital in South Charleston. Neither was in respiratory stress when brought in, but both were put on oxygen and were being examined, said nursing supervisor Judy Summers.

Two people were taken to the Charleston Area Medical Center, where they were being examined, said a nursing supervisor.

Methyl mercaptan can be fatal if inhaled or absorbed through the skin, and contact may burn eyes and skin.

"Methyl mercaptan is used in natural gas to provide an odor and is quite potent," said Chuck Spann, an engineer with the state Air Pollution Control Commission.

Fire losses add to economic stress

By The Associated Press

PASSAIC, N.J. — A Labor Day inferno razed 18 industrial buildings and left 2,200 people without jobs, but city officials fear the damage may run far deeper, breaking the stride of an economic rebound.

"Bamm...you get wiped out, nothing left," said a tired and frustrated Joseph Lipari, mayor of this industrial city of 53,000 residents 15 miles west of Manhattan.

Two 12-year-old boys are accused of setting the fire that scorched 40 acres, including buildings housing 60 small manufacturers. More than 100 families were turned out by the blaze.

The youngsters, who allegedly were playing with matches, have been charged with juvenile delinquency. They were released Friday into the custody of their parents until their trial Oct. 11.

The fire destroyed an estimated $400 million worth of residential and commercial property and 2 million square feet of aging manufacturing space, 25 percent of the city industrial property.

Arkansas boy raises melon; breaks record

By The Associated Press

HOPE, Ark. — Ten-year-old Jason Bright says his 260-pound watermelon made him "feel more important than Ronald Reagan."

Four men Saturday hoisted the 46-inch-long, green-striped, red-meated Carolina Cross with an estimated 1,500 seeds on to scales certified by the Arkansas Division of Weights and Measures.

The record watermelon is five pounds lighter than Jason's, according to the Guinness Book of World Records.

"There's nothing that could have made me happier," said Jason, who lives in Arkadelphia and weighs 75 pounds.

Jason's melon should easily win the Hope-Hempstead County Chamber of Commerce Big Melon Contest's Junior Division, which carries with it a $150 prize.

Betty Byrd, manager of the Hope-Hempstead County Chamber of Commerce, said the chamber will work to have Jason's melon recorded in the Guinness Book.

In 1979, Jason's grandfather, Ivan Bright, grew the world's first 200-pound watermelon. Its seeds were sold for $100 a dozen.

Child support changes could affect state laws

By LEANNE STOWE
Staff Writer

Child support and the legal matters surrounding the issue was the topic of the Friday Focus on Women sponsored by the Women's Resource center.

Setting child support payment amounts, how child support fits in with poverty and practical ways to get child support were topics discussed by Diane Dodson, resident of Washington, D.C. and member of the American Bar Association's project on child support.

Dodson, speaking on the topic "New Legislation on Child Support: Help for Single Parents," told an audience of about 20 Friday at noon in Union 213, that having Mastercard or Visa control monthly payment of child support could be more effective than state agencies' enforcement.

"Mastercard and Visa would not let it (delinquent child support payments) go this far," Dodson said. "I remember thinking it would be great if Mastercard could run payment of child support."

Based on a study by the government in the 1960s which has been scaled to meet costs for the '80s, the annual cost of raising a child is $4,800.

She said $4,800 does not include money for day care, and the average amount received by the custodial parent was less.

"The average amount received is less than half of the cost to raise one child; some have more than one child and only receive this amount ($4,800)."

A study completed in 1983, Dotson said, states 13.5 million children are in the home of a single parent. The study also states that, of the 8.5 million mothers (custodial parents) of these children, only 59 percent have court orders for child support.

"Only 47 percent of the 59 percent get the full amount of child cost," she said.

Because the average mother makes less than the average father, this causes other problems in setting child support amounts, she said.

"The (parent with the) least income — (the) mother — has to bear more than half the cost of raising a child," Dotson said. "In a study done by a woman in Denver, most child support payments are lower than the car payments being made by the father."

Dotson said she sees three problems with child support.

Child support may not be awarded, if it is awards are too small or the award is not enforced.

In August 1984, the battle for child support got a big boost, she said, when Congress passed legislation that states must have a child support collection enforcement policy on the books within two years.

Dotson said these laws, although different in each state, can have child support payments withheld from the father's paycheck if he is one month behind.

The federal government will also aid in some child support payment cases by giving the amount of a tax refund due to a child support delinquent parent to the custodial parent.

Dotson said one of the problems in collecting child support is that fathers believe they are raising the standard of living for the mother, in addition to the child.

Wheat additive improves fish feed

By ERIC RHODENBAUGH
Collegian Reporter

The development of a new type of feed is underway, and it might be just what a crawdad farmer is looking for.

Carl Stevens Jr., instructor of Grain Science and Industry, is researching the development of a feed for use in the field of aquaculture. The research is sponsored by the Kansas Wheat Commission.

Aquaculture, according to Stevens, is the controlled feeding in a controlled environment of fish, crustaceans or any aquatic animal.

"Controlled feeding of an animal underwater is like the controlled feeding of an animal in a feedlot — we measure the rate of gain, how well they do and what the costs are," Stevens said.

Aquaculture has been around for quite some time. Stevens said aquaculture's main emphasis in Kansas is catfish farming.

"That's how you get catfish on the grocery shelf. They feed 'em, they process 'em, they package 'em, they sell 'em," he said.

Steven's particular involvement is in the development of a feed for crustaceans (shrimp, crayfish and lobsters).

Stability, along with the size and shape of the ration, is important so feed can stay underwater at least one hour without dispersing, he said.

"They (the feed) can't be too big; otherwise the shrimp or crayfish couldn't get a hold of it," Stevens said. Thus, size of feed ration pieces is dictated by what the animal can get its mouth around.

It is also important that the ration be flat, Stevens said.

Flattening the ration "squeezes the air out to make it sink," Stevens said. Crustaceans are bottom feeders, and would have a hard time swimming to the top to get to the feed.

K-State's involvement in aquaculture has thus far been limited to research in the use of wheat as an additive in feed.

"The thinking is that wheat will hold it (the ration) together because it has unique properties in the proteins, called glutens, that make it stick together when it's wet," Stevens said.

Besides holding the ration together, the wheat also provides a source of carbohydrates for the animal, Stevens said.

Officers seize radio station in Thailand

By The Associated Press

BANGKOK, Thailand — A group of military officers seized control of official Radio Thailand this morning and announced they had seized power "to correct the seriously deteriorating situation of the economy."

Earlier reports had said some air force officers had attempted a coup but encountered opposition from army units.

But the broadcast over Radio Thailand said miliary men led by a former armed force supreme commander, Gen. Serm Nanakorn, had overthrown the elected government of Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda, who was on an official visit to Indonesia.

"There is no change of the commanders of the police and the military," the broadcast said. "Any military movements must be under the orders of the chief of the revolutionary group."

Four tanks and soldiers from an armored cavalry division took up positions around Government House, where the prime minister's office is located, and blocked off all streets leading to the compound.

The soldiers refused to talk with reporters.

Tanks also were seen at the public information department and around the royal palace.

Activity appeared normal in Bangkok's streets, with people going to their jobs or shopping.

Wildcats shocked in season opener

Wichita State shuts down 'Cats, 16-10

By TOM PERRIN
Staff Writer

The disappointment showed on the faces of K-State football players and coaches coming up the sidewalk on their way to the locker-room at KSU Stadium Saturday evening after a 16-10 loss to Wichita State University.

Once in the lockerroom, the players had a chance to think back on a loss that no one on the team expected. They felt surprised, dismayed, humiliated, defeated.

"Things didn't go like we thought," strong safety Scott Wentzel said.

"We beat ourselves," said offensive guard Tim Stone.

"Wichita State outplayed us today," split end Todd Elder said.

This was a game that K-State was supposed to win. Wichita State, coming off a 2-9 season, hadn't beaten the 'Cats since 1959 and had lost 17 of the 22 meetings between the two schools.

But it didn't happen that way. A fired up and well-prepared Wichita State team took it to the 'Cats and came away with the upset victory.

"I can't say enough except this is a great, great win for my ballclub," Shocker Coach Ron Chismar said.

"Any time when it's your opening game and you have a chance to win, it's heartbreaking for me and the players," a frustrated K-State Coach Jim Dickey said. "I really don't know how to assess it."

K-State won the toss and elected to kick off with a strong south wind to its back. The ploy to gain good field position in the first quarter worked as the 'Cats began four offensive drives inside the Wichita State 50-yard line.

The offense, though, was never able to drive past the Shockers' 30 in the opening period and managed just two first downs.

"I've been telling you guys (the media) for the last couple of weeks that they are starting to come together," Chismar said. "We got the breaks, there is no doubt about that. But they made the breaks."

K-State's only first quarter points came on a 47-yard field goal by Mark Porter, giving the Wildcats their only lead of the game.

"The first quarter was really just deathly," Dickey said of his team's play.

K-State's defense took charge briefly late in the first quarter. After a fumble on first down by senior halfback Eric Denson was recovered by Wichita State fullback Dwight Eaton, K-State defensive end Kevin Humphrey sacked Shocker quarterback Brian McDonald on the next two plays, forcing Wichita State to punt.

Humphrey added to more quarterback sacks in the second quarter. For the game, he had seven tackles for 44 yards in losses.

But Wichita State's defense was just as tough and held K-State to 63 yards of total offense in the first half.

After a 42-yard field goal by Wichita State kicker Sergio Lopez-Chavero tied the game at 3-all, the Shockers took the lead for good eight minutes later.

A pass intended for K-State tight end Kent Dean, slipped from his fingertips and into the hands of Shocker inside linebacker Kirk Allen, who returned it the K-State 39.

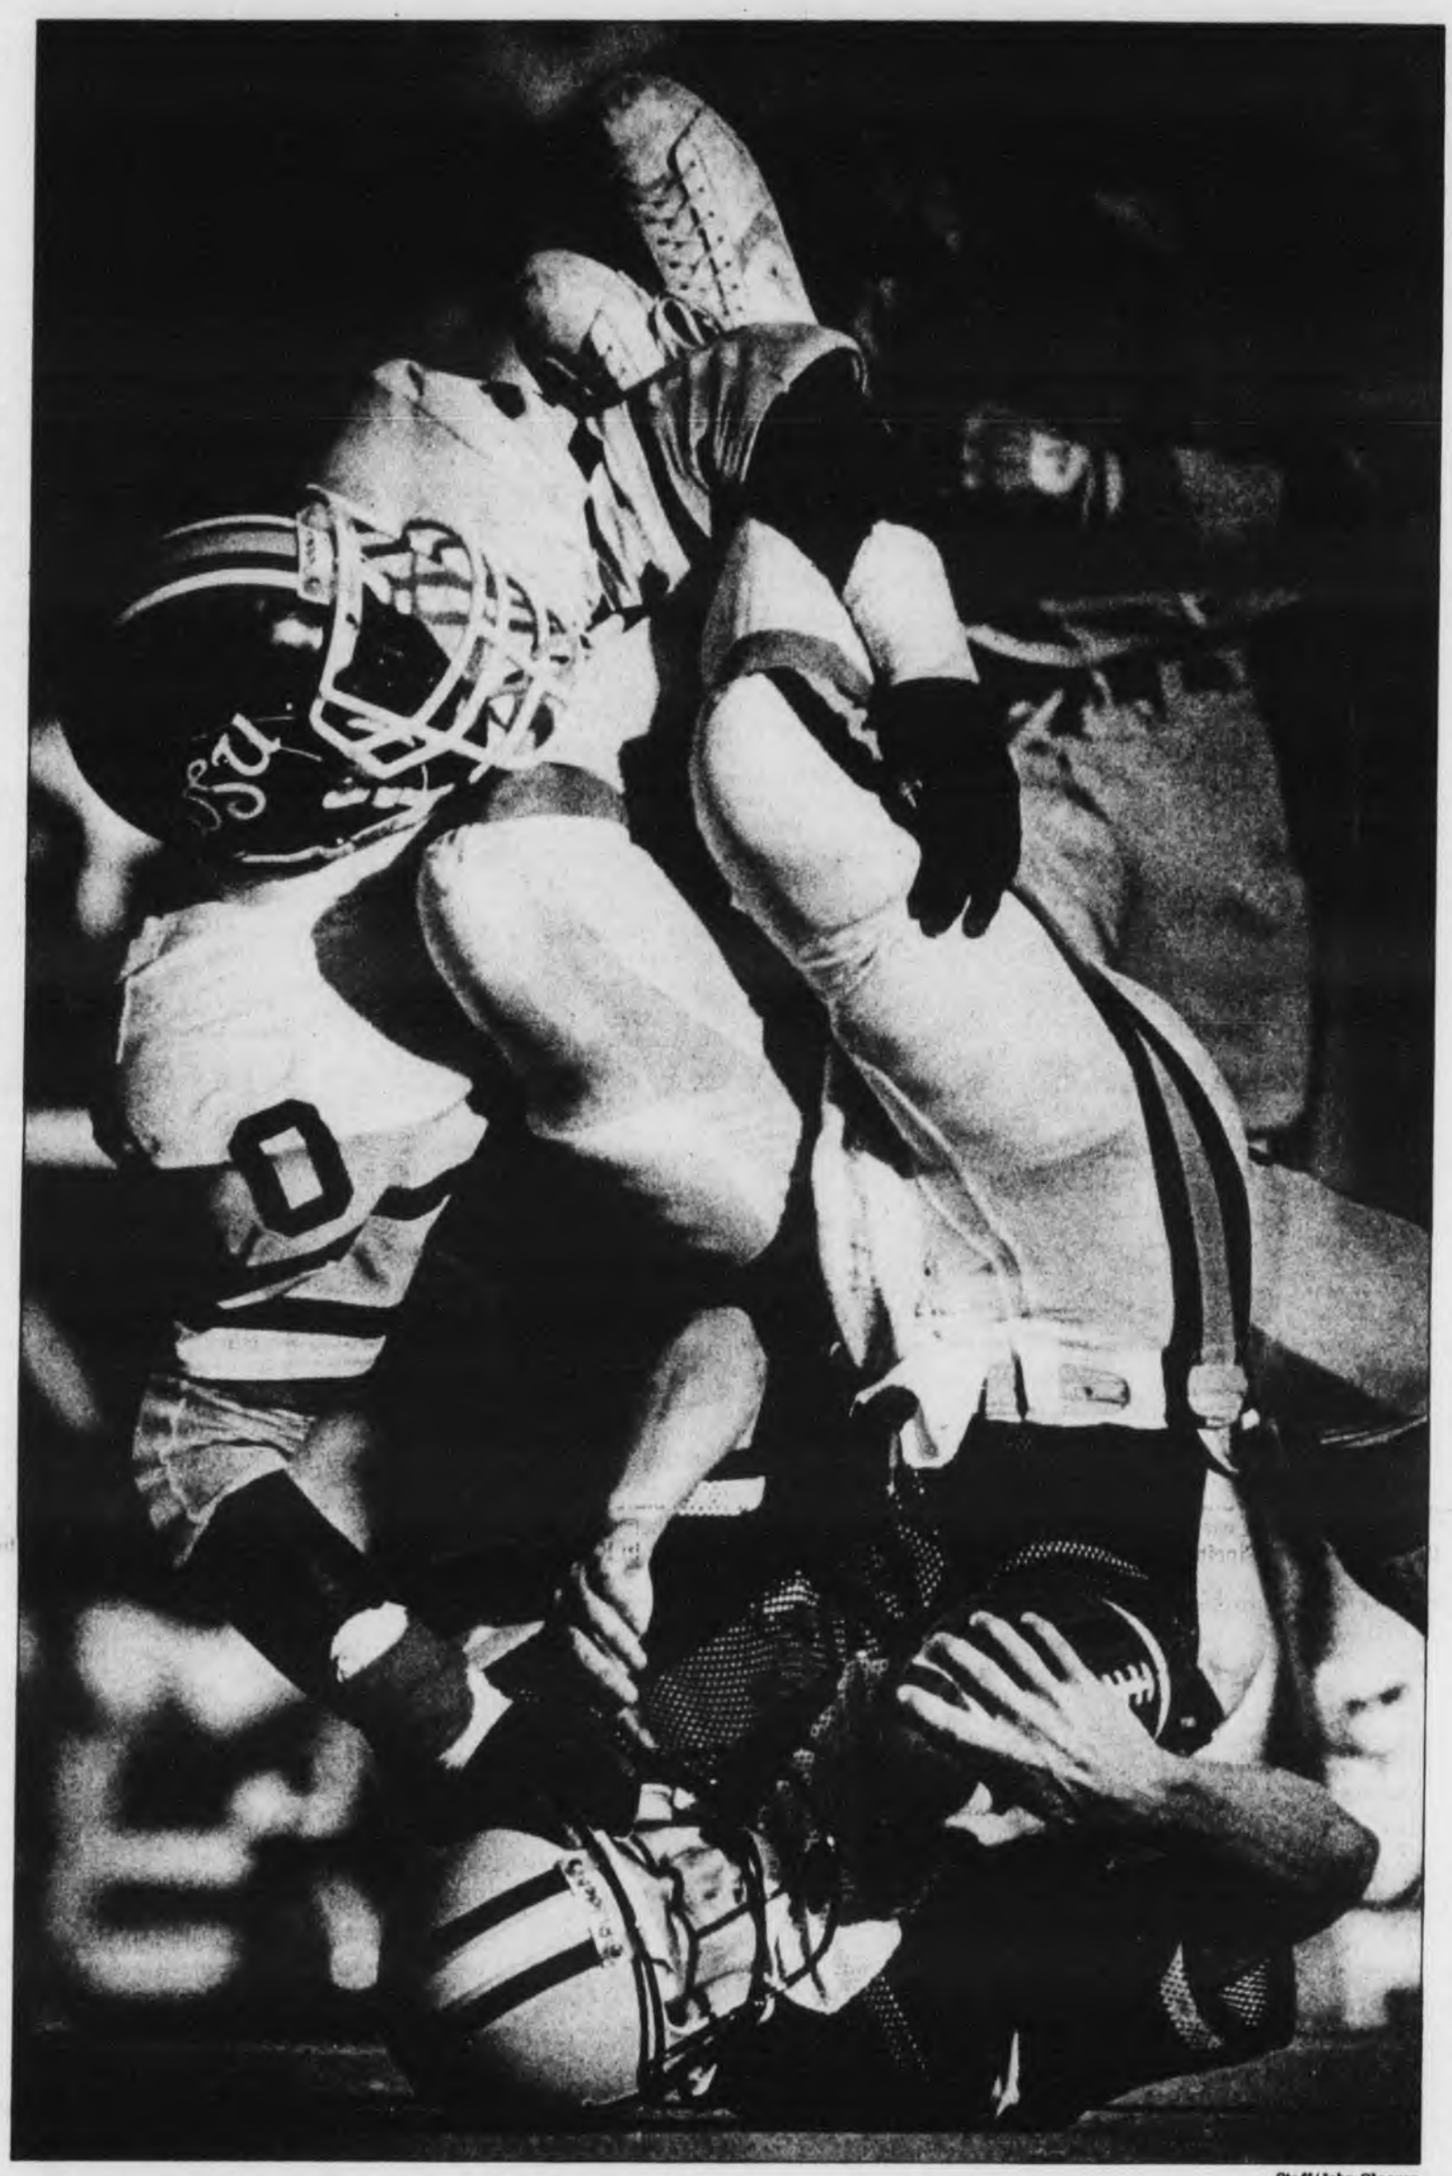
Seven plays later, McDonald hit Valasco Smith with an 8-yard touchdown pass, giving the Shockers a 10-3 lead at halftime.

The second half saw Wichita State shut the door on K-State's chances, allowing the Wildcats only touchdown with late in the game. K-State didn't help its own cause in the second half. The 'Cats had four turnovers — three lost fumbles and an intercepton — in the second half, and six turnovers for the game.

"We didn't have a chance to see what we could do today because we would lose the ball," said K-State fullback Ray Wilson, who was the 'Cats' leading rusher with 47 yards on eight carries.

On the first possession of the third quarter, Wichita State drove from their own 20-yard line to the K-State 34, but came up empty on a missed 52-yard field goal attempt by Lopez-Chavero. The kicker injured his leg on the play and missed the rest of the game. Preliminary indications are that he may be out for the rest of the year.

Freshman Brad Fleeman, Lopez-Chavero's replacement, kicked two field goals in the third quarter to extend the lead to 16-3. Wichita State almost left Fleeman at home, but decided at the last minute to bring him along.



On the second play after K-State gained possession with 11:24 left in the third period, Shocker linebacker Don Weatherby blitzed, causing quarterback Randy Williams to fumble. The ball was recoverd by Wichita State on the K-State 24.

"They just did a really good job of timing and really getting back there on their blitzes and really causing us a lot of troubles," Dickey said.

The Shockers were unable to get a first down after the turnover, settling for a 40-yard field goal by Fleeman, making the score 13-3.

K-State received a break on the first play of the fourth quarter as Denson fumbled on the Shocker 44 after a hit from strong safety Don Cliggett, who recovered the loose ball.

New offense breaks down against WSU

By DAVID SVOBODA
Assistant Sports Editor

K-State's new, controlled passing game was unveiled Saturday afternoon. However, neither Coach Jim Dickey nor the man directing the attack, quarterback Randy Williams, were impressed with how the debut performance went.

Williams' stats — 15 completions on 27 attempts for 150 yards — were impressive on paper. But that didn't make the sting of the 16-10 loss any easier to take for the sophomore signal caller, nor for his head coach.

"It is really a damaging loss, particularly since it was our season opener," Dickey said. "We prepared hard, but we just couldn't seem to get on track offensively."

Wichita State Coach Ron Chismar said he felt K-State's offensive troubles were a result of two things: attempting to implement a new offensive system and failing to hold off a tenacious Shocker pass rush.

"I kind of feel sorry for Coach Dickey. His kids made a lot of mistakes that kids will make when you try to put in a new system," Chismar said. "But our kids forced quite a few of those mistakes with good play. The kind of defense we played today is what makes a ballclub successful."

Dickey agreed with Chismar's assessment of the Shocker's pass rush, but was quick to point out that K-State's poor offensive line play was even more important than was the fine play of the Wichita State defensive unit.

"They did an excellent job of blitzing us," Dickey said. "We worked on blitz pickup in practice all week, but it seemed like they always had one man free to attack the ball carrier.

"From my vantage point, I thought our pass protection was awful, terrible, terrible, terrible. In order for our offense to work, we must be able to protect the quarterback much better than we did."

Williams, who scored K-State's lone touchdown on a one-yard run with 1:26 remaining in the game, said that he was partially to blame for the problems the offense had in working against the blitz.

"I have to pick up blitzes better than I did today," Williams said. "I have to take better control of the team and move them down field a little more often."

But Dickey said he believes that moving a football team down the field is not a one-man job.

"A quarterback can't block and throw the ball at the same time," he said. "We've just got to do a better job of giving Randy some time to throw."

When Williams did have time to throw, his favorite target was split end Todd Elder. Williams found Elder at the one-yard line on a fourth-and-six situation late in the game to set up Williams' touchdown run.

Although the loss is a hard one for Williams to accept, he said it did teach him something.

"I think we know now that you can't take a team lightly. You have to work hard every play of every game," he said. "We lost today, but we'll be back."

KC wins on Balboni's homer

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Royals Stadium was hushed Sunday as Steve Balboni's high fly ball to left drifted out of foul territory and landed in the seats just inside the foul pole to give Kansas City a 13-11 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers in 11 innings.

"I thought it was foul. That's why I just stood there," Balboni said of his 31st home run of the season. "It was real foul when I hit it. I've never seen a ball come back like that."

The shot off Rollie Fingers, 1-6, came with one out in the 11th. Hal McRae had singled to start the inning.

"I said that ball was at least 15 feet foul," said Royals Manager Dick Howser. "The guys on the bench were yelling 'keep coming, keep coming.' It had such hang time, it was so high, that you could holler for a while."

The Royals lost five-run leads three times in the game, which featured 18 hits by each team.

"I said it was a particularly good hitter's day," Howser said. "It was real hot and the carpet was spongy. The ball was carrying real well. It's tough when that carpet is spongy and the ball is bouncing over the heads of the infielders."

Kansas City, which swept the five-game series from the Brewers and has now won eight straight, remained 1½ games ahead of California in the American League West. The Angels beat Baltimore 7-4 in 11 innings.

The Royals begin a three-game series in California tonight.

Steve Farr, 2-0, pitched two innings for the win.

The Brewers had tied the game 11-11 with a run in the ninth on Randy Ready's two-out single off relief ace Dan Quisenberry. After Milwaukee put runners on first and second with no outs, Quisenberry replaced Mike Jones.

Ed Romero bunted into a forceout at third and Charlie Moore bounced into a force at second before Ready singled home the tying run.

The Royals had led 5-0 after three innings and later took an 11-6 lead. But Moore's three-run doubled keyed a five-run rally against Kansas City starter Bud Black, and Milwaukee pulled within 11-10 in the seventh on a two-run homer by Paul Householder, an RBI groundout by Moore and Ready's run-scoring single.

George Brett, Darryl Motley and Onix Concepcion all homered for Kansas City.

Brett, snapping out of a 1-for-20 slump, hit his 24th home run with the bases empty in the first inning. Brett singled and scored in the fifth and lined a run-scoring double in the sixth.

Motley's two-run homer, his 15th, broke a 5-5 tie in the fourth and knocked out Danny Darwin. McRae hit a two-run double and Motley added an RBI grounder in the fifth as the Royals made it 10-5.

Concepcion's two-run homer, his second, capped a four-run third.

Rose collects two hits to tie Cobb's record in game against Cubs

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Pete Rose caught up with Ty Cobb Sunday, then was left on the threshhold of uncharted baseball territory, delayed for at least one more day by rain and darkness.

Rose, player-manager of the Cincinnati Reds, had two singles in five at-bats against the Chicago Cubs in a game he wasn't even supposed to play — giving him 4,191 career hits, dead even with the record of Cobb, who played his last game in 1928.

The tying hit came in the fifth inning against Chicago right-hander Reggie Patterson and was greeted by a huge standing ovation from the crowd of 28,269. It was a line drive into right-center field, the 94th hit of Rose's 23rd season in the major leagues. Cobb set his record in 24 seasons.

"I was very happy all day with the way the people here received me," Rose said of the standing ovations at each of his at-bats. Rose can now break the record in Cincinnati, where the Reds begin a 10-game homestand tonight against San Diego.

"The fans there will be revved up like the fans here," Rose said. "It was a very nice reception they gave me here."

Rose had two further chances to break the record, grounding out in the seventh inning and, after a rain delay of more than two hours, he struck out against Lee Smith in the twilight of the ninth inning.

"I thought we'd win it right there," Rose said, "but it was getting kind of dark. But I could see the ball."

Smith said he fanned Rose on a fastball outside, and "not a good fastball, but I think he got out in front of it a little bit."

The game was called because of darkness after nine innings, the score still tied. At first it was announced as a suspended game, but the National League later said it would go into the books as a tie, with all the hits counting. If the Reds need the game in their pennant chase, a new, additional game will be played.

K-State

The Wildcats drove all the way to the Wichita State nine, largely on the strength of runs by fullback Greg Strahm, but couldn't capitalize as the Shocker defense held on fourth-and-one.

After stopping Wichita State on the next series, K-State's offense drove to the Shocker 10 but fell short again.

On second-and-six from the 10, a Williams pass was deflected by Wichita State defensive tackle Mitch Morris and intercepted by free safety Chris Badciong at the 1-yard line.

K-State's only touchdown came on a 42-yard drive with 1:26 remaining on a 1-yard touchdown run by Williams.

While not lauding the play of any portion of the K-State team, Dickey had especially harsh words for the Wildcat offensive line, which had responsibility for keeping rushers away from Williams, who was trying to establish the new K-State passing attack.

"We were very poor protecting the passer. Everything in the game went unnoticed compared to that," Dickey said. "That was glaring.

"When you run this kind of offense, you need to protect the passer much better than we did today."

Dickey wasn't totally satisfied with K-State's defensive performance, either.

"I thought the guys that played (on defense) played pretty well," Dickey said, but added, "We still could use a lot of improvement there, too.

K-State will play the University of Northern Iowa Panthers Saturday at 4 p.m. in KSU Stadium.

Kenney passes Chiefs to victory over Saints

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Bill Kenney, making it look easy from the outset, threw 397 yards for three touchdowns as the Kansas City Chiefs defeated the New Orleans Saints 47-27 in a National Football League season opener Sunday.

Nick Lowrey kicked four field goals for the Chiefs, falling one short of the team record of five, set by Jan Stennerud 14 years ago.

Kenney dissected a Saints' secondary that for two previous seasons led the NFL in pass defense.

Kenney's first two passes covered 81 yards — 40 to Henry Marshall on the second play of the game, the second a 31-yard touchdown strike to Walt Arnold on the game's third play.

His second touchdown pass came just five minutes into the second quarter, a 37-yarder to Carlos Carson. He hit Carson again on a 15-yard scoring pass in the fourth quarter after it appeared the Saints were going to make a game of it after all.

The Chiefs' final touchdown came on a 19-yard run by Ethan Horton midway through the final quarter.

Lowrey's field goals came from 48 yards in the first quarter, two from 52 yards and one from 34 in the second quarter.

Herman Heard scored on a 3-yard plunge in the third quarter.

New Orleans was handicapped by a miserable performance by starting quarterback Dave Wilson, getting his first opening start in his four-year career. Wilson was 2-22-2 for 30 yards in three quarters of play.

The Saints managed a 50-yard field goal by Morten Andersen, and that was it until the fourth quarter, when Richard Todd took over to engineer 24 points in 14 minutes of play.

Todd threw touchdown passes of five yards to Hoby Brenner, six yards to Wayne Wilson and 66 yards to Jeff Groth, plus a 36-yard field goal by Andersen.

Lendl defeats McEnroe

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Convincingly destroying the label of loser, Ivan Lendl thrashed top-seeded John McEnroe 7-6, 6-3, 6-4 Sunday to capture the U.S. Open men's singles championship.

The victory gives Czechoslovakia a sweep of the major titles in this Grand Slam tournament, Hana Mandlikova winning the women's singles on Saturday by edging Martina Navratilova 7-6, 1-6, 7-6.

And another Czechoslovakian shared in the women's doubles championship as Helena Sukova teamed with West Germany's Claudia Kohde-Kilsch to defeat defending champions Navratilova and Pam Shriver. Navratilova later teamed up with Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland to win the mixed doubles crown.

But Sunday belonged to Lendl, who was in the championship match of America's premier tennis event for the fourth straight year. And this time, he emerged a winner, only his second Grand Slam title.

"I'm very happy to win this one," said Lendl. "I've been trying for a long time. I just can't describe how happy I am to win the championship of this country."

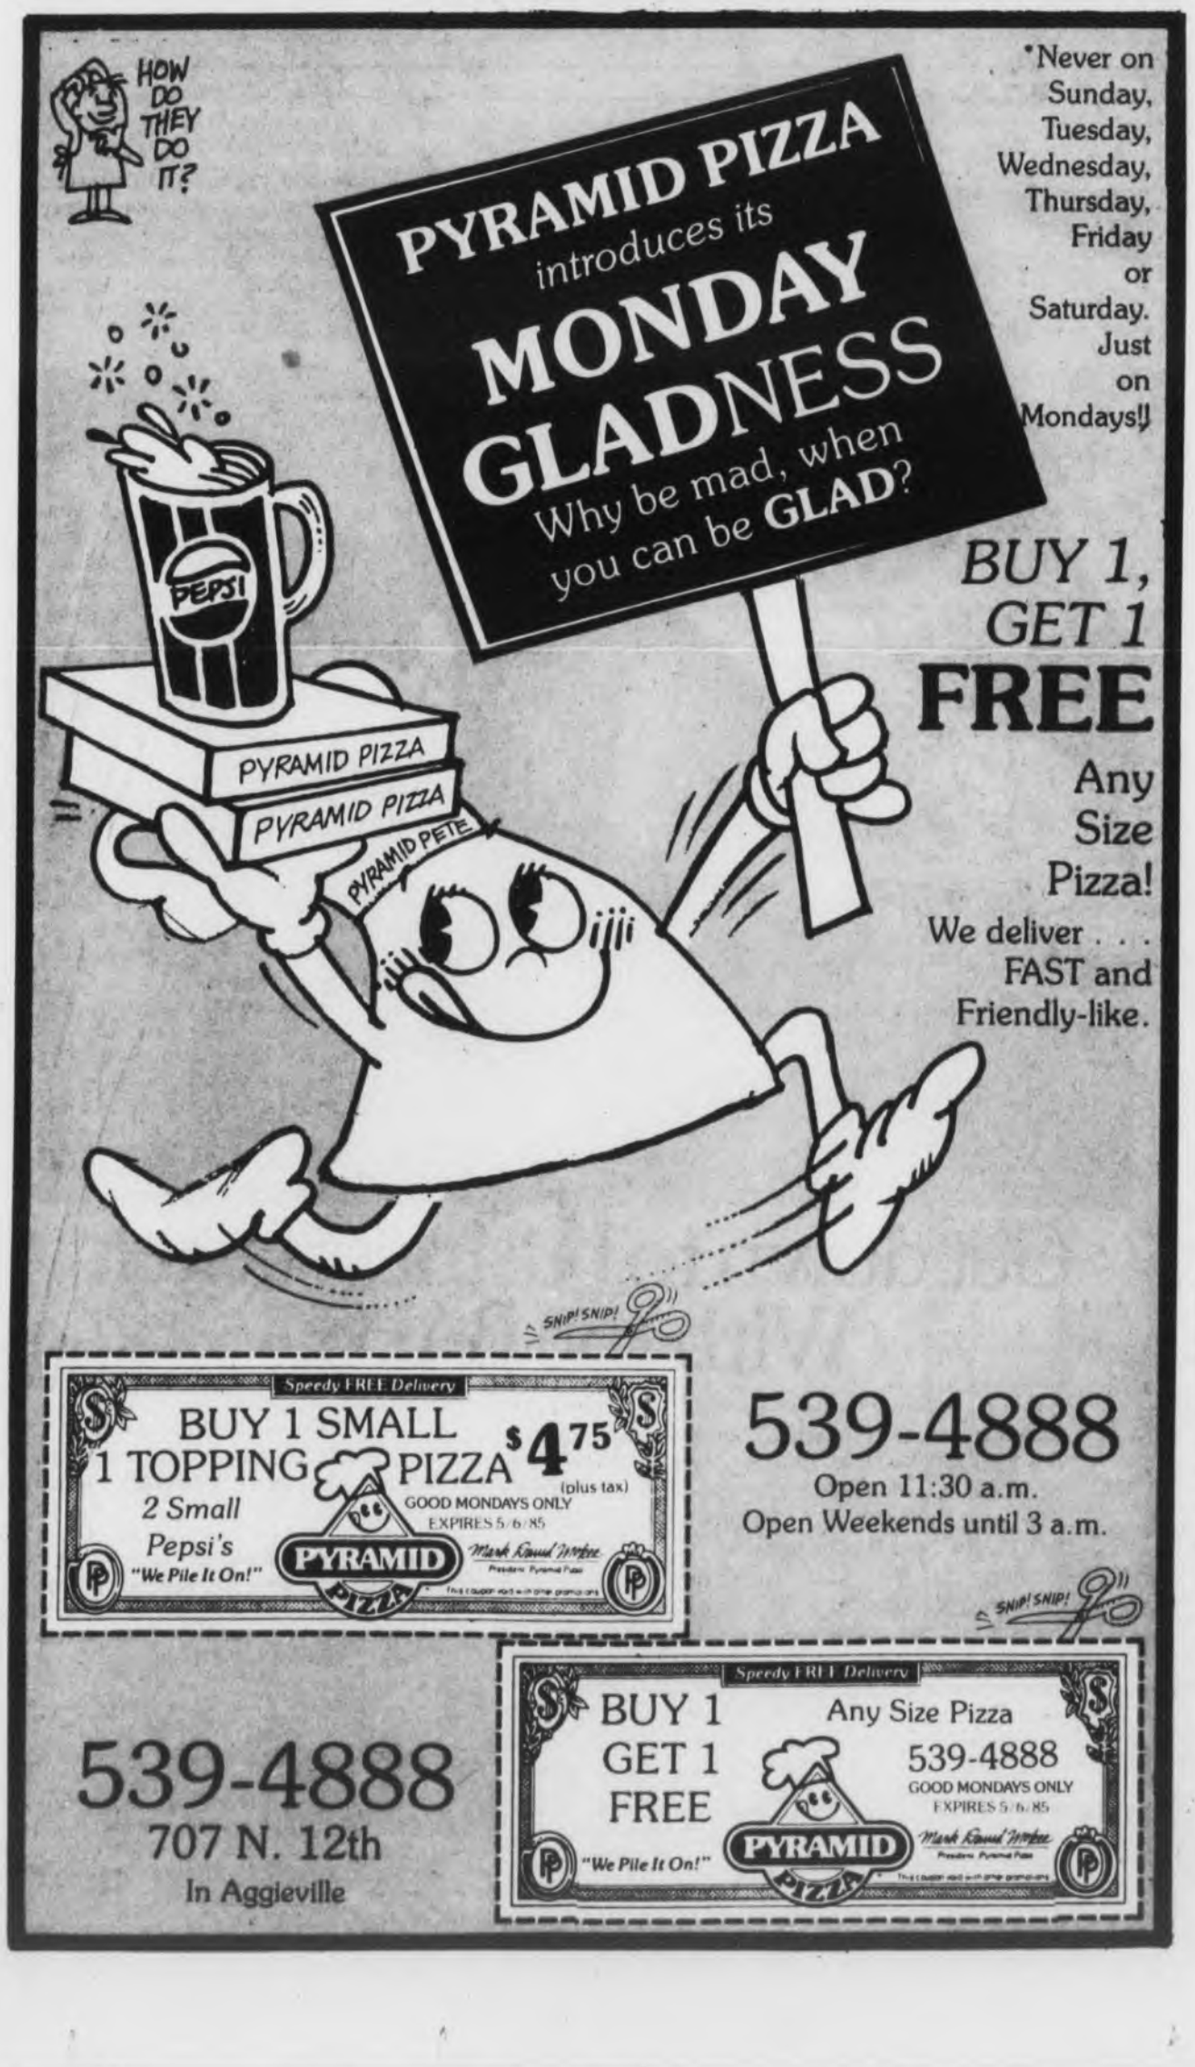
Lendl took two hours and 33 minutes to defeat McEnroe.



"I congrulate Ivan on a great match," McEnroe said. "I think he deserved to win today."

Ranked No. 2 in the world behind McEnroe, Lendl was making his seventh Grand Slam final appearance. Prior to Sunday, he had won only the French Open in 1984 — beating McEnroe.

Lendl's booming serves and powerful groundstrokes kept McEnroe on the defensive. But he also bested the New York left-hander at the net, where McEnroe normally reigns supreme.

Seeking his fifth U.S. Open crown, the McEnroe who was on the Stadium Court Sunday was not the same McEnroe who put on a tennis clinic in his quarterfinal victory over Sweden's Joakim Nystrom. McEnroe was tentative, often out of position and never had his powerful serve working.

He seemed to be a step late, his returns of service set up easy points for Lendl, and his volleys lacked the crispness that usually converts them into winners.

Going back to college made easier by group

By TONY CARBAJO
Collegian Reporter

The trek back to college is made easier for some older students through the help of the Association of Adults Returning To School.

AARTS, a support and social group, unites older students twice a week for socialization and exchange of ideas. The group is for students over 25 or who have been out of school for more than five years.

The group ranges in age from 25 to 50, said Cindy Day, junior in business administration and president of AARTS. The 9-year-old club has about 30 members.

Day said non-traditional students tend to study on campus longer than traditional students.

"Older students are very serious about their work; they need a group like AARTS to pull them away and give them a break. When it's your dollar and not Dad's, you tend to take your work more seriously and study longer," she said.

AARTS members come from differing backgrounds, and their reasons for returning to school differ. Day said the group consists of housewives who have raised children and are now ready to work, ex-military personnel wh have returned to school and adults seeking career advancements.

One housewife who has returned to school is Daphne Ulveling, junior in psychology and treasurer of the group. After sending three of her own children to the University, she decided it was her turn.

Ulveling said returning to school would not have been possible without the help of her semi-retired husband. There is a lot of juggling of schedules, Ulveling said, and chores around the house are being shared more.

Ulveling said older students have different problems than 18- to 22-year-olds.

"Some instructors don't particularly like older students (in their classes). We try to avoid some instructors for our own peace of mind," she said.

Other problems encountered by older students are children and jobs. Ulveling said many members in the group have to schedule their classes around jobs and baby-sitters.

Although the non-traditional students encounter problems, they feel they also have some advantages over the younger students.

"We don't have a lot of the distractions that the younger student has," said Diane Post, senior in biology and vice president of AARTS. "We can sit down to study without having to worry about getting a phone call to go have a beer."

Post said some classes for the non-traditional student are easier than for the traditional student. And vice versa.

"Life experiences can put you ahead in some classes," she said. Philosophy and English were two areas where she felt her experience paid off.

"Older students are very good at philosophical issues," she said.

Post, who has been out of school for 15 years, said the language in math had changed dramatically since her high school days and she felt she was behind other students in that area. Post said she took a math preparatory course to become reaquainted with the terminology.

AARTS plans to have one outing a month with a pool party, a barbecue and a Thanksgiving dinner on this semester's agenda. The group also plans to sponsor at least one speaker a month to talk about the needs of older students.

Author's condition improves after 6-hour brain operation

By The Associated Press

SIENA, Italy — Doctors reported Italo Calvino, one of Italy's most popular writers, as improved Sunday following six hours of brain surgery.

Calvino, 62, underwent surgery Saturday to repair arterial damage caused by a stroke the day before at his summer villa in Tuscany.

Dr. Domenico Gambacorta said Calvino spoke briefly to his wife before surgery.

Dr. Roberto Biancotti told The Associated Press by telephone from Siena's Santa Maria della Scala hospital that Calvino was conscious at times and understood everything said to him, even uttering some "very short" phrases himself.

Biancotti said it was too early to tell if the surgery succeeded.

Calvino, a World War II partisan fighter, began writing shortly after the war and went on to earn a reputation as a master storyteller and one of Italy's greatest contemporary writers.

Band sells out final show of tour

Night Ranger rocks Kansas State Fair

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Amid booths, shows and displays, rock group Night Ranger highlighted opening night of the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson Sept. 6. The band recently returned to the United States from touring across the oceans.

Music Review

Grandstands seating 10,000 were packed before the warm-up band, The Van Zant Band — featuring Donnie Van Zant formerly with .38 Special, started its show.

Donnie and his boys rocked the audience for half an hour, and the show marked the end of the Van Zant/Night Ranger tour. As Van Zant played its hit "I'm a Fighter," Night Ranger ran on stage, complete with hooded capes and boxing gloves, and punched and prodded about with their touring buddies of the past year.

Van Zant left the stage so the Night Ranger roadies and crew could pile amps on top of equipment on top of amps. The night air thickened, and the crowd began to grow hungry for the main attraction.

Dusk accompanied the band as they emerged from an Aladdin's lamp and burst into their latest album's title track, "7 Wishes."

Four sections of enthusiastic fans surrounding the stage were up on their feet, hands in the air. Night Ranger sang out and strummed out favorites from their "Midnight Madness" album and some newer favorites from the "7 Wishes" album — "Sentimental Street" and "When You Close Your Eyes." Fans seemed to be having a good old rock 'n' roll time.

After blazing-hot numbers, "Touch of Madness" and "Rock in America," lead singer and bass player Jack Blades told the crowd that this was the first time the band had played in Hutchinson. "But because of you people, it won't be the last," Blades said.

Blades introduced the band members — Kelly Keagy, drums and vocals; Brad Gillis, guitar and vocals; Jeff Watson, guitar; and Alan "Fitz" Gerald, keyboards — and then the band smashed into "This Boy Needs to Rock."

"Kansas, have you got any rock 'n' roll left in you?" Blades asked the crowd as they returned for an encore.

"We didn't want to quit anyway," Blades said as they retreated with a faithful crowd-pleaser.

"Fritz, how's it go?" Blades asked.

Fritz's answer to the question was the familiar keyboard notes to the opening of "Sister Christian."

Fans responded to the introduction of the song by raising their hands in the air and waving them from side to side as the band belted out the song.

Rocker "Don't Tell Me You Love Me" was the last song of the night.

But before the piped-in music came on, Blades told the crowd, "No matter where you go, no matter what you do, keep rockin'!"

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions – the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

A powerful combination.

Think business. With the BA-35 Student Business Analyst.

Harvest may not help until year's end

Little relief in sight for famine victims

By The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — Most African countries severely hit by famine last year can expect decent harvests this season, but poor distribution of food aid is still costing lives, a United Nations agency reported Sunday.

In Sudan, in particular, people are bound to starve in coming months even though the government and foreign donors are trying to speed up food delivery, the Food and Agriculture Organization said in its latest monthly report on Africa's food situation.

"Internal logistic bottlenecks, exacerbated by recent heavy rains, are preventing the distribution of the aid already received and causing severe port congestion," the FAO said of the plight of Sudan and some other countries.

"Thus, stocks held in port or at anchorage total 350,000 tons in Sudan and 200,000 tons in Ethiopia, while serious backlogs of food aid continue to be reported for Mali and Niger," said the report, released in Nairobi and based on information received up to Sept. 2.

It was the ninth special monthly report by the Rome-based agency on 21 African countries listed by a U.N. task force last year as facing "exceptional food supply problems" because of prolonged drought which hit much of the continent.

The FAO said food supply has returned to normal in eight of the countries — Burundi, Kenya, Lesotho, Morocco, Rwanda, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe — and that overall "the harvest prospects are much better than last year in most" of the 21.

But it added: "Despite the generally favorable outlook for 1985 crops, the...food emergency continues to worsen in several countries where port congestion and internal distribution constraints are preventing the delivery of food to needy populations."

The FAO said recent heavy rains have impeded distribution in some countries and cited Sudan as "a cause for particular concern."

The agency said the huge northeast African country needs at least 1.4 million tons of food assistance during the current year, but only 1.1 million tons had been received as of the end of August.

"Of this, some 350,000 tons were stored at Port Sudan or at anchorage," the report said.

The United States has provided three military helicopters to help clear the backlog of food shipments, and the European Community seven C-130 transport planes to help distribute the supplies.

In Ethiopia, the FAO said, "the food supply situation remains critical."

The authors of the report estimate that 7.9 million of the of 42 million Ethopian citizens are experiencing are now affected by famine.

"This situation will not improve until the main season harvest becomes available for consumption towards the end of the year, the agency said.

"Although food distribution to vulnerable groups has improved during the past months, an estimated 20 to 25 percent of the affected population in the northern provinces are still not receiving regular food rations."

In Ethiopia, among the worst hit by drought conditions in the African continent, food distribution has been hampered by a severe shortage of trucks, rugged terrain with few roads and secessionist wars in the northern regions of Eritrea and Tigre.

Last week, the leader of Ethiopia's Marxist government, Mengistu Haile Mariam, said his country will need one million tons of food aid from abroad in 1986.

For 1985, Ethiopia asked for 1.5 million tons of foreign food aid — most supplied by the West.

Bush

During the Republican primary race, Bush referred to opponent Ronald Reagan's tax proposals as "voodoo economics."

One year after announcing his candidacy, Bush ended his bid to enter the White House because of reports that Reagan had enough convention delegates needed for the Republican nomination.

During the Republican convention Bush accepted an offer from Reagan to be his running mate.

Bush is considered to be one of the more politically participative vice presidents in U.S. history.

He has headed task forces to reduce federal regulation and to coordinate federal efforts assisting investigators of the Atlanta child murders.

As of November 1984, Bush had been to 59 countries and logged more than 550,000 miles in his capacity as vice president.

Africa

English-language newspapers have carried similar reports. Relly's office has refused comment. Reports have also said the executives will go to Lusaka with Botha's blessing.

Botha acknowledged in a statement issued in the capital, Pretoria, that a "leading South African" suggested the plan to him a few weeks ago. He did not identify the person.

"I strongly advised against it," said Botha. "As long as the ANC is under communist leadership and supports violence in South Africa, there can be no question of me approving discussions with them."

Botha added: "I regard such attempts as unwise and even disloyal to the young men who are sacrificing their lives in defending South Africa's safety."

Botha has been under increasing pressure to translate into action an Aug. 15 offer to talk to unspecified black leaders about what he termed "co-responsibility."

Graham draws 30,000 in communist country

By The Associated Press

VORONA, Romania — An estimated 30,000 Romanians, one of the largest crowds ever at a religious service in this communist country, gathered in and around a Vorona monastery Sunday to hear American evangelist Billy Graham.

Villagers in cars, on horse carts, riding bicycles and walking began arriving at the Romanian Orthodox monastery hours before the Southern Baptist minister opened his tour that will include sermons in seven Romanian cities.

Some people in the crowd in this remote northeastern village began chanting "Billy Graham again!" following his sermon, and others joined in singing a hymn that drowned out the benediction of the Orthodox priests.

Religion, especially among Baptists, is thriving in many parts of Romania even though the state is officially atheist. Baptist churches have grown from 60,000 members in 1960 to more than 200,000 today, according to church figures.

Many of the major denominations are tolerated under the auspices of the Federal Department of Cults, but Western monitoring groups frequently report arrests, beatings, police raids and other harassment of church members.

Seeking converts in public is against the law, and Graham, a veteran of religious work in communist countries, dealt with the issue by urging prayers for non-believers and sticking closely to scriptural texts.

"Let us think of Christ on the cross and risen again, how He can give us a new life," said the 66-year-old evangelist.

Recruiting, helping industry becomes focus for ag alumni

By The Collegian Staff

Agriculture alumni play an important part in communicating K-State's role in helping agriculture, said Walt Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture. Woods was the speaker at the annual Agriculture Alumni Roundup, held at the Holidome, Saturday.

Agriculture Alumni Organization members should place a high emphasis on recruiting potential students, Woods said.

"Enthusiasm is contagious. By being associated with successful people and programs, students will get a feeling things can be accomplished," he said.

The Agriculture Alumni Organization is helping place high priority on the recruitment and retainment of students in the College of Agriculture by offering approximately $200,000 in scholarships, Woods said.

Even though the farm economy is poor, job opportunities for prospective agriculture students are looking good, he said.

As newly appointed dean, Woods comes from Purdue University where he was head of the animal science department. Since coming to the University, he has been getting acquainted with the programs offered and the college's faculty.

Woods said he was pleased with research being done and was also happy with the communication among administration, faculty and students.

Approximately 275 alumni members attended the roundup where they heard a humorous talk from Thayne Cozart, editor of Farm-Talk, a publication in Parsons.

Killer of professor earns prison release

By The Associated Press

VACAVILLE, Calif. — Theodore Streleski, convicted of beating his professor to death with a hammer to publicize the plight of graduate students, was freed unconditionally from prison Sunday, without promising not to kill again.

Streleski, 49, who served seven years and 20 days on a second-degree murder conviction, walked through a chain-link fence to more than 60 waiting reporters.

"Good morning," he said as he loaded five cardboard boxes tied with string, two sportcoats, a blue duffel bag and a large envelope into the trunk of a waiting car. "Where's the microphones?"

Streleski, who spent 19 years in an unsuccessful attempt to earn a doctorate degree in mathematics at Stanford, has said he feels no remorse for what he called the "logical and morally correct" killing of Professor Karel deLeeuw in 1978 in a protest against the way Stanford University treats its graduate students.

His criticism, he has said, stemmed from the "administration taking tuition payments but not supervising the professors."

He maintained that deLeeuw, a popular instructor who was bludgeoned to death with a two-pound hammer, had blocked his dreams of obtaining an advanced degree.

He also has said that he can't rule out killing again.

But Sunday, dressed in a light denim jacket and with his long hair tied back, he said, "As I stand here now, I have no intention of killing again. I am a murderer. I am not a dirty, lying dog."

"I killed the man and I submitted the case to a judge and jury," he said.

He was freed at 8 a.m. from a side entrance of the California Medical Facility, a medium-security prison 50 miles northeast of San Francisco. He had been sentenced to eight years in 1979, but received time off for good behavior.

He was driven from the prison accompanied by a reporter in a car provided by the San Jose Mercury News.

"He's being unconditionally released," prison spokesman Joe McGrath said Sunday, adding that Streleski "hasn't been a problem whatever. He spent most of his time in the library."

He has three times refused parole since March 1984, declaring that he wished to serve his sentence and be released without restrictions.

If paroled, he would have been barred from the Stanford University campus and the San Francisco Bay area.

"I do not intend to be barred from Santa Clara County," Streleski said in a recent prison interview. "It's ridiculous for a person who's going to work in electronics to be isolated from Santa Clara County," home of California's high-tech Silicon Valley.

He said Sunday he will not visit Stanford but will alert university police if he changes his mind.

Vice president requests reduction in tensions between U.S., Soviets

By JERI HEIDRICK
Campus Editor

Stressing Kansas' motto, "To the stars, through difficulties," Vice President George Bush said Monday that the United States and the Soviet Union have a common interest in survival and in reducing tensions.

Bush delivered the 70th Landon Lecture, on the November summit meeting in Geneva between President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, Monday morning in Ahearn Field House.

"The stars in this case are the hopes, the prayers of men and women everywhere for a world of peace, a world in which all can build futures of opportunity for themselves and their families. I believe that if we're to reach those stars we must, as Alf Landon has, meet our difficulties squarely and honestly," Bush said at the 11 a.m. lecture.

Monday's lecture coincided with the 98th birthday of the man it honors — Alfred M. Landon, a former governor of Kansas and the Republican Party's 1936 nominee for the presidency.

Bush said he hopes there can be discussion during the summit on such topics as removal of Soviet troops in Afghanistan and allowing more emigration from the Soviet Union.

Building better relations with the Soviet Union is a goal that the Reagan administration wants to achieve, Bush said.

"We have also made clear what we mean by better relations and what we don't mean," he said. "By better relations, we do not mean entering into agreements that undermine the security of the United States and its allies.

"By better relations we do not mean ignoring real differences we have with Soviet adherence to international agreements or other aspects of Soviet behavior on the international scene. The way to achieve better relations is to acknowledge differences, to face them squarely and honestly and to deal with them through agreements and through behavior that both sides can live with."

There is one word for that kind of better relationship, Bush said, and the word is respect.

He said the Soviets use "harsh denunciations and provocative charges, usually against the United States.

"In April 1985, Mr. Gorbachev said that we in the U.S. 'promise the world stability but in reality strive to wreck the military balance,'" Bush said. "In early May, marking the end of Soviet fighting in World War II, he (Gorbachev) added 'American imperialism is the cutting edge of the war menace to mankind.' I think these kinds of statements must be what they call in Moscow a 'peace offensive.'"

He said the Soviets in recent weeks have been pursuing a softer version of this strategy. Bush referred to a series of events in which Time magazine has called a 'war of words' between the United States and the Soviet Union. The message is the same in interviews the Soviet leaders have granted — they charge that the United States is hostile to the Soviet Union.

Bush said the Soviets have charged that there could be large reductions in the number of nuclear weapons if only the United States were to give up its Strategic Defense Initiative and if the United States were to abandon anti-satellite weapons testing.

"If only, although they would never put it this way, we in the United States were to accept Soviet strengths and give up our own," Bush said. "We want arms negotiations that lead to real reductions in existing nuclear arsenals and reductions that preserve and enhance the security of both sides.

"We look at meetings between heads of state...as opportunities, not for propaganda, but for setting an agenda that can lead to greater stability, and lead to harmony in relations."

Bush said proposals in negotiations aren't the only ways the Reagan ad-

Judge halts work data disclosure

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Judge James Macnish of Shawnee County District Court affirmed in a memorandum opinion Monday his restraining order forbidding two organizations and their attorney from making public confidential work progress and safety reports on the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant.

Macnish denied a request by attorney Robert V. Eye of Topeka to modify or vacate his order of June 10, which prohibited Eye, Mary "Stevi" Stephens of Lawrence and two organizations — Nuclear Awareness Network Inc. and Alliance for Liveable Electric Rates — from disclosing the reports.

Stephens is a leader of the Nuclear Awareness Network, based in Lawrence. Eye was the attorney for the Alliance, an association of several hundred Wichita small businesses, during the Wolf Creek rate hearings this summer.

The anti-Wolf Creek groups were enjoined after Kansas Gas and Electric Co. of Wichita filed suit to block disclosure of complaints filed because of its "Quality First" program designed to encourage employees to report construction flaws or safety problems.

The $3.05 billion nuclear power plant near Burlington began commercial operation last week. The Kansas Corporation Commission begins its deliberations today on requests by KG&E and two other utility owners of the plant to begin charging more than $500 million more in rates to pay for the plant.

Macnish's order prevented Eye, Stephens or anyone else connected with the two organizations from making public disclosure of the confidential documents contained in KG&E's Quality First files.

The judge also ruled that KG&E has "common law copyright" on the documents because it created the program and collected the information contained in the files.

And, he rejected an argument that the restraining order infringes on the defendants' First Amendment rights.

U.S. to implement South African sanctions

Congress forces Reagan's support

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan abandoned his opposition to sanctions against South Africa Monday and ordered implementation of most of the anti-apartheid provisions in a bill that congressional leaders said would have passed even over his veto.

Analysis

Attempting to avoid the embarrassment of a foreign policy defeat in Congress, Reagan issued an executive order that he said was "aimed against the machinery of apartheid without indiscriminately punishing the people who are victims of that system."

A year of racial violence in South Africa in which more than 650 people had been killed, most of them black, had brought sharp attack in the United States and in Congress against Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" with that country — quiet diplomacy to persuade the governing whites to share power with the voteless black majority.

Until now, Reagan had justified his opposi-

Botha denies effects of foreign, economic pressures

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President P.W. Botha said Congress forced President Reagan to adopt sanctions Monday against South Africa, but that Reagan's plan "is less harmful" than what U.S. legislators proposed.

"It is nonetheless to be regretted," Botha said in a statement. "Whatever the intention, the effect is punitive. It is a negative step."

Botha said South Africa would not bow to foreign pressure, but vowed the country would push ahead with race reforms "despite outside pressures."

A year of violence over apartheid, South Africa's system of enforced racial separation by which 5 million whites rule 24 million blacks, has left more than 650 people dead and 2,500 injured, most of them black.

Reagan said in Washington, D.C., he will ban loans to the South African government except those to help blacks, ban all computer exports that could be used to enforce apartheid, and prohibit the sale of nuclear technology except that used for international safeguards.

He also told Cabinet officials to draft a ban on Krugerrand coin imports and look into minting an American gold coin.

Financial analysts in South Africa said most of Reagan's sanctions package — like the congressional bill he was hoping to circumvent — would have little practical impact on the nation's economy. The ban on importing Krugerrands into the United States, however, could put a "severe strain" on sales of the gold coin around the world, industry officials said.

In a statement in Pretoria, the capital, the president declared, "The leaders of South Africa will themselves decide what is in our interests. Our objective is peaceful reform.

U.S. migration to Sun Belt may increase through 2000

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Five Sun Belt states will account for more than half of the nation's population growth through the year 2000, but Midwestern states that had been looking at declines may not lose people after all, a private research group said Monday.

The National Planning Association projected that California will continue to be the nation's biggest population gainer, adding 6,668,000 people between the 1980 Census and 2000.

And California, Florida, Texas, Arizona and North Carolina will account for 21.8 million added people by 2000, or 54 percent of the nation's total additions, the report said.

In fact, nearly 80 percent of the nation's population gain in the coming years is expected to be in the South and West as Americans migrate in search of jobs.

But while the planning association projected relatively little growth for other parts of the nation, it foresaw population declines in only three places — New York, the District of Columbia and West Virginia.

That is good news for several Northeastern and Midwestern states that have lost population in recent years, and had been expected by some population experts to continue to decline.

In the Northeast, for example, the planning association projected that Massachusetts would be the biggest gainer, adding 560,000 people. Michigan was expected to lead the Midwest, adding 549,000.

In its most recent projections, issued two years ago, the Census Bureau forecast that Massachusetts would lose 246,600 people between 1980 and 2000, and Michigan would drop 50,700.

Summit: meeting of minds

Dialogue may aid relations

By JERI HEIDRICK
Campus Editor

Vice President George Bush and two political science professors share the same belief — that the summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev in November probably won't end with major agreements between the leaders.

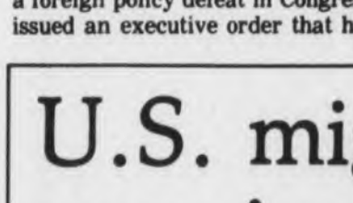
Bill Richter, head of the Department of Political Science, said the summit won't solve major problems, such as the nuclear arms race, but it will establish an atmosphere between the two leaders.

"President Reagan and Gorbachev have never met before so establishing an atmosphere between them could be benefical for later relations," Richter said. "There are complex issues to discuss (such as the arms race) so major problems probably can't be solved. It is possible there could be a meeting of the minds between the two leaders."

Bush said the Soviet leader can possibly agree on an agenda for the future development of U.S.-Soviet relations. Gorbachev could agree on what issues to address and when to address them, Bush said during the 70th Landon Lecture.

Bush was saying, in effect, not to expect much from the peace talks in Geneva, said Merlin Gustafson, associate professor of political science said.

"To me, he was saying that a lot won't get settled in Geneva. Summit issues are usually settled ahead of time about what the leaders agree or disagree on. They are often just political leaders putting on shows," Gustafson said.



It is a positive sign that the summit is at least scheduled, Richter said. He said the summit will be a chance for the two leaders to communicate.

Somewhat puzzled by Bush's speech topic, Gustafson said he was surprised the vice president didn't speak on agriculture policies since he was in the wheat belt.

Gustafson said Bush chose a safe topic to use in his lecture.

"He didn't choose a controversial subject," Gustafson said. "His speech was hard-line with the Rus-

Nixon visits with Chinese officials

HONG KONG — Former President Richard Nixon flew in from the southern Chinese city of Canton on Monday for a three-day private visit.

Airport officials said a U.S. consulate official met Nixon at the airport and Nixon then went on to a hotel.

Consulate spokesman David Miller declined to say if any functions are scheduled for Nixon, who just completed a six-day tour of China.

Nixon earlier visited Japan and South Korea and is to leave for Singapore Wednesday. His Asian tour will also take him to Malaysia, Thailand, Burma and Pakistan.

While in Peking, the 72-year-old former president, whose 1972 visit to China led to restoration of Chinese-U.S. relations, conferred with China's top leader, Deng Xiaoping; Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang, and Communist Party Chairman Hu Yaobang.

Researchers find Bronze Age items

GUBBIO, Italy — An international team of researchers announced it has uncovered statuettes of bronze, rings carved in bone, a beautifully decorated comb and other Bronze Age objects in the hills of Umbria in central Italy.

They displayed their finds, climaxing a three-year project, at a news conference Sunday in Gubbio, 133 miles north of Rome.

The researchers also reported finding animal bones and ceramic pieces at the site around Mount Ingino, near Gubbio, which they said indicate that a pastoral population settled there around 1,500 B.C.

Professor Simon Stoddart of England's Cambridge University and Dorica Mangoni of Umbria's archaeological office said that by 1,000 B.C., the inhabitants had moved away, probably toward prairie land.

Cambodian prince to meet pope

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy — Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who heads a Cambodian government-in-exile, met with Pope John Paul II on Monday, the Vatican announced.

Vatican officials said the meeting at the pope's vacation palace south of Rome lasted 15 minutes but they gave no details of the talks.

Sihanouk's government-in-exile, which is recognized by the United Nations, has brought together various Cambodian factions seeking to topple the Vietnamese-backed government in power.

Resistance forces loyal to Sihanouk are fighting a guerrilla war against Vietnamese forces in Cambodia.

Sihanouk, who arrived in Italy on Saturday, is visiting several European countries to seek support for his proposal for an international conference to work out a peaceful solution to Cambodia's problems.

600 witness building of church

OTTAWA — A new church went up in Ottawa over the weekend with the help of 600 people from a half dozen states.

The building of the Kingdom Hall was nothing unique for Jehovah's Witnesses. Tom Woodmas, an elder in the Ottawa congregation, said four churches had been constructed this year by the Western Missouri region's construction crew.

The cement foundation was poured in August, but the rest of the building was completed by the 600 Jehovah's Witnesses working straight through Friday until about 11 p.m. Saturday, leaving just an asphalt parking lot and grass seeding that were delayed by recent rains.

To allow the group to construct the church quickly, certain techniques were developed, said to David Pfifter, one of three Jehovah's Witnesses acting as foremen from the crew overseeing the project.

"The key to the whole thing is cooperation," Pfifter said. The group is divided into 13 construction departments and 22 non-construction departments that supervise such things as first-aid stations, parking, traffic control and field services.

Washburn's chapel not against law

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert Stephan said Monday Washburn University's proposed construction of a non-denominatoinal, non-sectarian chapel within a multi-purpose building which is financed with public and private funds does not violate any law or the Constitution.

Stephan, in a non-binding legal opinion, said in his view it is all right for construction to proceed and to use public money in building and maintaining the chapel.

"You advise that the funds to be used for construction of the chapel consist of both public and private funds," Stephan said in the opinion, which was issued to Kenneth Hackler, attorney Washburn. Halkler requested Stephan's advice on behalf of Topeka's municipal university.

The multipurpose building, to be named the Bradbury Thompson Chapel, would include classrooms, a performance and recital hall and a chapel.

Stephan said the primary issue is whether construction of the chapel and maintenance of it using public funds violated the establishment clause of the First Amendment which dictates that Congress cannot make any law relating to establishment of religion.

"Our research has disclosed several reported cases which have examined and upheld the legality of constructing a non-sectarian, non-denominational chapel on public property," Stephan said.

Floridian saves loggerhead turtles

INDIALANTIC, Fla. — Hundreds of newly hatched loggerhead sea turtles have been rescued by a man who said he was sick of the way they were crushed by cars on Indialantic's beachfront road.

Peter Bandre of Melbourne asked state officials for permission to remove nests from roadside dunes and incubate the eggs at his home.

The hatchlings should follow light reflecting off the water to make their way from their nests to the surf. But bright lights from buildings along the beach confuse them and they wander onto the road instead.

"I got going when the Department of Natural Resources said they could use all the help they could get," Bandre said Sunday before releasing 86 hatchlings here on the central Florida coast.

NPR to begin weekend edition

WASHINGTON — National Public Radio announced plans Monday for a weekend morning news program, Weekend Edition, modeled after its successful Morning Edition and All Things Considered news magazines.

In addition to breaking news, the Saturday show, which debuts on Nov. 2, will include reports on such matters as health, finance, movies, theater, art, books and sports.

NPR correspondent Scott Simon will anchor the program. Daniel Schorr, most recently with the Cable News Network, will contribute weekly reports on major news events and national affairs.

The program is two hours in length and will be sent to stations at 7 a.m., 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Central Time targeted for use in the various time zones.

Long recalls father's murder

WASHINGTON — Fifty years after the assassination of Huey Long, Sen. Russell B. Long harbors no hatred for those who wished his father were dead or even had a hand in the deed.

"I don't feel as unkindly as probably many think I should about those people who would engage in these plots," he says about those turbulent times.

"I think you can see it more in perspective now than you did then. They had been convinced that he was a tyrant and everything else you could lay your tongue to in terms of one unworthy of a proper exercise of power. But they thought they were doing the right thing, or at least most of them did."

Russell was 16 going on 17 and getting ready to enter Louisina State University on Sept. 8, 1935, a sultry Sunday, when Uncle Gilman McConnell, his mother's brother, telephoned the family home in New Orleans.

"He said my father had been shot and we all had better come to Baton Rouge," Long recalled in a recent interview in his hideaway office in the Capitol.

Russell remembered seeing his father constantly surrounded by bodyguards. His mother lived in dread of just such a phone call.

Just a month before Huey Long had charged on the Senate floor that, at a secret meeting in a New Orleans hotel, pals of "Roosevelt the Little," as he called President Franklin D. Roosevelt, had plotted his assassination with the assurance of a presidential pardon.

Huey Long, Louisiana's mercurial governor and then U.S. senator, already a national figure, died 30 hours after he had been gunned down outside the governor's office in the new 24-story capitol that was to become his headstone.

Newman heads list of sexiest men

NEW YORK — From Paul Newman, at 60 the youngest, to Cary Grant and Isaac Bashevis Singer, both 81, McCall's magazine has offered its picks for the 10 sexiest American men who are 60 or older.

Ronald Reagan, 74, made the list, as did 69-year-old Frank Sinatra, 70-year-old Joe DiMaggio, 79-year-old John Huston, 62-year-old Norman Mailer, 67-year-old John Forsythe and 61-year-old Lee Iacocca.

All 10 share "what we might call personal firepower," McCall's wrote in its October issue. "There's enough accumulated explosive force radiating from Grant, Newman, Singer, et al., to send a rocket to the moon...and farther."

The magazine went on to celebrate "the intimacy of Ronald Reagan's whisper...the earthy, folksy forthrightness of Iacocca's self-salesmanship; Paul Newman's insolent, enigmatic drawl; John Huston's gravelly sophistication; John Forsythe's old-smoothie polish; Sinatra's Jersey bounce; and, most unlikely of all, the dry, bemused brilliance of Isaac Bashevis Singer's richly Polish-accented wit."

Ringo Starr becomes a grandfather

LONDON — Ringo Starr was "absolutely delighted" at becoming the first Beatle grandfather, his secretary said Monday.

Tatia Jayne Starkey, weighing 7 pounds 2 ounces, was born Saturday to Zak Starkey, Starr's son, and his wife Sarah, 25, at an undisclosed hospital in England, Starr's secretary, Joan Woodgate, said.

The girl is the first grandchild to be born to a member of the defunct pop foursome that revolutionized pop music in the 1960s.

Starkey, 19, is a rock musician and uses his father's original name.

Starr, 45, in England for the birth, "said the baby was a little beauty," Woodgate told The Associated Press.

ministration has gone the extra mile in relations with the Soviet Union.

"We have invited the Soviets to visit a U.S. nuclear test site, to bring their own equipment, to measure one of our tests," he said. "We've put no conditions on this invitation. We haven't asked for anything in return. We just believe that it would help both sides improve the way they verify nuclear test limitations."

The president is working to ensure that the November meeting with Gorbachev produces real, tangible progress towards peace, Bush said. The November meeting must, he said, address why the Soviets have resumed or initiated arms competitions in areas where there has not been competition in the past, such as chemical weaponry.

Steve Hartwick, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, cues an album before playing it on KSDB radio during his afternoon rock program. The student-run station recently received a loan from the KSU Foundation to purchase equipment that would increase the station's power.

KSDB to boost power; may change frequency

By KRISTI YEARGIN
Collegian Reporter

KSDB-FM is on the way up.

The campus radio station is in the process of increasing its power, raising the height of the antenna tower and moving up the dial.

Recently, KSDB, the student-run radio station, received a loan from the KSU Foundation for $25,000 to purchase equipment to make the station more powerful, said Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and director of KSDB.

The station currently has 125 watts. KSDB wants to buy a used, refurbished transistor which will boost the power to 1,500 watts, Buller said.

"We'd like 3,000 watts, but we'll be happy with 1,500 watts," he said.

The increased wattage will expand KSDB's listening area. Currently the station doesn't reach outlying areas of Manhattan, because of the hilly terrain surrounding the antenna tower. Buller said he has been searching for higher locations for the antenna to pass over interfering hills and reach low-lying areas.

In addition to moving the antenna to higher ground, the antenna height will be increased to reach beyond Manhattan and Junction City.

"If we could get over the hills, we could get to Clay Center, Wamego, Alta Vista maybe, and, of course, we could get to Manhattan better in the outlying areas," Buller said.

Buller estimated the cost to increase the height of the antenna to be about $2,100. This estimate doesn't cover disassembly, shipment to Indiana for adjustments and reassembly, all which Buller said he would do to cut costs.

KSDB may also change frequency to 91.9. An application is on file with the Federal Communications Commission to bring about the transfer. The change is necessitated by frequency interference between KSDB and a local television channel.

At one time, Channel 6 in Junction City, 82 to 88 megahertz, received interference from KSDB, 88.1 megahertz, due to the lack of a guard band which blocks interference between the frequencies. Buller said there is no other station currently registered for Channel 6, but KSDB plans to change frequency to 91.9 to avoid any potential Channel 6 interference.

The modifications of the station are to take place in the spring of 1986, if equipment and an antenna location can be found.

Topeka throws birthday party

Bush pays tribute to Landon

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Students of Landon Middle School and Vice President George Bush teamed up Monday to give former Gov. Alfred M. Landon one of his more memorable birthday parties.

The students gave him a cake and sang "Happy Birthday," while the school band played.

Bush paid tribute to Landon as a man who "set a tremendous example in civic life, in public life," after losing the presidency to Franklin Roosevelt in 1936.

Bush spoke briefly to the students and several dozen others who gathered at the front porch of Landon's large colonial style home in northwest Topeka for the traditional observance of Landon's birthday.

This was the 98th birthday for the grand old man of the Republican Party, and he let Bush do most of the talking.

The vice president and his wife came calling at the Landons after Bush delivered a Landon Lecture. Bush remained in Topeka for a state GOP fundraising reception and dinner Monday night, and was scheduled to return to Washington, D.C., Tuesday morning.

As so many Landon lecturers before him who have come to Topeka to visit the aging GOP patriarch, Bush wound up forming a mutual admiration society with Landon.

"I am honored to stand in the shadow of a great American," Bush said in concluding his remarks to the students and others.

He said he has talked to Landon several times over the years, noting "every time I do, I learn something."

Bush said he first saw Landon during the '36 presidential campaign, when Bush was 12 years old.

"Gov. Landon didn't win that election, but he won the hearts of all Americans," the vice president said. "He's 98, but he's still teaching, still setting an example for Americans."

Landon had not planned to say anything during the front-porch ceremony, when the middle school students presented gifts to the Landons and the Bushes, but the old politician in him couldn't let the opportunity pass without saying something.

"I can't tell you how much I appreciate this," he said. "It's a great privilege to have our vice president, who's making such a tremendous impression in national affairs."

Landon, who tires easily and must walk with a cane, stood to acknowledge applause when he was presented the birthday cake. He remained on his feet to introduce Bush.

"I'm not able to say to you how much I appreciate this kindness," Landon said. "So I've asked our guest if he'd say a few words to you, filling in what I'd like to say."

Bush expressed the nation's best wishes to Landon on his birthday. President Reagan did the honors three years ago when he came to Kansas on Landon's birthday.

The students gave Landon a bound volume of newspaper clippings dating to 1935. The volume was titled, "Alfred M. Landon — The Pride of Kansas."

"This takes me 'way back," Landon said. "I'll spend a lot of time going through them. Maybe some of them I'd like to burn up, and others I'd like to throw in the air and cheer."

Bush was presented a Landon Middle School T-shirt by the students, while Bush received a framed print of Kansas' official flower.

The vice president and his wife were greeted at the Landon home by Alf Landon, his wife and daughter, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum.

Landon said he didn't ask Bush if he was a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination in 1988 because, "We both know the answer to that."

Landon said it was "just a friendly visit," with no time for discussion of issues.

Overall, Landon said, he thought Bush made "a splendid impression, both as a campaigner and the kind way he treated the students."

'Emerald Forest' implicates civilization's unpleasantries

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

It had begun to reach the point where seeing a new John Boorman film meant getting inundated by flashy, empty visuals and heavy-handed philosophy. But at one time, John Boorman was a superb storyteller.

Film Review

Such was the case in "Deliverance." There, Boorman put the narrative first and let the philosophy take a back seat. The result is a tense and gripping story. In Boorman's newest film, "The Emerald Forest," he stresses narrative again. And as a result, he's back on track.

This means that Boorman has made a rather traditional movie — a sort of "Tarzan" mixed with John Ford's "The Searchers." But the lush visuals look like no other Tarzan movie, and certainly no John Ford movie.

It's the way that Boorman films the landscape that makes the difference. Never before has a jungle looked so sensual. Usually, film makers see the jungle as a dark, forbidding place where man can be squashed in an instant. But Boorman's jungle is lovingly rendered. It can still be a dangerous place, but only for those who only don't fully understand it.

The real danger in "The Emerald Forest" isn't the dark primitive places, but civilization itself. That's a rather simple message. And the movie is best off with a simple message because that lets Boorman concentrate on his story instead of his themes.

Bill Markham is an American engineer sent to the Amazon rain forest to build a dam. His men cut large swaths through the forest, leveling entire valleys and turning the once beautiful green forest into muddy, bald land. Rarely has civilization looked like such a bad guy. Bulldozers bite into the land and the forest shrinks and shrinks.

While Markham and his wife aren't watching, their little boy, Tommy, walks into the forest and is met by a group of nearly naked Indians. They smile at him and then, quite inexplicably at first, they kidnap him. Markham desperately plunges through the jungle, but his son and the Indians have disappeared.

Over the next 10 years, Markham's attempts to find his son are in vain until the dam is finished. He then takes off on an

Titanic offers information

Billed as "unsinkable" by its builders, the 73-year-old wreck of the Titanic was discovered mostly intact last week.

Although finders of the wreckage say they do not want to disturb the gravesite of the 1,500 people who died in the shipwreck, the first man to view the wreckage said it looked "like a museum piece."

The Titanic was called the biggest, most luxurious liner of its time, but the ship sank on its maiden voyage in 1912 after hitting an iceberg. There were about 700 survivors.

The ship was discovered approximately 500 miles off the coast of Newfoundland by a team of U.S. and French explorers on the vessel The Knorr after a six-day search.

The Titanic holds much in the way of emotional memories of the era in which it was launched. The ship is also believed to hold a fortune in passengers' jewels and other valuables.

Robert Ballard, chief scientist of the U.S.-French team, said an attempt to salvage the wreck would be "ridiculous." But with modern technology and a hearty sum of cash from the private sector, the legend could be viewed by many.

The Titanic is not much good where it is now, but raising the legend from the depths of the ocean could be of unimaginable value.

Protest promotes progress

Not everyone was in Ahearn Field House Monday morning. Not everyone inside the field house participated in the standing ovations in honor of Vice President George Bush. Black bands were seen on the arms of silent protesters.

And while Bush delivered the 70th speech in the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series, not-so-silent protesters stood outside carrying signs and singing.

The protest, sponsored in part by the African Student Union and Black Student Union, was organized to increase awareness on U.S. policy in South Africa. Several protesters also took the opportunity to voice their opinions on U.S. involvement elsewhere — Nicaragua, El Salvador, Chile and the Middle East.

But Dennis (Boog) Highberger, former KU student body vice president, said it is the same struggle.

"Time is crucial for the survival of our planet. We all need to get together," Highberger said at the post-lecture rally.

In his talk about the coming summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, Bush said he wanted to express "how deeply the president wants to strengthen the fabric of world peace."

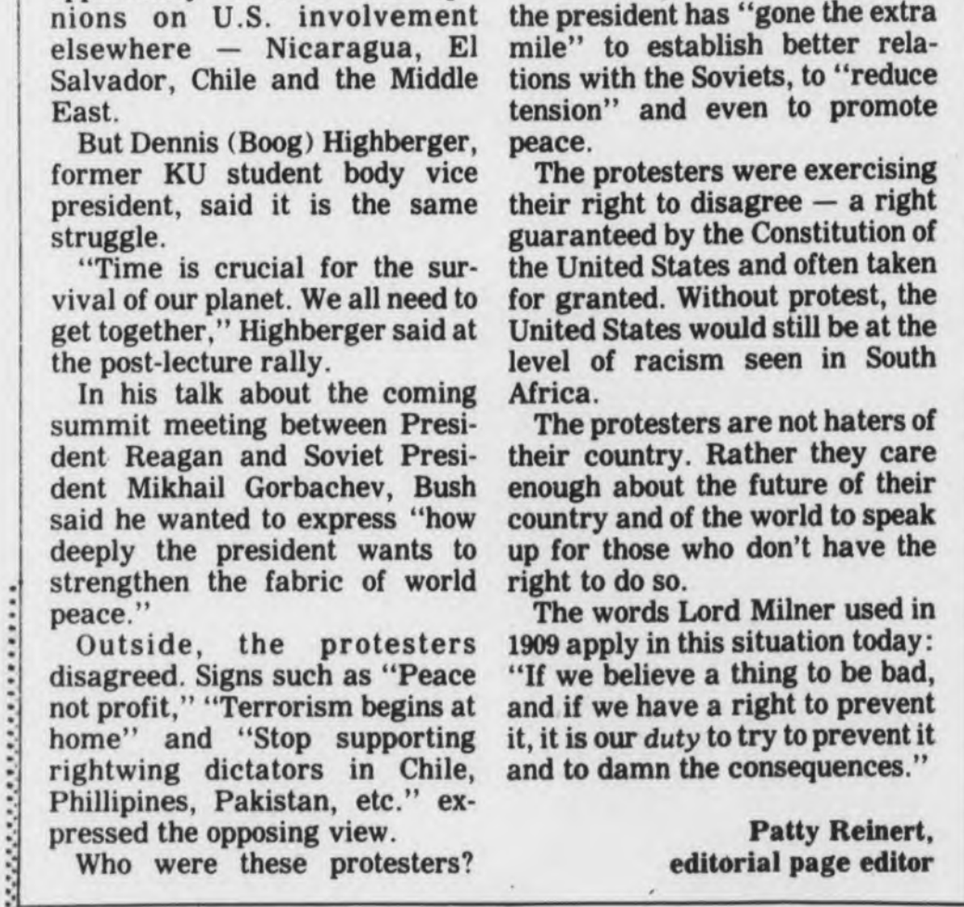
Outside, the protesters disagreed. Signs such as "Peace not profit," "Terrorism begins at home" and "Stop supporting rightwing dictators in Chile, Phillipines, Pakistan, etc." expressed the opposing view.

Who were these protesters? Hippies left over from the '60s? Bleeding heart liberals? Communists?

The protesters come from a variety of backgrounds. They are motivated by religious, moral, political and social beliefs.

They are called Communists because they dare to question the almighty government of the United States. They see that wrong is being done in their name and paid for by their tax dollars, and they want change.

Some would (and did) say that these "radicals" are unpatriotic. But is patriotism equivalent to, or in opposition with, blind allegiance?



Bush may be convinced that the president has "gone the extra mile" to establish better relations with the Soviets, to "reduce tension" and even to promote peace.

The protesters were exercising their right to disagree — a right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and often taken for granted. Without protest, the United States would still be at the level of racism seen in South Africa.

The protesters are not haters of their country. Rather they care enough about the future of their country and of the world to speak up for those who don't have the right to do so.

The words Lord Milner used in 1909 apply in this situation today: "If we believe a thing to be bad, and if we have a right to prevent it, it is our duty to try to prevent it and to damn the consequences."

Editorial

Sunken gravesite should not be disturbed

RICH HARRIS
Collegian Columnist

The Collegian's editorial board was sharply divided on the question of whether the Titanic should be raised, if it is in fact possible, and what should be done if it is raised.

The majority of the board felt it should be raised in the name of science. Some believed that it should then be opened as a historic site and that tours might be given of the hulk.

Some members said this was tantamount to desecration and feared that if the Titanic were raised, it might turn into another cheap tourist trap, a "golden arches" of disaster. After all, more than 1,500 people lost their lives when the Titanic sank. Is this a place where mom, dad and junior ought to go tromping through for $1.50 a head?

Can the Titanic be raised anyway? Paul Miller, head of the mechanical engineering department, doubts that it is practical.

"With enough money and time, you can do anything," he said, adding that the idea of spending that much money to raise the Titanic was "repugnant."

Mike McGovern of Midwest Marine Contactors, Kansas City, Mo., said raising the Titanic was highly unlikely. He said the gravesite should not be disturbed.

Now that the debris has been located, "it should be marked on every map produced, and that's all that should be done," McGovern said.

What about the "treasure" of the depths? Lady Astor's jewels and so on have mouldered 2½ miles below the ocean for 73 years. The insurance companies probably are the ones with clearest claim to the property still on board the Titanic. The idea of sending in robots to plunder the safe and the staterooms of the dead is despicable beyond imagination.

Why the fascination with places where lots of people died? What brings tourists in Hawaiian shirts with 35mm cameras slung around their necks to such horrifying landmarks of humanity as Dachau, Auschwitz, Jonestown, the Tower of London, the gallows or the Coliseum?

We are all guilty. Who among us has not slowed down as we passed the flashing red lights and broken glass of an auto accident and not peered over to see whether there was someone lying on the tarmac bleeding? Or paid five bucks to see mutilations and mayhem in some grade Z horror film? Or bought a Stephen King novel and shivered with atavistic terror as the Bad Thing or things catch up with the good guys?

It's like an ingrained response. Horror is such a part of our everyday lives that we seek to eliminate it by inserting in its place a fictional horror we know we can smugly ignore as "just a story." If it isn't your mom lying on the road bleeding, then you really aren't too concerned that it might be someone else's mom.

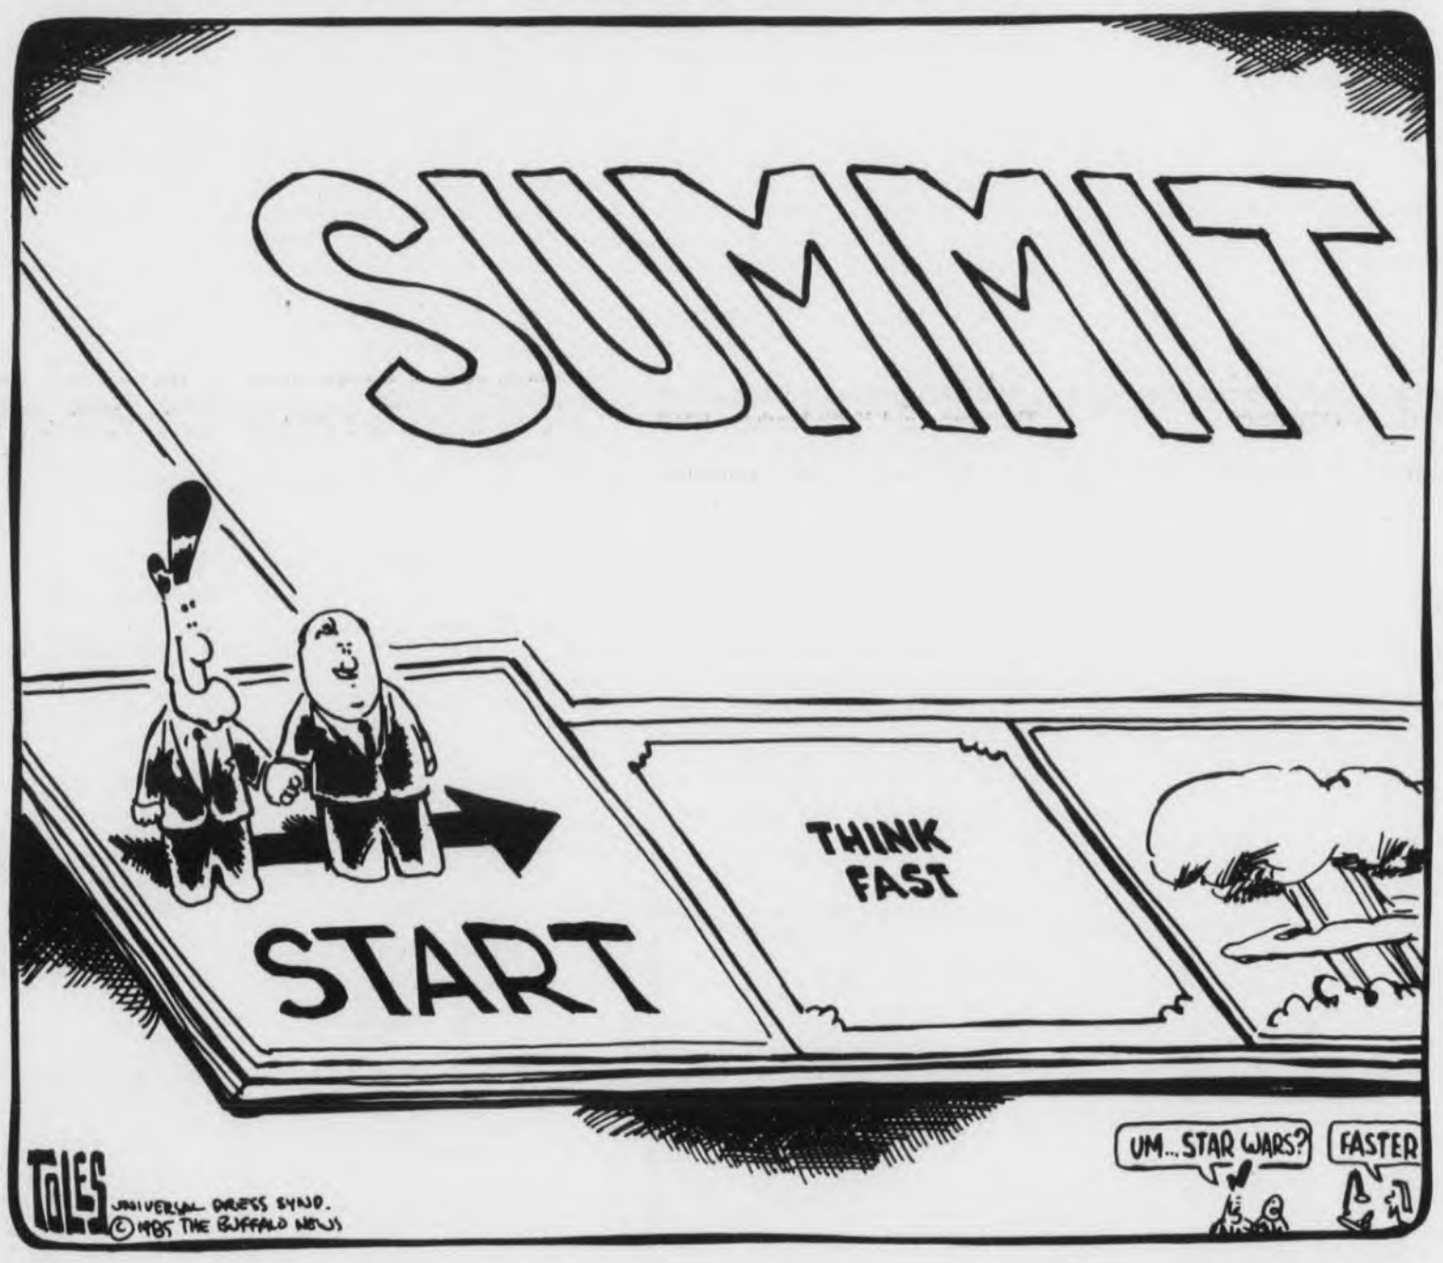
There is a human fascination with death. It's been around since the dawn of time, and it will be with us forever. But to allow this fascination to extend to the extreme of raising the tomb of 1,500 people so we can get a cheap thrill is worse than morbid.

Most people who go to historic sites like Auschwitz or Dachau go out of a sense of curiosity. We know the Holocaust occurred, but the idea that this is the place where millions of human beings were slaughtered draws us in a horrified fascination.

It is what King calls the Danse Macabre, the intrigue that mortality holds for us all. It is seductive — the idea that we can see death without having to experience it.

Clearly, if the Titanic were raised and placed on display, there would be no remains of the corpses that sail on it now. But that isn't really what draws us.

Death isn't bodies. Death is the end of life, and the impressions death makes extend far beyond the legal and ethical questions of what to do with the corpses of the dead on the Titanic. Death is a spiritual idea, something we all face in time. Why should the dead of the Titanic hold any fascination for us? Because we all want to see what we've heard about.



There is an element of despair and of tragedy that surrounds the Titanic. The ship was unsinkable, they said, and as if to pop the mortal ego, the sea claimed her on her maiden voyage.

The lesson of the Titanic endures. There is no need to create a tourist attraction out of the hard lessons of death and pride, no need to make a carnival out of a tragedy.

The sea is mysterious, and there will always be those parasites who will thrive by creating great "What REALLY happened on the Titanic" stories for those pathetically eager subscribers to theories on the Bermuda Triangle, Atlantis and CIA plots. The means to which some people stoop to make a quick buck scare me, and I fear seeing the same thing happen to the Titanic.

Leave the Titanic where she lies. She is not a navigation hazard (hardly, at more than 2 miles below the sea), and she is not going to come up in one piece. Leave her and those entombed within her as a monument to man's folly and a reminder that no ship is unsinkable.

The Titanic reminds us all of our own mortality as well on the bottom of the sea as she might glitzed up in the San Francisco Harbor.

Jehovah's Witnesses persecuted for beliefs

DANIEL GRUBB
Collegian Columnist

As an atheist, I seldom find myself agreeing with Jehovah's Witnesses, still less rejoicing when they win a battle. But after some searching, I discovered a series of incidents that occurred in the 1940s which rally me to the Witnesses' cause in one case.

It seems that the Old Testament has a clause prohibiting the worshipping of "graven idols," in which category the Witnesses place such images as the American flag. Because of this prohibition, two Pennsylvania students were expelled from their school for refusing to salute the flag.

After some legal debate, the case wound up in front of the U.S. Supreme Court. By an 8-1 decision, the court ruled that the students could constitutionally be expelled from their school.

Justice Felix Frankfurter wrote the opinion of the court saying, "The flag is the symbol of our national unity, transcending all internal differences, however large, within the framework of the Constitution."

Thus the Supreme Court declared that to preserve the "ordered society which is summarized by our flag" we must force people to go against their deeply held beliefs and worship at the altar of our nationalistic spirit.

Let me make an analogy which I think is particularly instructive. In the early centuries of the Christian era, the Roman government considered it a matter of preserving an "ordered society" to have all its subjects worship the emperor. To do otherwise was considered tantamount to treason.

Well, the early Christians didn't want to do this for reasons that have been thoroughly defended by other writers. And again, we all know that the Romans proceeded to persecute the Christians for their treasonous lack of action.

As can be expected by my including this analogy, the Jehovah's Witnesses were also persecuted in the aftermath of the Supreme Court ruling. In fact, in the month after the decision, hundreds of attacks on the Witnesses occurred. In Maine, their Kingdom Hall was burned. In Maryland, police helped a mob disrupt and disperse a Bible meeting. In Nebraska, a man was castrated.

The sin committed in each case was refusal to subscribe to the religion of nationalism, for the United States did have nationalism as an official religion and is showing signs of returning to its practice.

Our anthem is the foremost hymn; our flag is the idol we worship; the president is the high priest.

Any criticism of the president is answered by our battle cry, "America, love it or leave it!" Many people have been persecuted in the name of nationalism, especially in the 1940s and 1950s.

Fortunately, the Jehovah's Witness story had a happy ending, at least for the time being. In 1943, the court reversed its decision by a 6-3 vote.

The opinion of the court, written by Justice Robert Jackson, said, "The very purpose of the Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts."

It was further stated that the "observance of the limitations of the Constitution will not weaken government in the field appropriate for its exercise."

I find this story a sad depiction of how tenuous our freedoms actually are. When the political climate changes or new judges are instated, our rights to believe and act as we see fit are in danger.

We still have to fight the righteous indignation of those refusing to think for themselves and demanding others to believe as they do. Thus, it is only by being continually critical of the government and its actions that our liberty will be preserved.

Fun Fair offers family education

County promotes health resources

By BRENDA KITCHEN

Wheelchair rides, a petting zoo and child fingerprinting were among the sights and activities at the Riley County Family Fun Fair on Saturday.

About 600 people attended the fair, which was designed to increase public awareness of community resources available to families in times of crisis or fun, said Betty Frank, the fair's co-cordinator.

"By going through the booths," Frank said, "they (families) had an opportunity to learn more about the services available for families in Manhattan."

The fair included professional exhibits, expert demonstrations and family entertainment.

"It gives the kids a chance to see some of the (professional) people in their roles — like the policemen — and (teaches the children) not to be afraid of them," said Sue Fuhrman, Manhattan resident.

Several area social service agencies had exhibits at the fair and provided brochures explaining their services. Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc., Volunteer Clearing House and Al-Anon family groups were among the agencies represented. Some organizations sought volunteers.

An ambulance and the Riley County Emergency Communications Mobile Unit were on display. Emergency Medical Technicians demonstrated the uses of various emergency equipment on dummies named Resusci-Annie and Resusci-Andy.

Many fairgoers were interested in Thumper, said Keith Lindsey, EMT crew chief. Thumper is an automatic cardiopulmonary resuscitation machine, which was administering CPR to Resusci-Annie.

Manhattan Memorial Hospital displayed X-rays of children who had swallowed various items such as a locket, a nail and several coins.

Other activities promoting health awareness and fun at the fair included wheelchair rides and a Manhattan Memorial Hospital nurse who used an orange to teach children how to administer a shot. Also, Riley County Red Cross nurses wrapped bandages on children's "pretend ouchies."

The St. Mary Hospital Auxiliary sponsored Ident-A-Kid, a program that fingerprints children and provides statistical information that could be useful in an emergency. Donna Sears, Ident-A-Kid program chairperson, said 85 children were fingerprinted at the fair.

Safety for families and children was promoted at the fair. Information about the Neighborhood Watch program and residential security were among several brochures made available by the Riley County Police Department. A skit designed to teach children ways to prevent sexual assault was presented by Happy Bear, a character in a personal safety program provided by the Victim Assistance Unit of Riley County Community Corrections.

A bicycle rodeo sponsored by the Kansas Highway Patrol promoted bicycle safety.

Pigs, chickens and a horse were among the animals in a petting zoo, sponsored by the Manhattan High School Future Farmers of America.

Angie Doyen, a ventriloquist from Concordia, provided entertainment.

The fair was sponsored by the Riley County Red Cross, Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, Extension Home Economics, Pawnee Mental Health Center and the Family Center at K-State.

Income in Kansas rises above nation's average

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Per capita income for Kansans rose 10.3 percent in 1984 to $13,248, substantially outpacing inflation and keeping it above the national average, the government reported Monday.

Despite the growth, Kansas dropped one spot in its ranking ith other states. Residents in the Sunflower State had the 13th largest per capita income in the nation, down from 12th in 1983. They earned $459 or 4 percent more than the national average.

The report by the Commerce Department said per capita income nationally rose to $12,789 in 1984, a 9.4 percent over 1983 and a 21.3 percent jump from the $10,544 per capita income of 1981.

In Kansas, per capita income rose 19.7 percent from the 1981 earnings of $11,067 1981.

During the same period, prices were going up 13.3 percent, the department said, leaving the gain in inflation-adjusted income at 8 percent for the nation and 6.4 percent for Kansas.

Prices went up 3.2 percent in 1984, giving Kansans a 7.1 percent growth in real income last year, the department said.

Nationally, Alaska led the country in per capita earnings of $17,487 in 1984. Mississippi was at the bottom, $8,777.

In the seven-state Plains region, Kansas ranked at the top just ahead of Minnesota, which had per capita earnings of $13,247. The two were the only states in the region to exceed the national average.

Per capita income was $12,430 in Nebraska; North Dakota, $12,352; Iowa, $12,160; Missouri; $12,151; and South Dakota, $11,069.

For the region, per capita earnings rose 11.5 percent from 1983 to 1984 — the largest increase of the eight regions in the country and 2.1 percentage points more than the growth nationally.

Howard Friedenberg, a Commerce Department analyst, said last year's growth in the region reflected a "catching up" by the Plains states in their recovery from the 1981-82 recession. The region, he said, is generally slower to respond to economic trends than other parts of the country.

sians and he seemed to be talking to the Russian leaders instead of Kansans. I don't know why he chose this topic to tell Kansans about."

There was nothing new to Bush's speech, Gustafson said, because it was a warning to the Russians that the United States will be tough in the summit talks.

The speech topic was appropriate because the Geneva summit is a current event, Richter said.

Richter said Bush was not speaking on a broad topic; rather, he was attempting to set the mood of hardline issues set forth in November's summit.

"Bush was trying to set the stage by characterizing the Soviet stance of hard-nose realism to characterizing the American stance of high morales. He was stressing the desire of the United States to arrive at agreements with the Soviets on issues," Richter said.

He said President Reagan would prefer not to go down in history as the first president in 20 years to not have reached agreements with the Soviets.

Carlton Strong of the planning association said that while his group uses many of the same base figures as the Census Bureau specialists, it places more emphasis on economic changes, and this likely explains the difference. He also noted that his group has had the benefit of two more years of economic information to factor into its figures.

The Census Bureau projections were based on changes in birth and death rates and migration patterns, projected from the experience of the 1970s, according to its 1983 study.

Loyalists stop 9-hour coup in Thailand

By The Associated Press

BANGKOK, Thailand — Loyalist troops crushed a coup attempt Monday by 400 to 500 soldiers led by former top military men. Prime Minister Prem Tinsulandona, who had been out of the country, returned hours after the tank-led rebel insurrection and pleaded for unity.

Four people were reported killed and 59 wounded in nine hours of fighting. The acting army chief said three alleged coup leaders had been arrested.

Among the dead were NBC News Bangkok bureau chief Neil Davis, and his soundman, Bill Latch. The two men were shot in front of the army compound as rebel-operated M-41 and M-48 tanks opened fire on the army radio station.

At 6 a.m. rebel soldiers seized the official Radio Thailand and government television Channel Nine. The rebels, calling themselves the "Revolutionary Party," announced they had seized power.

Libraries converse with ALIS to monitor reserve materials

By SUE DAWSON
Staff Writer

The new kid in the Department of Reserves in Farrell Library is starting to fit in.

Its name is ALIS.

Using ALIS, the Automated Library Information System, the reserves department began circulating material in April through the main computer at Farrell Library. ALIS is linked to all the branch libraries on campus.

The reserves department's function is to "maintain heavily used items professors want their students to read," said Ruth Nellis, library assistant and head of reserves.

Copies of tests, lecture notes, personal materials and library books can be put on reserve by the faculty. In some instances, large committees needing access to material use the department.

The use of a computer to index reserve materials will speed up a patron's access to the material, Nellis said. In addition, reserve materials can be checked out through ALIS in the basement of Farrell.

The system allows the reserves department to know immediately when materials are checked out of any branch, instead of waiting until check-out cards are filed, she said.

When a new reserve item comes in, the department enters a code number on the computer, and the material is ready for use. An item can be accessed by professor name, course number, title, author or source number.

To check out reserve material, filling out a slip is no longer necessary, she said. The number off the back of the student identification card is scanned by a computer "gun," then the number off the book is scanned. The materials are checked out via the computer, which stores the status of all materials in the library. The processing time is more rapid, she said.

Nellis said there have been some minor difficulties in converting to a fully automated system, such as the revision of the fine policy. With the old system, patrons were assessed fines on an hourly basis.

The computer now figures the fine almost to the minute, she said.

The computer has two safeguards if the system breaks down. The system automatically stores current information on disks after processing, and the reserves department maintains an index file, in case the staff needs to locate materials manually.

Nellis said the department has not lost any reference information since implementing the system.

Ag bill requires budget cuts

House may slice $11 billion

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A House Agriculture Committee task force, after two days of secret meetings, has come up with ways to save $11 billion on the cost of new farm policy over the next three years.

The 14-member panel was to present its recommendations to the full committee today, its self-imposed deadline for voting out a new farm bill to replace the law that expires in three weeks.

"I think we did it in a way that has the least impact on farm income," said Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash. "And if it has the least impact on farm income, it also has the least political sting" for members who vote for the recommendations.

A budget target passed by Congress on Aug. 1 allocates $34 billion for farm spending in fiscal 1986-88. The House bill as currently written would cost closer to $45 billion.

To bring that figure within the budget, the task force proposed to cut some items, but planned to save the greatest amounts through bookkeeping moves that delay certain payments to farmers, according to committee sources who spoke only on condition they not be identified.

The Senate Agriculture Committee, which resumes work on its version of the farm bill today, also faces the need for similar cuts. President Ronald Reagan has said he would veto a farm bill that busts the budget, and administration officials are preparing for Congress a list of provisions they will not accept.

The largest single item on the House budget-cutting list involves scrapping an idea to give farmers part of their annual income-support subsidies, known as deficiency payments, immediately when they sign up to participate in price-support programs. Putting the payments off until harvest, when they traditionally have been made anyway, saves $3.7 billion over three years.

Other savings could be made in the conservation reserve, a new feature in the law that would pay farmers to remove their most highly erodible cropland from cultivation for a period of about 10 years. By delaying a portion of land rental payments and by decreasing slightly the federal share in a cost-sharing arrangement for planting grass and trees, the government could save several hundred million dollars over the period.

expedition into the forest. One of the kidnapper's arrows is his only clue to his son's whereabouts.

In the meantime, Tommy has grown up as the son of Wanadi, the chief of the "invisible people." He has only vague recollections about life before he was an Indian and he believes his recollections are only dreams.

The eventual meeting of Tommy and Markham is quite a coincidence, but it's a fun sort of coincidence. Markham is running from a band of Indians bent on using him for hunting practice when he stumbles upon Tommy. Then, father and son must fight together to ward off the rival Indians. Sure it's a bit hokey, but it's a lot of fun as well.

Once in the Indian camp Markham tries to convince his son to leave the jungle and go back to civilization with him, but Tommy doesn't like the idea. This leaves Markham with a big choice over whether to leave his son in the pristine, primitive state he found him or to take him to a world that he clearly doesn't belong in any longer.

There is a fine bit of casting in giving the role of Markham to the tough-looking Powers Boothe — an '80s version of John Wayne. He brings such a strength of character to Markham that he can be obsessed with finding his son and not come off like a sentimental boob.

But what's most impressive about "The Emerald Forest" is the grace and beauty that Boorman gives the primitive lifestyle of the Indians. Tommy's Indian father says he stole Tommy because he couldn't let such a beautiful young boy grow up anywhere other than the forest. He thinks he is doing the boy a favor.

That might seem like a silly idea at first, but Boorman, remarkably enough, makes the point surprisingly convincing. Life in the village is depicted so honestly that it's difficult not to agree with the Indians when they say that there is only death beyond the forest.

Vice President George Bush delivers the 70th Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues Monday in Ahearn Field House as platform party members listen. Bush's speech was the second in the lecture series by a vice president.

Bush promotes global cooperation

By LILLIAN ZIER
Campus Editor

The United States is interested in real agreements, not just "dumb" agreements with the Soviet Union, Vice President George Bush said Monday.

Bush fielded questions concerning South African policy, the remaining hostages in Lebanon, the agricultural economy and the federal deficit at a press conference preceding his Landon Lecture appearance at Ahearn Field House.

"There's been an escalation of offense in a war of words with the Soviet Union," Bush said, speaking about the upcoming summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

Bush said the United States would be looking for an agreement on an agenda for arms talks. "We're not looking for a massive parting of clouds, but to pursue a fixed agenda will have been an achievement."

On the subject of the agricultural economy, Bush said the Reagan administration has spent more than any previous administration on funding farm programs. He said they would like to pursue a market-oriented farm bill and expand export sales.

Bush said the administration did not approve the South African policy of apartheid, which is based on the concept of "separate but equal development." It involves legislation controlling places of residence, schools, universities and recreational facilities.

"The president is strongly opposed to apartheid," Bush said. "The United States speaks in one voice, 'apartheid must go.'"

Reagan is unwilling to compromise, however, on protectionist trade legislation against South Africa, Bush said.

"We're standing here in an area which is in a large element dependent on agriculture. The worst thing we could do would be to accept some of the protectionist legislation because the retaliation (against South Africa) would be against U.S. agriculture, when we need to sell more abroad."

Regarding the federal deficit, Bush said a tax increase would be a "dumb economic move," because of negative effects on the "vibrant economy."

"I would like to see the will of the American people followed in terms of a balanced budget amendment," he said.

With a disciplined government program, Bush predicted the deficit could be balanced. He said legislators and the executive branch would have to come to a reasonable agreement to plan an effective program.

Bush defended the efforts of the administration to bring the remaining hostages home from Lebanon. The vice president said he was a member of a task force working against international terrorism.

"I'm convinced we're doing everything we can do," Bush said.

Organizations stage protest to oppose apartheid policies

By J. SCOTT HOLT
Collegian Reporter

"Vaporized men tell no tales," stated a poster at a protest Monday against the Reagan administration's policy concerning apartheid.

The protest was sponsored by the African Student Union and the Black Student Union.

The protest began in front of Ahearn Field House at about 11 a.m. and later moved to the island between Seaton Hall and the Union. A crowd of about 100 were mainly quiet and attentive throughout the protest.

"Our purpose is to inform people to make them aware of what's going on with the apartheid policy. American students are not even aware of international geography. By way of this demonstration we hope to get the students informed," said Khumibi Chinonge, graduate in horticulture and president of ASU.

"You don't need to go to South Africa to understand apartheid, you only need to understand the system," said Davison Munodawafa, another ASU organizer and a junior in health.

"I think it's a good idea to show Bush how they (students) feel about the issue. I hope Mr. Bush notices what's going on here," said Regina Oxford, junior in finance.

The demonstrators displayed posters and a large banner stating, "Let us help end apartheid." Several sang songs such as, "Somewhere there's a child crying in South Africa."

Speakers presented views on apartheid and other human rights issues. Kehla Mdluli, freshman in business education who has been in the United States for two weeks, gave an impassioned speech calling for money to buy arms to defeat the South African regime.

"It is quite encouraging to see the people in America pushing toward forcing South Africa to change its system. This shows that people in America are not racist because they are supporting a black cause," Mdluli said. He added that demonstrations make people aware in South Africa of the support for their cause.

"It's very difficult to say the South Africans must sacrifice their personal liberties in order to bring about social change without actually being part of their system. Like Bishop Tutu said, 'it can either be violent or non-violent,'" said protester Virgil Wiebe, senior in political science.

Carroll nurses injury, looks for quick return

By TONY CARBAJO
Collegian Reporter

A nemesis of all distance runners is blisters. Even the best of them, like K-State's Bryan Carroll, are subject to blisters.

Carroll, a cross country All-America candidate, nearly had to miss the fall cross country season because of a blister that became infected about 1½ weeks ago, causing his foot to swell.

"I was sitting at home after a workout when my foot began to swell," Carroll said.

He had to spend the next week on crutches and tried to stay in shape by riding a stationary bicycle. It was decided Friday that he would be able to compete this season. He began running again Sunday.

"He will definitely run this season," cross country coach Steve Miller said. "The injury is not as extensive as we had originally thought. There was so much swelling in there that we were concerned that it was a break."

Once it had been determined that foot was not broken, Miller said, he thought the swelling had resulted from some type of animal bite. The actual reason for the swelling surfaced just a few days ago.

Carroll said it probably will take him three weeks to return to full strength. He will run in some meets before that to stay active.

Miller said he is concerned that his senior runner may have lost his conditioning edge.

"Any time a distance runner, who is a finely tuned athlete, physiologically has an injury, there is a problem. We're hoping the injury didn't disrupt his system and that he comes back 100 percent," he said.

Miller is crossing his fingers for a speedy recovery from Carroll, who was been K-State's top distance runner the last two seasons.

"Bryan has been our No. 1 runner for the last couple of years," Miller said. "Although he has run well, he has not reached his own expectations or mine."

Carroll has set goals he says are well within reach this year. Carroll, who said he feels this will be his best year in a Wildcat uniform, has not forgotten team goals.

"I would like to be an All-American, but that is secondary," said the Carson City, Nev., native. "I would like to see the team win the Big Eight and be in the top 10 in the nation. I think we have a good shot to win the Big Eight, provided everyone stays healthy and in the right frame of mind."

One thing Carroll said he likes to do in races is to get out and take the early lead. Although it is not uncommon for him to lead a race from start to finish, he said that strategy backfires occasionally.

"I get too impatient sometimes and I want it to happen right away. I'm learning how to race more, but you have to be there at the right time, ready to go," he said. "You have to learn to win."

When choosing a school, Carroll picked K-State because he liked the school and, he said, he wanted to get away from the fast life on the West Coast. But his main reason was Coach Miller.

"I came to K-State because I think Coach Miller is the best coach in the nation," he said.

Now, Miller is counting on Carroll to be one of the top runners in the nation.

Players feel allowances could prevent cheating

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — If the Big Eight Conference had greater political clout, Barton Hundley would be cashing a $50 paycheck every month.

What's more, Kansas State's all-conference defensive back could cash it right under the nose of the nearest NCAA investigator. And so could every other Big Eight football player.

Everyone approached in an informal survey of Kansas and K-State players all agreed that it's a shame the Big Eight doesn't have more clout.

Any survey might seem suspect if it simply asks people whether they'd like to have more money. But the responses from a handful of Sunflower State Big Eighters also turned up some surprising insights into the thorny issue.

At three of the past four NCAA conventions, the Big Eight has proposed the creation of monthly allowances for football players between $15 and $50. The reasoning has been that players deserve something above the cost of a scholarship since their sweat and toil brings so much money and publicity to their institutions.

The proposal was tabled every time, failing to gain support from even one other conference. Opponents say monthly stipends would bring hardship to athletic departments that already are financially strapped and could eventually destroy non-revenue sports at some schools.

But it's not just a question of being fair, said Hundley.

"I think it would be a very good idea," said the fifth-year senior. "It's obviously not going to happen during my career, so I'm going to wish I'd gotten a little piece of the pie. But for one thing, I know a lot of guys around here on this team who don't have parents who can support them. You go by the rules, you can't work during the season. And if you go by just what you're making on the scholarship, you can hardly afford to live.

"You can't buy even shampoo if you don't get help from soembody," Hundley added. "That's why you have these people coming in and making these big offers — because kids know they're not going to be getting anything. I think it would help cut down on the cheating."

Opponents also predict that non-revenue athletes such as baseball players would demand equal shares with the money-makers from the

Rugby club wins, 59-6

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Rugby Football Club defeated Central Missouri State 59-6 Saturday at the Heart of America RFU Collegiate Merit table match held in Warrensburg, Mo.

The K-State club was led by wing Ron Hollingsworth and wing-forward David Todd. Hollingsworth had two tries and Todd three for K-State. A try is a score of four points made by grounding the ball in the opponent's goal and is analagous to the touchdown in football.

Others scoring tries for the club included wing Doug Scherich, lock Dave Mullin, scrumhalf Steve Duncan, fullback Greg Barnes and center Bill Knopick.

Knopick followed eight of the tries with successful two-point placekicks.

Brian Riedel is the captain of the club, Barnes is the coach and Todd is the president.

Dickey deserves compassion

ROD SAUNDERS
Guest Columnist

As I sat dripping sweat from my face, arms, chest and legs, it was hard to enjoy the action in front of me.

I mean the sweat was pouring out and I wasn't doing anything to cause it, other than sitting inside a stadium in 95-degree sunshine on Saturday.

Yet, with the near heat prostration came even more heat frustration because the action in front of me was resulting in another loss for K-State football. The Wildcats were in the process of losing a 16-10 game to Wichita State University.

But my frustration was minor compared to what Head Coach Jim Dickey and his staff must have felt and continue to feel — when you know you have better talent than the opposition; when you know you have worked hard to prepare both mentally and physically; when you know how much you want to bring a winner to a campus that desperately wants a winner and has been without one for so long; when you know your job depends on winning.

And yet, the win still does not happen. That is frustration with a capital "F," and a feeling which should lead more of the fans to feel compassion.

But K-State fans are a tough bunch. They read that "we" will finally have a good team, or one which should be better than any ever has. And they expect it, but only in a you-must-show-me kind of way.

After only two offensive series Saturday in KSU Stadium, people in our section were saying, "Where's the new offense?" "Gee, those backs are slow." "We still don't have any speed?" "We still don't have a quarterback." "What kind of call was that, Dickey?" (Those fans were not even aware that Coach Dickey doesn't call the plays.)

We have been told for years that sports builds character and a never-say-die attitude. But this obviously doesn't reach the fans of K-State football.

Of course, the fans can't be held responsible. Yet, one does wonder what positive effect just might happen if, from the very outset of the game, the fans showed never-say-die loud support. (On Saturday, the Wichita State fans made more noise than K-State's at the beginning).

Is it possible that one of the reasons the Universities of Nebraska and Oklahoma win consistently is because of the audibly supportive fans at every home game, not just against their "big" rival?

The season has just begun and K-State may indeed suffer a very disappointing season. Indeed, after Saturday it will take a minor miracle for it not to be disappointing. The team is down, especially mentally, as are the coaches and the fans. Some of those fans undoubtedly will become hounds after Dickey's hide.

But I hope many more will recognize the incredible amount of energy, effort, blood, sweat, tears and mental anguish Dickey has expended on "our" behalf. Realize that he deserves a better response, a more compassionate response.

It is not easy being judged a failure for anyone. So let's all remember that wins and losses are not the real measure of a person.

Use of steroids risky, doctor says

By TODD NIGHSWONGER
Sports Editor

Many athletes have developed a "win at all cost" attitude and will do anything to gain an edge over their opponent, including using anabolic steroids.

And according to Dr. Guy Smith, associate professor at Lafene Student Health Center and team physician for K-State athletics, anabolic steroids may increase muscle mass and strength. However, there has not been enough studies to prove that steroids directly result in increased athletic performance, he said.

"There has been mixed evidence of modest gains in strength," Smith said.

Smith spoke Monday afternoon in Union 212 as part of "Wellness Week '85," which is being sponsored by Lafene and the K-State community. His speech was titled "Steroids...their use and abuse."

"There is no shortage of people willing to do whatever it takes to increase performance," Smith said. "As competition gets more intense, people are willing to do anything to win."

The drug is available legally only through a physician's prescription, Smith said. Even though most doctors will not prescribe steroids, the drug still is easily obtainable.

Smith said he has never prescribed the drug in his 15 years as a doctor.

"Steroids have no legitimate use in sports," he said. "And they have very few uses in medicine."

During the speech, Smith explained several myths about steroids and their actual effect on their user. One of the main points of his speech was that although steroids might provide a slight gain in strength and muscle mass, most of the increased performance may stem from the placebo effect.

The placebo effect is the result of using an inert medication, such as sugar pills, that has a psychological effect on the person. While steroids may physically affect a person, Smith said, much of the effect is in the mind.

"People have great faith in medicine," he said.

One of the biggest drawbacks to anabolic steroids is the side effects. Smith said some side effects are changes in a person's behavior, blood congestion in the liver, sterility in males, which can be reversed by non-use, and most importantly, "profound changes in cholesterol, which changes risk of developing heart disease."

"If you ever needed a reason not to take steroids, this is it," Smith said of the chance of developing heart disease.

Steroids can be a high risk for users, he said, because the drug tends to produce a low density of cholesterol which can lead to hardening of the arteries.

"Anabolic steroids have a marked affect on cholesterol in blood," he said.

There have been claims of no side effects. The Romanian powerlifting team, which begins using steroids on youngsters at the age of 14 or 15, claims steroids are harmless.

"They claim no side effects, which is unlikely, but they claim it," Smith said.

California whips Royals, moves closer to first place

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — John Candelaria combined with Doug Corbett on a two-hitter and Ruppert Jones and Daryl Sconiers hit home runs Monday night as the California Angels snapped Kansas City's eight-game winning streak by beating the Royals 7-1.

California moved within one-half game of American League West-leading Kansas City with the victory in the opener of the three-game series.

Light-hitting Craig Gerber drove in three runs with three hits to support the pitching of Candelaria, who gave up two hits over eight innings. Corbett pitched the ninth.

Candelaria, who is 5-1 for the Angels since they acquired him from Pittsburgh, allowed just a double to Hal McRae in the second inning and Darryl Motley's homer in the eighth.

Jones ripped a solo homer in the fourth to break a scoreless tie. Jones' 21st homer came off Bret Saberhagen, 17-6, who had won his last seven decisions and had not lost since July 18.

Gerber tripled home two runs in the fifth and added an RBI single in the seventh.

Angel right-hander Kirk McCaskill, 9-10, will oppose Royal left-hander Charlie Leibrandt, 14-7, in the middle game of the three-game series tonight.

football and basketball squads.

"I can see where that would be a problem. But they don't bring in any money," said Hundley. "In any business, and I consider this a business, if you don't produce you don't share in the benefits. You can see we're the ones bringing in the money. It would be nice if you could give it to the baseball players, too. At schools like Texas with a strong baseball team, maybe they could. My parents give me $50 a month, but some of these guys, their parents can't afford to do that."

Kansas tight end Sylvester Bird sees no reason not to give revenue-producing players some small compensation.

"I'd love it," he said. "We just don't get any money unless your parents help you. There are a lot of little expenses. During the season our time and concentration is all wrapped up in football. I really think we should have $50 a month. It's not much money and it would help out a lot of guys."

Show promoters bring fun, games to Kansas State Fair

By LINDA SCHMIDT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

In 1885, Hutchinson began a history of fairs. Since then the fair has expanded from mostly agricultural events and racing to include domestic arts, carnival rides and concerts.

For the past 30 years Royal American Shows has been the carnival ride, side show and game source for the Kansas State Fair, said Joan Brown, state fair finance manager.

"We leave Tampa, (Fla.) in May and do fairs and festivals throughout the Midwest and Southern states until November," said C.J. Sedlmayr, business manager of Royal American Shows.

"Some of the hired help are local secretaries and store clerks, and some move with the show," Sedlmayr said. "Some of the locals hired stay on and travel with the show." There are more than 750 carnival employees, he said.

"We're a business like any other business," Sedlmayr said, "except we get up and move every two weeks. We have the same turmoils and bureaucracy hassles that any other business has."

Friday, Royal American's fair personnel began putting up signs, lights and prizes. James Dean, David Lee Roth and Heather Thomas golden-glitter mirrors were lined up to complete the three-walled booths.

Fairgoers eyed the progress, carried balloons and strolled through the exhibits. It was a lazy day filled with snow cones and funnel cakes.

"We get as good a cross section of people as anyone could," she said. Night Ranger drew a lot of teenagers, and the fair draws people interested in fine arts, judging of the agriculture and domestic arts, Brown said.

"Booths are mostly run by Kansas vendors," Brown said, "although some operators travel with the fair."

"We have good church and civic groups that take care of a lot of the foods, and they're tremendous foods, I eat here all the time," Brown said.

Engine may provide clues to crash

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Investigators said Monday they would remove from a muddy forest preserve the jet engine that failed just before a DC-9 airplane crashed, as relatives of the 31 people killed in the accident made plans for their funerals.

"We will attempt to remove at least one, if not both," of the engines from the crash site, said Rachel Halterman, press director for the National Transportation Safety Board.

Removal of the heavily damaged, 5,000-pound engine was made difficult because it was mired in mud left by thunderstorms Sunday, she said. It was to be taken to a nearby hangar for further inspection.

"We have several investigative groups active here, and that's the activity of one of them," said Jack Drake, who is heading the investigation of the Midwest Express Airlines crash for the NTSB.

The pilot reported an emergency Friday just after taking off from Gen. Billy Mitchell Field, and the plane crashed about a half-mile south of the runway.

NTSB Chairman James Burnett said Sunday that investigators had determined that the jet's right engine was not producing power at the time of the crash, but he said the plane should have been able to fly on one engine.

Metal detector sweeps of the runway turned up 20 compressor blade pieces and 13 other parts from an engine like the DC-9's, Burnett said.

While it was not certain that all the pieces came from the plane, he said.

Self-hypnosis enhances learning, recall ability

By KAREN MEIS
Collegian Reporter

Counting sheep may just be the answer for insomniacs — but very few people consider it to be a form of hypnosis.

In conjunction with "Wellness Week '85," Fred Newton, director of the Counseling Center, on Monday presented "Self-Hypnosis" — a program designed to teach how self-hypnosis works and to dispel some common myths.

"Hypnosis is a word which in itself conjures up a lot of ideas in people's minds," Newton said. "It is also a word with many definitions."

Newton said hypnosis is a state of consciousness, during which time people are at different levels, such as "asleep" and "awake." A high level of concentration of focusing is involved in each state, and physical activity is low. Newton also said hypnosis is a period of high susceptibility to suggestiveness.

"During hypnosis, a person is inwardly focused," Newton said. "He or she thinks internally as opposed to paying attention to what's going on around him or her."

All people experience such a state of mind every day, Newton said. Examples are one's mind drifting while driving or napping, or losing track of time while performing a task.

One reason a person may want to involve himself in self-hypnosis is to enhance his learning and recall ability, Newton said.

"This is true especially in a college setting. Students who can't concentrate can enable themselves to focus on the material being presented."

Creative resolution is another reason for inducing self-hypnosis, Newton said. Many people work on solutions to problems while in such a state, and their creativity is heightened. Other reasons include positive affirmation and self-control, such as trying to lose weight or quit smoking, and attempting to overcome anxiety and stress.

Newton said a person can hypnotize himself four basic ways: through mind attention, imagery, muscle tension and rythmic patterns.

"A person can hypnotize himself simply by listening to Baroque music or the ticking of an alarm clock," Newton said. "And yes, even counting sheep can put someone in a relaxed state of mind."

A person can achieve three levels of hypnotic state: light, medium and deep. In the light stage, a person is relaxed, his muscles are limp and his mental activity is still. The medium stage includes the enhancement of recollections and pain control, and the deep stage includes more involved susceptibility and time disorientation.

Newton said although a person can obtain his hypnotic state level, he is already in one of four categories of alertness. Beta, the working state, involves rapid brain activity. Alpha is an awake but relaxed state, during which the brain waves slow down. Delta is a deep sleep with very little brain activity, and Theta, commonly referred to as the "Twilight Zone," is the state of being in a trance.

Myths concerning hypnosis are often a result of misunderstanding, Newton said. A person undergoing hypnosis is not under someone else's control; rather, he chooses only what he wants to do under the hypnotic state.

"And, as far as a person not coming out of a trance is concerned," Newton said, "if that has ever happened, it was probably a psychotic state. Not hypnotic.

"Going through this state (self-hypnosis) is like everything else you do in life. If you want to be good at it, you have to practice."

tion to sanctions on the grounds that economic penalties would hurt blacks more than anyone else.

Reagan's order would prohibit U.S. banks from lending money to the South African government unless the funds are used to help the disenfranchised black majority as well as whites; ban computer exports to South African military and law enforcement agencies; and block the sale of nuclear technology to South Africa unless it is "necessary for humanitarian reasons to protect health and safety."

Reagan sent U.S. Ambassador Herman Nickel back to Pretoria with a letter that the president said expressed his "grave view of the current crisis and our assessment of what is needed.

"The American people are impatient," Reagan said. "We all feel very strongly about the changes needed."

As a practical matter, most of the steps contained in Reagan's executive order won't have a substantial impact on the South African government or economy, administration officials said.

"There are prohibitions on sales of computers; there are prohibitions on sale of nuclear materials since South Africa has not signed the nuclear nonproliferation treaty," Secretary of State George P. Shultz said.

Another senior administration official, briefing reporters at the White House on condition he not be identified, said banning imports of Krugerrands was the only penalty that marked a genuine change.

Reform can only be retarded by outside attempts to interfere.

"Sanctions cannot solve our problems, he said."

The provisions were essentially the same as those in the bill approved overwhelmingly by the House of Representatives that was up for debate in the Senate on Monday. Reagan said he would veto that legislation if adopted.

Raymond Parsons, chief of the Association of Chambers of Commerce in South Africa, said Reagan's action set an "unfortunate precedent."

Reagan left out a one-year deadline for South Africa to begin dismantling apartheid or face tougher sanctions, and instead ordered a commission to monitor progress toward reform in South Africa.

The black anti-apartheid rioting persisted Monday in seven black townships. The burned body of a black man was found near Port Elizabeth. A black government worker shot to death by a black in a mob stoning his home in rural Queenstown.

Ambassador upholds new U.S. sanction

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The American ambassador returned to South Africa on Tuesday with a "very important message" from President Reagan, and this country's leading business newspaper said the new U.S. economic sanctions show the white-minority regime has "pushed the world too far."

U.S. Ambassador Herman Nickel told reporters at Jan Smuts Airport, "Negotiations have to be seen to be starting. Some of the features of the apartheid system have to be seen to be abolished. I think that is absolutely necessary."

President Reagan withdrew Nickel nearly three months ago.

Under apartheid, South Africa's legal system of segregation, 5 million whites rule 24 million voteless blacks.

A year of anti-apartheid violence has killed a reported 700 people, most of them black.

Nickel said Reagan had given him "a very important message" to deliver to South African President P.W. Botha, but he would not say what it was.

The ambassador returned a day after Reagan announced limited economic sanctions against South Africa.

Business Day, an influential financial daily, said Reagan's economic sanctions were "more economically inconvenient than terminal."

But it added, "The most powerful leader in the Western world is giving South Africa a clear and unequivocal political message: reform must continue at a pace acceptable to the Western allies whether Pretoria likes it or not."

Anti-apartheid groups attacked the sanctions as cosmetic and inadequate.

Foreign Ministers from the 10 European Common Market countries, meeting in Luxembourg, denounced apartheid and nine of the 10 member countries agreed to a package of mildly punitive measures.

President Botha told students at the Rand Afrikaans University Tuesday that South Africa was committed to reform "within a framework of order, peace, safety and progress," based on Christian values.

"But nowhere does Christ teach me to commit suicide for the sake of my neighbor," Botha said.

Police reported isolated riot incidents in a dozen townships late Monday and through the day Tuesday, with 99 blacks arrested in cases of stoning and arson.

Apartheid is an Afrikaans term meaning "aparthood," and denotes the policy of racial segregation practiced by the National Party in South Africa since 1948. Officially it is a policy of "seperate but equal development" and involves legislation controling places of residence, schools, universities and recreational facilities.

Student loan defaults increase, study shows

From Staff and Wire Reports

Government payments on defaulted student loans will jump 45 percent this year, to more than $1 billion. And analysts predict "staggering" increases by 1990.

In a study released by Education Secretary William Bennett, the default rate is predicted to increase from 10.7 percent to 11.7 percent during fiscal year 1985 ending September 30.

If current trends hold, the default rate will reach 13.6 percent by 1990 when the Guaranteed Student Loan Program's debt would be nearly four times the $3.2 billion accumulated by the end of the 1984 fiscal year, Bennett said.

A guaranteed student loan is a low-interest loan made to a student by a lender such as a bank, credit union or savings and loan association to help the student pay for post-secondary education. The current interest rate for guaranteed loans is 8 percent.

During the 1984-85 school year, 35 percent of K-State students received a guaranteed student loan, for a total of more than $15 million, said Robert Evans, director of Student Financial Assistance.

To be eligible for a guaranteed student loan, a student must meet several criteria: carry at least a half-time academic load; be in good academic standing and making reasonable academic progress; be a U.S. citizen, national or permanent resident; not have previously defaulted on a student loan; and have a total family income of $30,000 or less or demonstrate financial need if the total family income is over $30,000, Evans said.

All guaranteed student loans in Kansas are guaranteed by the Higher Education Assistance Foundation. HEAF is a private, non-profit corporation established to guarantee loans made by commercial lending institutions.

"Roughly 10 percent of Kansas students who receive a GSL will default; of that 10 percent, we (HEAF) will collect 60 percent," said Dyce Bonham, regional director of HEAF.

A loan is considered in default when the maturity of the loan is accelerated, Bonham said. For example, if a loan is 90 days past due, the banker writes a letter to the person who has the loan, calling for immediate repayment of the entire loan in 30 days. If after 120 days no payment is made, then the loan is considered in default.

In January 1985, HEAF filed 48 lawsuits for judgments on defaulted loans. In all 48 cases HEAF received a judgment, which is a mortgage against property.

"When we get a judgment, we then go to the county office of the person who has defaulted and file that judgment. That judgment then clouds any real estate that person may try to get," Bonham said.

"In nine out of 10 cases, we institute garnishment action, usually within a week after judgment. By law, up to 30 percent of a person's pay may be garnished."

At this time the Office of Education is pushing Congress to authorize the Internal Revenue Service to hold back tax refunds of defaulters.

"We go after them through all possible legal channels, and usually we get our money," Bonham said.

Senate leaders not pleased by cut in coliseum seating

By LEANNE STOWE
Staff Writer

Student leaders who attended Friday's closed-door coliseum meeting say they were not pleased about the decrease in seating for the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

"I was not really excited about the decrease of 2,500," said Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and student body president. "I wanted 16,000 seats. Naturally, there were some for and against (the changes)."

Brown said he and the other student representatives on the Program Committee for the Coliseum were asked how they felt about the changes but they didn't have much of a choice. Mark Jones, senior in management and chairman of student senate and Mark Galyardt, senior in industrial engineering and student senate finance committee chairman, are the other representatives on the committee.

"Everybody (at the meeting) was depressed. We didn't want to feel like we'd been led down Primrose Path," Galyardt said. "It was kind of a Catch-22 — what can we do? — we are locked into this $16.1 million by the legislation.

"Nobody was pleased. We wanted a quality coliseum, we wanted to be happy, we wanted something to be proud of," he said.

Galyardt said the fact that bids came in so high left the committee with few ways out.

"The funny thing about the whole thing is that the independent contractors who estimated the project did not turn in bids," Galyardt said.

Brown said he was concerned the coliseum might lack in quality, but was assured that it wouldn't.

"I was concerned that it might be a box or a hole in the ground but it is going to be a quality building," he said.

Wolf Creek investers may lose money

Regulators issue a warning

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — In their first public discussions of the case, state utility regulators on Tuesday talked seriously about denying the three utility owners of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant half of their investments in the $3.05 billion facility.

At an administrative meeting of the Kansas Corporation Commission, Chairman Micheal Lennen said he is leaning toward a decision in the rate case which would deny the utilities up to 60 percent of their investment or "a figure approaching $1 billion or $1.5 billion."

That would reduce to $1.55 billion the amount of Wolf Creek costs to be charged to the 460,000 Kansas ratepayers served by the three utilities.

With words of agreement sounded by Commissioners Keith Henley and Margalee Wright, Lennen unveiled a rough outline that calls for penalizing Kansas Gas and Electric Co. of Wichita, Kansas City Power & Light Co. and the Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. of Topeka for failing to control costs.

The final decision is far from being reached, however. By law, the comion must hammer out its order and sign it by Sept. 30. Without any action, the utilities' requests will automatically take effect.

The discussion centers on the utilities' requests to charge their 460,000 customers some $508.9 million in higher rates to pay for Wolf Creek, located 60 miles south of Topeka. The meetings follow three months of testimony and mountains of evidence and legal briefs in the case.

Although Lennen said the companies were justified in wanting to diversify its fuel supply and build a power plant, he said it was obvious they were in over their heads in constructing a nuclear power plant. And he criticized KG&E, the lead partner, for its poor oversight in the early stages of the project.

"The companies seemed to be performing reasonably well early, but there were inherent problems with early decisions that did not manifest themselves right away," Lennen said. "The owners did not define well enough the scope of the project and did not understand the magnitude and complexity of the project. And (KG&E's) monitoring of the project was not appropriate."

Lennen said he saw no alternative to the "cost-plus" contract signed by the utilities with the Daniel International Corp., the main contractor which built Wolf Creek which meant unavoided overruns were automatically charged to the utilities.

Experts consider test invalid for teachers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Four portions of a test selected for use as Kansas' teacher certification examination should not be used when testing begins next year, according to report presented to the State Board of Education Tuesday.

The tests were mandated by the 1984 Kansas Legislature for all graduates of teacher training programs who want to be certified to teach in Kansas after May 1, 1986. The board has selected the National Teachers Examination Core Battery as the precertification test.

However, John Poggio, director of the Center for Educational Testing and Evaluation at the University of Kansas, said Tuesday that portions of the test relating to listening, social studies, literature and fine arts would not be valid to measure skills of prospective teachers in the state.

Poggio said his study of the six-hour NTE tests included assessments of whether sections actually measure what a education graduate knows, whether questions relate to a teacher's job and whether education students are taught subjects included on the tests.

"We are unaware of any state that has undertaken the range of studies that we have here in Kansas," Poggio said.

The listening portion of the test is included in a two-hour section designed to measure communications skills, Poggio said. In a recommendation that the portion not be used, Poggio said some questions in the listening subsection were judged to not relevant while others showed poor content or validity.

Poggio recommended the board use only the mathematics portion of another two-hour section on general knowledge. The recommendation called for eliminating the use of the social studies, literature and fine arts portions of the general knowledge test because "deficiencies" in the subtests had an impact on the validity of overall test scores.

The recommendation also called for certain questions to be thrown out in a final section on professional knowledge.

Alaska-Kansas telephone link benefits students

By SUSAN BAIRD
Collegian Reporter

High school students in states as far away as Alaska and Texas may now pursue honors course work in Kansas via the telephone.

This fall 50 high school students from 12 towns in Alaska will be joining Kansas students through TELEbridge for TELENET's science high school honors program.

TELEbridge is a mechanical device owned by the Kansas Board of Regents Network. It links TELENET or individuals together through phone lines.

TELENET is a two-way telecommunications system used for adult and high school instruction in 35 Kansas cities. The students listen to instructors over a public address speaker and communicate with instructors through a microphone.

"The TELENET is like an enormous party line across the state. We have leased (telephone) lines that are open (24 hours)," said Janet Kruh, director of the Kansas Regents Network. "Any time anyone wants to plug into that (telephone), they can talk to anybody so long as there's somebody there to listen and their equipment is plugged in.

"We have fairly good coverage of the state right now. The way that we're supplementing our private line network is with (TELEbridge)," she said.

While only people in Kansas can use TELENET, anyone in the world who has a telephone can use TELEbridge. The unit has 24 phone lines connected to it and can be used with TELENET or separately.

With TELENET, a person can either call the bridge on one of the phone numbers or have the bridge operator call him, Kruh said. The operator then dials the telephone number of the TELENET program and connects the individual to TELENET. In this way conferences and guest speakers from around the Leader fights against protectionism

WASHINGTON — Prime Minister Poul Schluter of Denmark appealed to President Reagan Tuesday to resist the protectionist fever spreading through Congress, and the president reaffirmed his commitment to free trade.

"At a time when our countries are enjoying improving economic conditions, protectionism looms as a threat," Reagan said at an outdoor arrival ceremony on the South Lawn.

"Working together we can see to it that our international markets stay open," he pledged.

Schluter, beginning two days of talks with administration and congressional officials, urged Reagan to stick to his reputation as a free trader.

"Protectionism is indeed, as you have said, destructionism," he declared.

Reagan said he looked forward to discussing with Schluter "the need to strengthen and broaden the international trading system," perhaps through a new round of trade talks.

As for the upcoming summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, Schluter expressed hope that it would lead to "the beginning of a new constructive East-West relationship of benefit to the United States, the Soviet Union, the alliance and the world."

Britain builds luxurious warship

PORTSMOUTH, England — Britain has built a warship for Bahrain that has an oval bed, sunken bath with 22-karat-gold taps, a Danish stereo system piping music throughout, and a television that rises from the cabin floor.

The 100-foot vessel is a fast patrol boat built for Bahrain's navy by Souters of Cowes on the Isle of Wight at a cost of $2.2 million. It is armed with a 20-mm gun and anti-aircraft iles.

The bridge roof is lined with gray suede, public rooms have cream leather seats and blue carpets, and there is West German furniture and kitchen equipment. Bathrooms are lined with royal blue marble and the toilet bowls are of smoked glass.

Ferraro's book in second printing

WASHINGTON — Geraldine Ferraro's book, "Ferraro: My Story," isn't even in bookstores yet, but it has entered its second printing and has been designated a Book of the Month selection.

Stuart Applebaum, vice president and director of publicity at Bantam Books Inc., said 200,000 copies of the book were being printed for shipment next month.

He said the former New York congresswoman had focused her book on last year, when she was the Democratic vice presidential candidate. The book is co-written by Linda Bird Francke.

Actress talks on love for animals

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Former "Gunsmoke" co-star Amanda Blake says her love of animals and conservation began when she was a child, and caused her a problem because she fretted about every endangered animal.

"I had to change my thinking. It was totally impossible for me to save everything in the world," she said.

Blake is among 1,400 delegates to the annual Conference of the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums meeting here this week. Among other things, the meeting gave Blake a chance to see some of the cheetahs she raised in Arizona.

Koch takes step toward third term

NEW YORK — Mayor Edward I. Koch scored an overwhelming victory Tuesday night in a Democratic primary race, taking a major step toward a third term as mayor of a city he took over in the throes of the 1970s fiscal crisis.

With 89 percent of the precincts reporting, Koch had 387,039 votes, or 65 percent, to 109,130 votes, or 18 percent, for City Council President Carol Bellamy and 75,821 votes, or 13 percent, for Assemblyman Herman Farrell Jr.

A primary victory almost surely means a win in November's general election, since Democrats outnumber Republicans 2.1 million to 400,000 in the city.

Koch, 61, won convincingly in all five boroughs, but did poorest in Manhattan, where he received 54 percent of the vote. His strongest borough was Staten Island, where he took 79 percent.

Parents protest decision on AIDS

NEW YORK — Pickets by the hundreds returned to at least eight city elementary schools Tuesday, where parents mounted a boycott over a decision to let a child with AIDS attend a school somewhere in the city.

Figures were not available early in the day, but at one boycotted school, Public School 90 in the borough of Queens, attendance rose from 50 percent Monday, the first day of classes, to 75 percent , according to Principal Kenneth Grover. The school's enrollment is 700.

"There was some picketing but no problems," said Grover. "It's very quiet and we think it will stay that way."

Outside, about 10 women, two men and three children walked under umbrellas, occasionaly chanting, "Keep AIDS out."

There are 52 elementary schools in the two protesting Queens districts, and 622 citywide.

About 12,000 of 47,000 elementary and junior high school students in the two districts were absent Monday, according to the Board of Education. Parents picketed several schools.

Police arrest man in infant case

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — An 18-year-old man was arrested Tuesday in connection with the case of a week-old infant abandoned early Monday at a construction site, authorities said.

The arrest was reported by Kansas City, Kan., police in a news release Tuesday night. No other details about the arrest or the suspect were made by authorities. A Wyandotte County judge on Tuesday granted temporary custody of the infant to the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

The unidentified child was listed in fair condition at Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City, Mo., where she was brought by an unknown couple around 1 a.m. Monday. Police have not identified the child's parents.

Wichita firm to make shuttle part

WICHITA — Gates Learjet Corp. announced Tuesday it has been awarded a $14 million contract to build parts for the space shuttle's propulsion system.

The three-year contract is with the Martin Marietta Co. and the first delivery is scheduled for February 1987.

In other state business news Tuesday, Pawnee Industries Inc., a Wichita plastics company, has purchased Pako Plastics, a division of the Pako Corp. of Minneapolis, Minn, a Pawnee spokesman said. Burton C. Person, Pawnee's chairman, said the purchase price was $1.4 million.

Reagan's second term may differ from first

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan looked 10 feet tall when he began his second term nine months ago, yet now he is scrambling to regain the initiative from a newly aggressive Congress.

It's quite a reversal from his first term, when Reagan steamrolled congressional opponents in repeated confrontations over taxes and the budget.

As he began his second term, the president and his allies were confident he'd set the agenda for the next four years and solidify his "Second American Revolution."

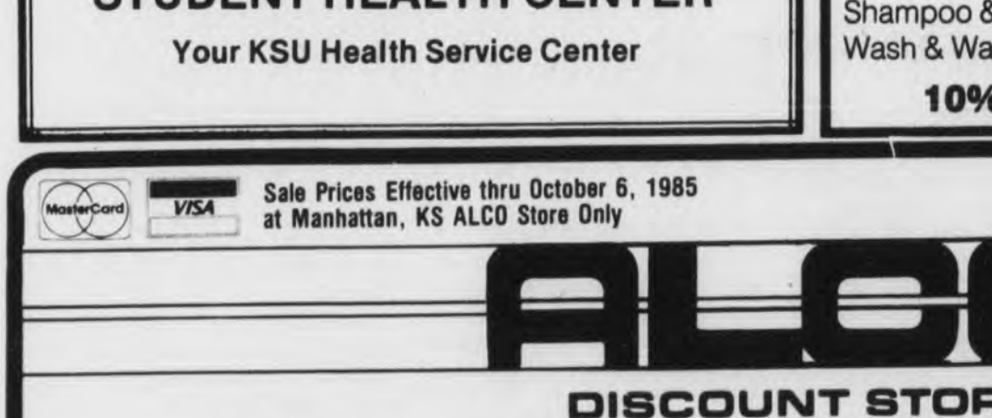
It hasn't worked out that way. Suddenly, Congress is setting the agenda and Reagan is forced to react to initiatives from Capitol Hill.

First on trade and then on South Africa, the president was forced in recent days to backpedal in an effort to head off embarrassing votes.

And he's hearing tough talk from within his own party about the prospects for tax reform and the need to change his position on farm legislation.

The dramatic shift in mood may be only temporary or it could be that Reagan is proving as vulnerable as most of his predecessors to the second-term blues.

At this point, it is clear that Reagan announced sanctions against South Africa on Monday only because he knew that Congress would move ahead without him and with stronger action if he didn't head them off. He had said repeatedly that he opposed sanctions, that he felt the best way to get the South African government to moderate apartheid was through quiet pressure.



Democrats still are fighting to force a vote on sanctions.

Violence continues in Birmingham

Crowd attacks law enforcement chief

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, England — An angry crowd attacked Britain's law enforcement minister on Tuesday when he visited the scene of overnight rioting and arson that left two people dead in the country's second-largest city.

The violence started Monday night in a confrontation between blacks and a policeman and ended with 50 shops gutted by fire.

It was the worst rioting to hit Britain since 1981, when racial violence raged for two days in parts of London, Liverpool and Manchester in the greatest breakdown of law and order in this century.

Home Secretary Douglas Hurd visited the rundown district of Handsworth on Tuesday afternoon to view the destruction and quickly drew a crowd, mostly of black youths, who jeered him.

As Hurd said "I'm here to listen," bricks and bottles sailed out of the crowd.

Hurd was hurried into a police van which drove him away unhurt, and the crowd pelted two police vans in a service station with stones.

One van drove away, but the crowd overturned the second and set it ablaze, sending a new pall of smoke over a neighborhood still smoldering from fires in some 50 shops.

Police said they found two bodies in a burned-out post office on Lozells Road in the rundown Handsworth district.

They did not immediately identify the victims, and they said two other people were missing.

Police said they had arrested 25 blacks on charges of looting.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said she was "absolutely appalled" at the destruction and loss of life, and urged police and community leaders to work together to prevent further trouble.

Police and most politicians said there was no racial aspect to the flareup, but blacks complained of police harassment, saying they were the targets of repeated drug raids.

The violence began Monday when a crowd attacked a motorcycle police officer who stopped a driver to check whether the car was stolen, police said. The officer, one of 25 injured Monday night, suffered a broken nose.

Three hours later, six firefighters were hurt after they went to a blaze at a derelict bingo hall and were pelted by stones, police said.

The rioting mushroomed as gangs of youths, mostly of Caribbean descent, looted and firebombed shops owned by Indians and Pakistanis.

Geoffrey Dear, the West Midland chief constable, said those who rioted Tuesday were the same "looters and rioters" who burned a large stretch of Handsworth Monday night.

Well-balanced meals, constant exercise plan help maintain weight

By The Collegian Staff

The keys to losing weight and keeping it off are a well-balanced diet and a good exercise program.

Kathy Grunewald, associate professor of foods and nutrition, emphasized diet and exercise in her presentation, "Popular Reducing Diets," for Wellness Week '85 Tuesday in Union 212.

In order to provide accurate information to the public on the various weight loss programs, Grunewald researched and participated in many of the popular diet organizations. The three top reducing programs Grunewald suggests are Weight Watchers, Overeaters Anonymous and TOPS (Take Off Pounds Sensibly).

All three programs are structured on sensible weight loss, with no use of pills or powders. Planned meals and group support meetings are the features of the groups, she said. The main reason Grunewald recommends the three programs is because the diets are nutritionally acceptable and weight loss is maintained in most cases.

Grunewald discussed other popular diet organizations, Herbalife, NutriSystem and the Diet Center. She said these three were inadequate because of expense, limited caloric intake and the use of diet supplements or exclusive foods.

Grunewald gave several suggestions for sensible weight loss and how to maintain the desired weight.

"A good diet should not be less than 1,200 calories," she said. "If (the caloric intake) is less than that, the odds are that you are going to feel so deprived you are going to want to pig out on everything in sight."

She also suggested a constant exercise routine, a diet low in fat and drinking plenty of water.

"Lots of times when you feel hungry, you're not really hungry but thirsty," Grunewald said.

Active chapters of Weight Watchers, Overeaters Anonymous and TOPS are available in Manhattan, as well as weight control groups at Lafene Student Health Center.

Grunewald has compiled her research about diet organizations into a slide presentation which is available for interested groups through the Extension Office of Foods and Nutrition in Justin Hall.

Ordeal on motorboat ends for women

By The Associated Press

PALO ALTO, Calif. — A motorboat ride in the Indian Ocean turned into a 21-day ordeal for two women who were reduced to "happy hour" meals of toothpaste and rainwater after their food ran out.

The women, Judith Gale Schwartz and Rickey Berkowitz, were back on more substantial diets in a private home in Jakarta, Indonesia, on Tuesday.

"They're eating hamburgers and milkshakes," said Schwartz's sister, Wendy Fein, who talked to the women by telephone from Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif.

"They were supposed to be on a bland diet. It doesn't sound that bland to me," said Fein, who added that beer was also part of the fare.

The two women had left Carita on Aug. 17 for what they thought would be a "romantic" boat ride with two guides to a camping site at Unjung Kulon on the island of Java, a trip that was to take five to 10 hours. But the boat's 25-horsepower engine broke down and the foursome was left to drift.

The women reached safety on Sunday, four days after Indonesian authorities had called off the search.

The women suffered sunburn and dehydration, but were otherwise in good shape. The guides were ill, according to Fein.

Schwartz's mother, Ruth, returned to California on Saturday, thinking that authorities had "exhausted all possibilities." The family was told that no one could survive three weeks on a boat in the Indian Ocean.

Schwartz, a special eduction teacher who lives in Palo Alto, and Berkowitz, a hospital administrator in Rancho Palos Verdes, finally reached land when the 25-foot boat broke up Sunday.

Police accuse car owner of abandonment

DOUGLAS SCHMIDT
Guest Columnist

A funny thing happened over summer vacation. I had taken two weeks leave of the Little Apple to visit my folks in the Big Apple, New York. And when I returned to good old Manhattan, Kan., I found my faithful automobile missing.

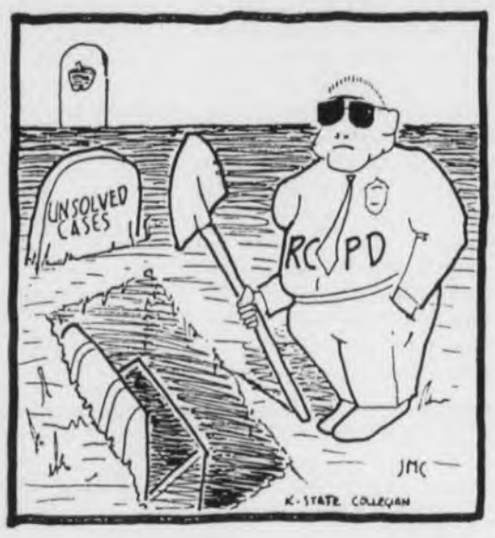
A quick call to the Riley County Police Department established that my car had been found abandoned at the Tuttle Creek tubes and towed away in my absence.

A rather uninspired officer arrived at my home to fill out the necessary stolen car report, and two hours later my car and I were reunited at the wrecker lot. Sounds simple, but the question still remains: who done it?

The day after recovering my car I received two seemingly innocuous calls from a detective urging me to come by and discuss this report with him. That day just happened to be "dress up" day at the office. I was decked out in a shirt from the Star Trek Mr. Spock collection and a bright dangling ear cuff. I had spiked my hair to make it stand straight up, and topped it off with a bright red streak down the middle.

With some trepidation I went, convincing myself that I might be able to give these fellows some leads. Besides, I wasn't the one in trouble with the law.

I discovered two rules about cops: 1) They are not funny, and 2) they don't think you are funny either. They led me to a small room and one minute into the conversation read me my rights.



Imagine my surprise. I dispensed with the lawyer as the detective assured me we could work this all out.

Not getting an attorney was a bad move. Cops know exactly what they are doing, and you don't — no matter how many TV shows you've seen.

I had to have the detective read my rights twice as I missed a good portion of it the first time through. Which brings up another rule about cops — don't make them angry; they've got guns.

The first reaction of an innocent person to false accusation is sheer indignation and rejection of the insult. Unfortunately this is the same ruse used by guilty people.

We went 'round and 'round for a good 45 minutes before I figured out what they were up to. They were absolutely convinced that I had abandoned my car and falsely reported it stolen.
